"That's My Corn"

What a Confession!

Something has taken place. There's a flash of pain, and the victim says, "That's my corn."

"My corn, pared and coddled for years, perhaps. It's as needless as a fifth finger.

A Blue-jay plaster, applied in a jiffy, would end that pain instantly. And the B & B wax that's in it would terminate the corn in two days.

No pain, no soreness, no inconvenience. The corn loosens and comes out. It disappears forever.

It's hard to prevent corns while having dainty feet. But it isn't hard to end them. A million corns a month are ended in this easy Blue-jay way. You do yourself injustice when you suffer from a corn.

Half your friends have proved this.

the good road in the national work of distribution of products. The people, to a greater extent each year, are realizing the possible possibilities for development through the extension of better roads throughout the Dominion. When they become finally convinced that good roads are complements of the through railway lines, there will be an epidemic of road construction, and the hopes of economists who have been pleading with Canada for increase production will be advanced a long way towards realization.

The province of Ontario through its Northern Development Branch has demonstrated in a striking manner the beneficient effect of better roads upon agricultural districts. Commissioner Whitson, who has supervised for three years the road-building activities of the region in New Ontario, in addressing his report to Premier Hearst says:

"When inspecting the different districts along the roads which have been constructed during the last three years I find that great progress is being made by the settlers; along these roads, nearly all the vacant land suitable for cultivation has been taken up and improved. In the valley of the Rainy River exceptional progress has taken place; the settlers are now able to reach markets along the Canadian Northern Railway, which three years ago was impassable for settlers' effects. Heretofore where no roads were constructed, the settler was merely marking time; since the construction of roads, he has taken courage, and is now clearing up large areas of land, and in other ways improving his social condition. This will apply to almost all the sections where good roads have been constructed. It has encouraged the settlers to build better houses and has made it possible for the children to attend them. This in itself has done much to stimulate settlement, as in the past the want of schools and their inaccessibility for lack of roads, I have found to be one of the great obstacles in the way of settlement."

Since 1912 the Northern Development Branch have been engaged upon the construction of 1,705 miles of roadway, chiefly in the great clay belt and in the Rainy River District. At the height of last season from 4500 to 5000 men were employed. There were under construction 708 miles of road, of which 256 were new—cut out of the forest. Grading operations were proceeded with upon 296 miles; 108 were surfaced with gravel or crushed rock; 214 were partly graded, or improved by cutting down hills, and by ditching. Forty bridges were constructed. Three experimental farm plots were established at suitable locations. Last year's work involved an outlay of $402,193.10. Since 1912 the expenditure by the Branch in this development has been $2,076,833.27.

This constructive programme is the result of a recognition of the true relation between the long and the short haul in our transportation work. The chief markets in Canada are widely separated and the through railway lines are as absolute necessity to general development. But, as Commissioner Whitson points out, the highway stretching from the gate of the farm to the nearest railway station, has a distinctly encouraging effect upon agricultural production. While the good road may be regarded as a free gift by the community to the individual farmer, the cost of it is usually more than repaid in the expenditure of the extra wealth earned by the farmer as one result of its construction. The farmer is a large consumer of the manufacturers which do much to maintain cities. The last Dominion Census gave a list of products totalling in value approximately $1,000,000,000. If only found their market almost entirely in the rural districts, and they do but a small proportion of this power used by the farmers throughout the country. The Ontario Government appears to be determined to adopt a general logical plan for the development of the rich new regions of the province. As the country spring up along the Canadian Northern and the National Transcontinental Railways the settlers will be given the opportunity guarantee their continued growth and ultimate prosperity.

THAW ARGUMENT THURSDAY

Motion for a Jury Trial on His Sanity Will be Decided

NEW YORK, April 14.—After a short conference with counsel yesterday Supreme Court Justice Newburgar fixed Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock as the time to hear arguments in connection with Harry K. Thaw's efforts to obtain a jury trial of his sanity in this country. The motion which directs the Attorney General to show cause why Thaw should not be granted a jury trial was made by John B. Stanchfield, of counsel for Thaw, before he filed application for a writ of habeas corpus in which the power of Sheriff Grifenhagen to hold Thaw on the old Dowling commitment to Matteawan was questioned.

It is alleged by Thaw's counsel that the Dowling commitment is insufficient in relation to the present status of Thaw as a person extradited from another State on a charge of which he was found guiltless by a jury.

It is expected that the Appellate Division will hand down its decision in regard to Thaw's demand that he be given reasonable time to return to the State of New Hampshire from which he was extradited for conspiracy.

Thaw was taken to court yesterday by Warden Hanley of the Tombs. Sheriff Grifenhagen was asked if he objected to permit Thaw to exercise outside the Tombs and shook his head.

"Except when Harry K. Thaw leaves the Tombs in compliance with a court order he will remain within its walls," said the Sheriff.

ST. LOUIS HAS SENSATION

ST. LOUIS, April 13.—August H. Frederick, who lost Tuesday was elected president of the St. Louis Board of Aldermen in a position in which he would share with the mayor and the city comptroller the responsibility of drafting the annual city budget—today was elected for four years in the New Orleans.

Mr. Frederick was the Republican nominee for president of the Board of Aldermen at the first election under the new city charter last Tuesday. He went in on the Republican landslide by 22,000 majority, though his plurality was 18,000 below the high mark of the Republican ticket. In a formal statement last night he said he would resign.

Frederick, who was technically arrested last night at the direction of the circuit attorney, was formally taken in charge on a bench warrant today. He made arrangements for a $10,000 bond. The minimum penalty for forgery in first degree is ten years' imprisonment.

Madness in German Army

An Alarming Increase is Reported Since December

LONDON, April 14.—A despatch from Lausanne, Switzerland, dated April 8, says that according to the Suisse Nationale, Professor Gaupp, a nerve specialist of Tubingan, has been drawing attention to an alarming increase of madness in the German army.

At the commencement of the war, he says, the state of nerves of the troops was better than could have been hoped for, but even then numerous cases of over-excitement could be observed, manifesting themselves in the shape of insomnia and a tendency to abnormal intoxication. Since then, and especially since the French offensive of the middle of December, a very large number of gaps have been caused by nervous and mental affections, morbid excitement and nervous provocation. These breakdowns occur among the unwounded, the explosion of a bomb or the fate of a comrade being sufficient to produce them.

The acute symptoms of these affections, paralysis, convulsions, loss of speech, delirium, or hallucinations often disappear under careful hospital treatment, but in most cases reappear on the return of the men to the front. The suggestion even of a return to the front has often been sufficient to send men mad.

Fifteen Per Cent. Gain in Crop Area

Wheat Acreage Increased at Every Point Throughout Saskatchewan

REGINA, April 14.—The weather has been extremely mild throughout Saskatchewan during the past week. Seeding is general. Reports from 180 representative points in Saskatchewan show the wheat acreage increased at every point. Taking the province as a whole the crop area will be at least 15% per cent. larger than in 1914.

In thirteen out of the 190 districts a decrease in area is reported, leaving a net increase in that crop of five per cent. There will be a big decrease in flax, the acreage being 25 per cent. smaller.

Supply of seed grain has been adequate.

The most favorable feature in the prevailing outlook in districts burned out last season. They have had an abundance of moisture, their areas being deep seeded, and the land is coming into the ground under favorable auspices.

Around Regina, where the land is especially good for moisture, an abundance of precipitation will be needed after the crops are sown. There has been no precipitation of any account since last July.

JOHN BARLEYCORN FILM FOR W.C.T.U.

Novel Means Being Employed by Organization to Raise Money For Carrying on Work

MONTREAL, April 14.—"John Barleycorn," the film of Jack London, is to be shown in moving pictures in Montreal for the purpose in two-fold and its object, sorth. In the first place it is for the benefit of the W.C.T.U. home, which was recently opened under the auspices of this organization, and secondly, for the furthering of the cause of temperance. The film will first be shown at the Strand Theatre on April 25 for a run of four nights and then for a further three weeks in other theatres of the city.

Mrs. F. H. Wallbott, the leader of the organization and the present movement, stated yesterday that in showing the film they were convinced that in addition to its intensely interesting and exciting film, it is one of the strongest kind of temperance lessons.

The picture depicts how Jack London, world famous as a writer, only raised himself to fame after contemplating the "Demon Rum," with which he had been associated since his early youth.

Mrs. Wallbott further stated that the organization was starting on a campaign to raise funds, and that all they were assured that all the community would co-operate with them.

Niobe Near When Eitel Made Port

Refinds in Figuring on all Interned German Shipping as Peace Price

HALIFAX, N.S., April 14.—The report that H.M.S. Niobe was off the Virginia Capes when the Prinz Eitel Frederich made her dash for Newport News, and that she did nothing to stop her, is generally accepted as true in Halifax, the home port of the cruiser.

It is pointed out by authorities here that the Eitel Frederich had prize-crewmen on board, and that the lives of the great majority of these would have been sacrified if the Canadian cruiser had opened fire.

With the Eitel Frederich, and probably the Kronprinz Wilhelm, interned in Newport News, however, British shipping is safe, and besides the possibility exists, it is argued, that Germany's interned shipping may be claimed by Britain at the end of the war as one of the conditions of peace.

Apparently a man never gets to be so old that he ceases to be surprised when women's fashions change.

Edison to Lessen Submarine Risk

New Storage Battery Eliminates Danger of Chlorine Poisoning

NEW YORK, April 14.—It was announced today, on behalf of Thomas A Edison that a new form of storage battery is being made for the United States submarine L8, under construction at the Portsmouth, N.H. navy yard, which will do away entirely with the chief danger now existing in the operation of submarines—the danger of the crew from chlorine poisoning. Other improvements are claimed for the new battery, among them being the lengthening of the vessel's underwater cruising radius to 150 miles.

It is claimed that in addition to eliminating the peril of chlorine poisoning the submarine could remain submerged for 100 days without danger of asphyxiation to the crew.

Miller Reese Hutchison, chief engineer at the Edison plant in Orange, N.J., who made the announcement, said that the danger of chlorine poisoning was eliminated by the substitution of a potash solution for sulphuric acid which is used at present in the batteries. The potash, he said, would purify the air in the submerged vessel, absorbing the carbonic gas exhaled from the lungs. The lead lining of the hard rubber battery case Mr. Hutchison said also will be dispensed with. The only metals in the new batteries will be nickel and iron, the batteries have been tested for two years, it was said.

Continue Hull Justice Triumphs

This is Canada's Message to Canadian Club in New York Says K. W. Rowell

NEW YORK, April 14.—Speaking at the Canadian Club dinner in New York last night, Mr. Justice Hull of the Opposition in the Ontario Legislature, in his address contrasted the relations between the Empire existing between Great Britain and Germany. "The Germans believe that feebleness is the one great sin of a State," said Mr. Rowell, "and the Anglo-Saxons believe that the function of the state is to improve the conditions of the people to help them to a better being, and for whom it acts. While the Prussian conception is war, one is peace. While I do not misunderstand Germany's power in war and the loyalty of its people, I feel that we have inherited from Great Britain liberty as a part of the Empire. That loyalty love and truth, will do their share to maintain the liberty. So I bring to you a message from Canada—that Canada is strong to stand for justice and liberty triumphs, not only for ourselves but for all Europe as well."

ALBERTA UNIVERSITY OFFERS A HOSPITAL

This offer was wired to Colonel Cruickshank, as military commanding officer for the district, and he will communicate it to the proper quarter. It is expected that a reply will be received to-morrow.

U. S. Now Sees Canada as a Rival

Cleveland Fears Canadian Lake Vessels to Start Into Ocean Traffic

CLEVELAND, April 14.—Opportunity for an American monopoly of shipping between ports in the United States and South America is threatened by Canadians, who now operate more than half the ships plying on the Great Lakes.

Canadian vessel owners, anticipating a long period of business depression in the Dominion as a result of the war, declare they will send fifty ships through the Welland Canal, equip them for ocean traffic and go after the South American trade.

At the present time there are on the lakes over 100 Canadian vessels, each of 2,200 tons capacity, which is small enough to pass through the Welland Canal and large enough for ocean traffic. Of the Great Lakes vessels owned in the United States there are about twenty-five of the same size.

Many of these Canadian boats will be sent through the canal, down the St. Lawrence and to the coast.

EXONERATES JUDGE LINDSEY

Denver Grand Jury Indicts One of His Accusers

DENVER, April 14.—Judge Ben B. Lindsey of the Denver Juvenile Court was exonerated of all charges of misconduct in a report of the County Grand Jury, filed late yesterday. Frank E. Rose was indicted on a charge of criminal libel in connection with affidavits reflecting upon the character of Judge Lindsey.

Gov. George A Carlson announced at noon that he would veto the bill designed to transfer the authority and duties of the Juvenile Court to the District Court of Denver County.

The Governor stated in his veto message would take the position that the electors of Denver have ample means of objecting to Judge Ben B. Lindsey through the recall and that it is a local matter in which the State has no concern.

KNOTTY PROBLEMS FOR ARMY SURGEONS

Difficulties of Treating Wounds When They Have Never Been Before

What 45,000 men will be the special problems of surgeons in the European war in the present conflict, asked a surgeon with medical corps experience, is answered by Canadians, who now operate more than half the ships plying on the Great Lakes.

"You might just as well ask me what the doctors will do when they get to a city if a hundred or more gunmen should begin shooting machine guns over their heads in the streets at a crowded hour. There would be no one to answer but the doctors and the task of the physician and his surgeon would be like the whole army from the soldiers to the hospital corps.

This does not answer your question, I know, but it is the nearest I can come to it at present. Surgeons of the war ahead of the surgeon upon the battlefields of Europe today. You just think of it, there are gigantic armies engaging themselves with all the deadly implements of high civilized soldiers with every kind of weapon of destruction operating in the opposing trenches. These of necessity must produce wounds unlike any that allied and wounded, and the injured often problems to the medical men that none of their kind have ever been before.

Treating those injuries is vastly different from treating bullet injuries in the casualty wards of a city or military camp in times of peace. The pistol headed leaden bullet has its regulated "human" projectile, the modern rifle with its nickel jacketed bullet filled with lead and flattened with a long tapering point. This is the accepted "human" projectile of modern warfare, and it is undoubtedly true that the bullet making under some circumstances a smaller wound and a cleaner one—the proof is in piercing a man through and through without producing the explosive or shattering effect of the heavier nosed leaden affair of other days.

A Tumbling Bullet

While since limited it is naturally to be expected, because the slimmer shaped bullet can travel with a much higher velocity, makes its way through the body substance with less difficulty and accomplishes a far greater area of injury when sweeping on upon a straight line. It is asserted that this same bullet projectile can act in a thoroughly erratic manner.

But there is the probability of gravest and most desperate wounds from this "new" projectile of the "advance" on the part of the injured, inside the "human" flesh. For instance, the new military idea means the pushing of the bullet which has short axis instead of rotating upon its long axis and holding its point steadily foremost.

You can see that this means in the case of the present longer projectile, a new means of failing to tumble it presents a larger mass when striking, as it does in its path and instead of piercing the body with a needle, it enters and tears its way through, and the result, the fashion of a whirling wheel.

But while this new covered tapered projectile can do an enormous amount of damage, the doctor explains, that it can also get a man out of action quickly and yet make his wound such that he will recover. "For instance, while this bullet will bore its way clearly through the human body and in the higher velocities just like a drill, and there will be no promptly attended to by the soldier himself, the wound will heal and will give but little subsequent trouble from a standpoint of disease."

Modern First Aid

Every fighting man today in a civilized country is supplied with a first aid packet. If he will but apply this packet with the directions that are in it, he will prevent infection to the part and avoid blood poisoning.

The staggering forces reported in Europe bear out the fact that there is a scarcity of the "old" bullet with modern warfare, and unquestionably many grazing, penetrating wounds have been inflicted by the artillery and machine guns of the foot soldier.

The type of projectile in the field gun for the attack of infantry still remains the shell filled with explosive to scatter them broadcast when the projectile explodes. These shells explode with terrific concussion and cause the greatest measure of destruction among the massed formations of the body. Their power to destroy life is almost as great as that of the old blunt nosed rifle bullet and as this respect there is certainly no gain in the use of the "humane" bullet.

Secreting Art Treasures

During the war of 1870, when the German army drew near the French capital, one of the directors of the Parisian took was to place the art treasures of the Louvre in safety as they did in the present war. The paintings of Raphael, Titian, Paolo Veronese and Leonardo da Vinci were carefully packed and shipped to the provinces, where it was hoped they have been put to shipboard and taken to the United States.

It was not so easy to save the pieces of marble statuary for their weight and fragility made it difficult to handle; but the French determined to save the Venus de Milo, which, at least, should not fall into the hands of the Germans. So they had it taken down from her pedestal and laid her in a casket carefully padded and wrapped. At night the casket was carried out through a secret door and hidden under the cellar of the police prefecture, at the end of a secret passageway.

They walled in the casket and cleverly gave the wall all appearance of a part of the cellar. Immediately in front of this wall they laid a number of barrels filled with sand, so that if they should happen to be found their importance would lead the discoverers to think there was nothing else hidden there.

While speaking about spring time and horticulture, it is quite evident that aeroplane plants are being cultivated.

"The Arab's Secret Has Made Thousands Beautiful."

The Joy Of a Perfect Complexion

There is no pleasure to compare with the joy of possessing a perfect complexion. SIDNEY CROSSING.

The funeral of the late Mrs. John W. Young were conducted at White's Church, Bayside, on Monday afternoon. Deceased was ill only a few days of bronchial pneumonia and was 74 years of age. The floral tributes were a pillow from the family; sheaf, Miss Jean Boyce; lilies, Mrs. A. E. Phillips; spray, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Mouck and Mrs. Gary. The remains were interred in White's cemetery. "Unusual Industrial Activity," Says Pittsburg Despatch

PITTSBURG, April 14.—Signs of unusual industrial activity in the Pittsburg district because of the increase of orders for war material have been received with more or less interest by the business men of this city.

The manufacturing concerns said to be the Associated Press reports of their operations.

Said the Westinghouse Air Brake Company: "It was said the shops machinery had been installed, and workmen were now making shrapnel shells, cartridge cases and fuses. It is rumored that will receive a year to complete. The shells will be loaded by experts in Europe."

The Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. is making large projectiles for the war, although the order came to it through an eastern steel manufacturing concern. Additional machinery put in the shops, and great profits are expected.

Another of the many concerns which are making ammunition, said shops working at high speed to fill the demand promptly.

The King's Stratagem

In the days, when Henry IV. of France was King of Navarre only, and he was that kingdom of hills and woods which occupies the south side of the largest country, and with difficulty awaiting the Huguenot issues against the French court and the Catholic League—in the days when, rather isolated, from the rest of Christendom, in the Pyrenees, was a bone of contention between the young king and the crafty queen-mother, Catherine de Medicis, a conference between these notable personages took place in the picturesque town of La Rhole.

La Rhole still rises gray, time-beaten, and half-ruined on a lofty cliff above the broad green waters of the Garonne, forty odd miles from Bordeaux. But it is a small place now, in the days of which we are speaking, however, it was important, strongly fortified, and guarded by a castle which looked down on a thousand red-tiled roofs, rising in terraces from the river. As the meeting-place of the two sovereigns it was for the time as gay as Paris itself, Catherine having brought with her a party of fair maids of honor in the effect of whose charms she perhaps put as much trust as in her own diplomacy. But the peaceful appearance of the town was delusive, for even while every other house in it rang with revel and cheery laughter, each party was ready to fly to arms without warning, if it saw that any advantage was to be gained thereby.

On the morning shortly before the end of the conference two men sat at play in a room, the deep-embrasured window of which looked down from a considerable height upon the river. The hour was late, and the town silent. Outside, the moonlight fell bright and pure on sleeping fields and long, straight lines of poplars. Within the room a silver lamp suspended from the ceiling threw light upon the table, leaving the further parts of the room in shadow. The players were both richly dressed, but on the one bedecked in one corner lay a handsome cloak, a sword, and the of the clumsy pistols of the period. Across a chair lay another cloak and sword, and on the window seat, beside a pair of saddlebags, were strewn half a dozen such trifles as soldiers carried from camp to camp—a silver comb-box.

The figure of the players, as they bent over the dice, were in shadow. One—a slight, dark man of middle height, with a weak chin, and a of a beard, and a small, dark mustache—seemed, from the occasional oaths which he let drop, to be losing heavily. Yet his opponent, a stouter and darker man, with a curved-out across his left temple, and a left swaggering air which has at all times marked the professional soldier, showed no signs of triumph or elation. On the contrary, though he kept silence, or spoke only a formal word or two, there was a gleam of anxiety and suppressed excitement in his eyes, and more than once he took a look at keenly at his companion, as if to judge of his feelings or learn whether the time had come for some expedient to be resorted to. But in for this, an observer looking in through the window would have taken

A Message to Thin Weak Scrawny Folks

AN EASY WAY TO GAIN 10 TO 20 LBS. OF SOLID, HEALTHY, PERMANENT FLESH!

Thin nervous, undersized men and women everywhere are heard to say, "I can't understand why I do not put on a suitable amount of good, nourishing food." The reason is just that you are not eating, no matter how much you eat, unless your digestive organs assimilate the fat-producing elements of your food instead of passing them out through the body as waste.

What is needed is a means of gently urging the assimilative functions of the stomach and intestines to absorb the oils and fats and hand them over to the blood, where they may enrich the nourishment-starved tissues and build solid, healthy flesh. This is where Sargol comes in. Sargol acts—not hungry for fatty materials of which it is being deprived by the failure of the alimentary canal to take them from the food. The best way to overcome this sad waste of flesh building elements and to stop the leakage of fats is to use Sargol, the scientific assimilative regenerative force that is recommended so highly by physicians here and abroad. Take a little Sargol tablet with every meal and notice how quickly your slender limbs round out, full of firm, healthy flesh are deposited over your body, covering each bony angle and projecting hollow. J. S. Hamilton and other good druggists have Sargol, or can get it quickly from their wholesaler, and will refund your money if you are not satisfied with the gain in weight it produces as stated on the guarantee in each package. It is inexpensive, easy to take and highly efficient.

Caution—While Sargol has produced remarkable results in overcoming nervousness, dyspepsia and general stomach troubles, it should not be used by those who are willing to gain two pounds or more, for it is a wonderful flesh builder.

on the two for only one more instance of the hawk and pigeon.

At last the younger player threw down the caster with a groan.

"You have the luck of the Evil One", he said bitterly. "How much is that?"

"Two thousand crowns" replied the other without emotion. "You will play no more?"

"No! I wish to heaven I had never played at all!" was the answer. As he spoke the loser rose, and going to the window stood looking moodily out.

For a few moments the elder man remained seated, gazing at him listlessly, but at length he too rose, and, stepping softly to his standard, touched him on the shoulder. "Your pardon a moment, M. le Vicomte," he said. "I am loth in concluding that the loss of this sum will inconvenience you!"

"A thousand fiends!" exclaimed the young vicomte, turning on him wrathfully. "Is there any man whom the loss of two thousand crowns would not inconvenience? As for me—"

"For you", continued the other, smoothly filling up the pause, "shall I be wrong in saying that it means something like ruin?"

"Well, sir, and if it does!" the young man retorted, forcing himself up haughtily, his cheek a shade paler with passion. "Depend upon it you shall be paid. Do not be afraid of that!"

"Gently, gently, my friend", the winner answered, his patience in strong contrast with the other's violence "I had had no intention of insulting you, believe me. Those who play with Vicomte de Lusigny must not want to doubt his honor. I spoke only in your own interest. It has occurred to me, vicomte, that the matter might be arranged at less cost to yourself."

"How?" was the curt question.

"May I speak?" the elder man inquired shrugged his shoulders, and the other, taking silence for consent, proceeded: "You, vicomte, are the cousin of Lusigny for the King of Navarre; I, of Creance, for the King of France. Our terms lie only three leagues apart. Could I, by any influence I have on one of these fine nights, become master of Lusigny, it would be worth to me at least two thousand crowns" me. Do you understand?"

"No", the young man answered sullenly. "I do not."

"Think over what I have said, then", was the brief answer.

For a full minute there was silence in the room. The vicomte, with his back to the window and his knitted brows and compressed lips, while his companion, sitting down, leaned back in his chair, with an air of affected carelessness. Outside, the rattle of arms and hum of voices told that the guards were passing through the street. The church bell struck one. Suddenly the vicomte burst into a savage laugh, and, turning, struck his fist up his cloak and sword. "The trap was very well laid, M. le Capitaine," he said almost jovially; "but I am still sober enough to take care of myself—and of Lusigny. I wish you good-night. You shall have your money, never fear."

"Still, I am afraid it will cost you dearly" the captain answered, as he rose and moved toward the door. "I open it, for his guest. His hand was already on the latch when he paused. "Look here", he said, "what do you say to this, then? I will make the two thousand crowns you have lost to me, and another thousand besides against your town. Eh? you can hear us. If you win, you go off a free man with my thousand. If you lose, you put me in possession of one of these fine nights. What do you say to that? A single throw to decide."

The young man's pale face reddened. He turned, and his eyes sought the table and the dice irresolutely. The temptation indeed was one to an unfortunate moment, when the excitement of play had given way to depression, and he saw nothing before him but ruin. The dice, which his hand was laid, but the cold reality of ruin. The temptation to return and by a single throw set himself right with the world was too much for him. Slowly he came back to the table. "Configured you!" he said irritably. "I think you are the devil himself, captain."

"Don't talk child's talk!" said the other, drawing back at his words with dignity. "If you do not like this offer you need not take it."

But the young man's fingers had already closed on the dice. Picking them up, he dropped them once, twice, thrice on the table, his eyes blazing with the playfever. "It I win!" he said doubtfully.

"You carry away a thousand crowns", answered the captain quietly. "If you lose you contrive to leave one of the gates of Lusigny open for me before next full moon. That is all."

"And what if I lose, and not pay the forfeit?" asked the vicomte, blushing weakly.

"I trust to your honor", said the captain. And, strange as it may seem, he knew his man. The young noble of the day might betray his cause and his trust, but the debt of honor incurred at play was binding on him.

"Well", said the vicomte, "I agree. Who is to throw first?"

"As you will", replied the captain, assuming without an appearance of indifference a real excitement which darkened his cheek, and caused the pulse in the old wound to beat furiously. "Then do you go first", said the vicomte.

"With your permission", asented the captain. And taking the dice up in the caster he shook them with a practiced hand, and dropped them on the board. The throw was seven.

The vicomte took up the caster and, tossed the dice into it, glanced at the window. The moonlight shining upon it, he fell in fitful shiver on a few feet of the floor. With the light something of the silence and restlessness of the night entered also, and appealed to him. For a few seconds he hesitated. He even made as if he would have replaced the box on the table. But the good instinct failed. It was too late, and with a muttered word, which his dry lips refused to articulate, he threw the dice. Seven!

THE "DIVINE RIGHT" OF HOHENZOLLERNS

Brute Force and Shameless Intrigue the Outstanding Feature of Two Centuries of Rule

Kaiser Wilhelm of Germany is the embodiment of the Hohenzollern idea, that conquest and civilization are identical and the right of his family history and of his Machiavellian statecraft.

The family takes its name from an ancient castle in the Swabian mountains south of Germany, and there the first traces of the greatness was Conrad of Hohenzollern, who in the latter half of the twelfth century distinguished himself in the service of the great Emperor Frederick, married a feudal heiress, Sophia Swanne, partly by right of marriage, partly by imperial favor, became Mayor or Governor of Nuremberg, and from the position the Hohenzollerns had to be satisfied for three generations, until, early in the fifteenth century, Frederick of Hohenzollern was promoted to a higher position in the imperial service, being made Marquis of Brandenburg, with the duty of defending the northeastern frontier of the Empire, and with a seat in the Council of the Emperor. It was not, however, until the year 1440 that Frederick the Third, the twelfth of the Hohenzollern Electors, assumed the rank and title of King of Prussia. Thus the royalty whose pretensions have become so incredible to the serfless Emperor and the liberty, is little more than two centuries old.

If we divide those two centuries roughly into four periods of about fifty years each, we shall find that each half-century in the history of the Hohenzollern has been marked by a successful feat of unscrupulous aggrandizement, combined with a mixture of force, cunning, and fraud. The date of the first of these performances is 1740, when Frederick the Great, taking advantage of the death of the Austrian Emperor and the disputed succession of his daughter, in violation of a solemn and recent covenant, and without declaration of war or any diplomatic preliminary whatever, forcibly seized the Province of Silesia, and thereby lavished his country in a war which established for him once as the greatest commander of the age. The first Hohenzollern question worried European diplomacy for more than a quarter of a century. This was settled by the war part of the kingdom of Denmark, but the people, who mostly spoke German, were not satisfied with their position under the Danish crown. Their desire was to become a German duchy.

In 1864 Prussia put and end to the long trouble in characteristic fashion. The grandfather of the present Kaiser, playing a high-handed game, quarrelled forcibly by the demise of the Danish crown, persuaded Austria to join Prussia in a joint occupation of the Provinces. Denmark was invaded, the short war which Great Britain offered to the Danes proved to be "instant", and on no practical terms the Danes were defeated and brought to their knees, and the provinces remained in joint possession of the invading Powers. In the division of spoil, Holstein was allotted to Austria, Schleswig to Prussia, and to the small principality of Lauenburg was waived her title claim in consideration of a payment of money. But Bismarck, with the King, Wilhelm, the Prussian, assumed the attitude of prominent, and soon carried it to an end. He picked a quarrel with his ally, and then—in defiance of his own Parliament, which refused to supply to the army—suddenly marched into Holstein, turned out the Austrians, and the annexation was complete. Of course that was the pretence.

Alsace and Lorraine.

There is no need to dwell on the fourth of the long series of acts of successful aggression—the annexation in 1870, of Alsace and Lorraine. It extended the Hohenzollern dominions for the first time to the western, or French, side of the river which forms the natural and the ancient division between Germany and France.

It is hardly necessary to add that, in all these proceedings, the desires and sentiments of the people of Illesia, Poland, Schleswig, Holstein, Lauenburg, Alsace and Lorraine counted for nothing at all. They had no Divine right. The view natural to a Hohenzollern would be that the annexations were parts of a plan designed by the Almighty for the ameliorations of humanity through His chosen instrument, the Hohenzollern family, and that it was the obvious duty of the persons concerned to be satisfied. When the family ambitions are in any way thwarted by the persons and forward, a Hohenzollern, even when lacking the necessary chastisement, is not angry; he is only grieved that mankind should be so sinful.

It cannot be doubted that the present head of this remarkable family cherishes the most pious respect for

INVISIBLE FIGHTERS

Four years ago there was at Aldershot an ordinary field gun which looked as though an insane artist had used it for a palette.

Every color from a paint box had been lavished upon it. Blue, brown, yellow, red and green had been laid on in the most haphazard blobs and daubs.

It was not until you began to walk away from the gun that you realized there was method in the painter's madness. At two hundred yards the violent colors had all run together, at three hundred the gun seemed to be fading out of sight, at five hundred it was practically invisible.

The armored train, manned by British soldiers and British guns, mounted with such havoc among the Germans near Dixmude, was painted, in precisely similar fashion. The Kaiser offered a reward of $5,000 to the battery which will knock out this engine of destruction, yet this Royal reward has not been claimed by anyone.

To give the War Office its due, it was the first to realize that the thin red line of Crimean days was quite out of date with rifles that would carry a mile, and just before the South African War khaki became the universal wear.

At first the Tommies hated khaki, and in August, 1902, it was announced that it was to be abandoned, and "Aldolf, ever" substituted. But in 1902 pointed out that grey would also be invisible, and that it would not be as invisible as khaki, and in the end practical use won the day.

The Germans followed Britain's example, but their pink was a rather odd color which seemed to catch every early sky.

The Russians fight in grey, a color well adapted to their vast plains covered in summer with withered grass and in winter with snow.

The Military Y.M.C.A. Marquee

Belleville, Ont., April 14, 1915.

Editor of the Intelligencer,—

There appeared in the columns of your paper recently, a letter suggesting that something ought to be done for the soldiers mobilized here.

One of our worthy citizens has requested that I outline briefly what the Y.M.C.A. is doing.

With the co-operation of Colonel Preston, Officer in Command, we have secured a splendid large marquee, which has been erected on a 30 x 40 feet platform in the rear of the barracks. Light and heat have been provided. Tables, seats and comfortable chairs, games, writing materials, magazines and a large number of home newspapers, in addition to a piano and gramophone have been furnished. We have also secured a license for selling postage stamps, and have installed a post office for those directing their mail in care of the Y.M.C.A.

Decorations of various kinds adorn the walls of the tent. At the back of the platform appears a banner "39th Battalion C.E.F. For God, for King, and Country."

Monday, Wednesday and Saturday evenings, a musical programme is improvised by the talent amongst the soldiers, and such city talent (either ladies or gentlemen) as can be secured.

On Tuesday and Friday evenings a splendid religious service is conducted. On Thursday evenings the big Military Concert of the week is held at the City Hall. Then Sunday evenings, a soldiers' illustrated song service is held there, when an evangelistic address is given by one of the city pastors.

Special arrangements are being made with one of the banks so that one of the bank staff will at certain hours each evening be on hand to accommodate such men who wish to deposit their earnings and withdraw by small amounts.

Over at the Y.M.C.A. Building almost three hundred of the soldiers have taken out special rates, short term membership tickets, entitling them to all the privileges. Every evening, immediately after supper, the Association game rooms and parlors, and bath rooms are thronged with soldiers.

Special features are also being provided the soldiers sent to the detention camp. We still need a few more strong comfortable chairs or settees at the tent. The activities of the Y.M.C.A. tent have been put in charge of Mr. W. N. MacOmon, who by fast forming strong friendships with the men, who heartily thank the several citizens who have assisted, either financially or by supplies towards our work.

Any citizen desiring to assist in any way may do so by kindly getting in touch with us by phone 413. Thanking you for the space, I remain,

Yours cordially,—
J. L. HESS.

G.T.P. Purchased Newspaper Shares

OTTAWA, April 15.—In the fall of 1905, when Hon. Frank Oliver was Minister of the Interior, and when the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway was having extensive business relations with the Department of the Interior, the Minister and the company became business partners in the ownership of the Edmonton Bulletin.

One of the reports tabled today following the investigations by T. R. Ferguson into the alienation of the public domain under Sir Laurier Government, has to do with a transaction, in October, 1905, the company owning the Edmonton Bulletin was reorganized and 150 shares paid up. Frank Scott, treasurer of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, who bought the stock with $5,000, of Grand Trunk Pacific money had held it in trust for the company, the commissioner finds that the financing of the Bulletin was based largely upon the cash obtained from the railway. The report of the Bulletin showed that Hon. Frank Oliver held 235 shares, Frank Scott 150 shares, 24 shares being divided among small holders and 91 remaining unallotted. The evidence of Frank Scott, taken by Mr. Ferguson, was that on October 1, 1905, the Grand Trunk Pacific through him, forwarded $15,000 to the Imperial Bank, at Edmonton, and that he received subsequently a certificate for 150 shares of stock, signed by Duncan Marshall, president, and A. H. Allen, secretary.

The commissioner also took the evidence of Francis Lynch, of the Department of the Interior, who asserted that the G.T.P. about this time had much business with the department of which Mr. Oliver was the head, there being numerous negotiations regarding Dominion lands affected in the company's plan for right-of-way, townsites, etc.

Mr. Scott, in his evidence, stated that the stock was bought on instructions from the vice-president of the company, but there was no record of a resolution authorizing the purchase. He held the shares in trust for the company, took no part in the business, attended no meetings, and received no dividends.

Asked if the G. T. P. took shares in many paper companies, Mr. Scott said no. Asked why it was done in the Oliver case, he said he did not know.

NOT WATER BOTTLES

Wear Cose Made of Aluminum—Electrically Heated Pad is Handy

A hot water bag of so some kind is a frequently needed assistant in the home. The familiar rubber type bag so many distressing ones of leaking unexpectedly, of the washer becoming lost, etc., that the entirely new type of electrically heated square of felt which replaces it is welcome. Here we have an electric heating unit concealed in thicknesses of felt-like material, connected with a cord and plug. The plug registers three degrees of heat—high, medium and low, so that by adjusting it it is possible to secure the different grades of heat.

Another type of bottle is the one piece bottle of aluminum, generally round in shape, of which there are several models on the market. Once it is filled with boiling water, it remains hot for several hours, and is if wrapped in a piece of flannel it retains its heat far better than the rubber bottle.

A clever hot water bottle for a child comes in the shape of a rabbit and also of a doll. These bottles of rubber are covered with real clothes so that the child likes to hug and hold them tight. In many cases where heat is needed for the little folks this might suffice. It will be found more easy to use than the regulation bag.

Another effective method of cleansing the teeth. Brush them well, using a good tooth powder. Letting the brush go over the gums, the grinding surfaces and reaching back to the last molar. Rinse out the mouth with tepid water to which has been added a little ammonia.

Dental floss is good to use. Rub it up and down between the teeth. Use a quill for a toothpick if one is used.

The most necessary time to cleanse the teeth is at bedtime and in the morning after breakfast. Going to bed with bits of food in the teeth and tooth rinses decomposing therefore giving the germs the chance to do their worst, because they are undisturbed.

The ideal way to care for the teeth is to cleanse them after each meal as well as at bedtime and rinse out the mouth with water after eating between meals.

Cleansing the teeth and mouth means less disease, too; while if neglected it invites it, as the mouth is the gateway to disease. With the teeth and mouth clean, such germs as pneumonia, diphtheria, typhoid, pneumonia and tuberculosis can not get an strong a hold, which lessens the danger of taking such diseases.

Philadelphia, usually regarded as a slow-going and non-progressive city, is up-to-date in one respect. That city is to teach geography by moving pictures. Certain European geography cannot be taught in any better way. But the films will need to be changed every other day.

THE PRUSSIAN IDEA

Might Before Right the Dominating Creed of Militarist Casts

"With the German people there is reasonable hope that when this war is over we may have a reconciliation, but with the Prussian monarchy there can be no peace," declared Mr. Cecil Chesterton, the distinguished English journalist, in the course of one of the addresses he delivered in Canada.

The atrocities in Belgium, he said, were not committed by unruly soldiers, but by soldiers only too well in hand. They were "part of a deliberate German policy to create such a state of terrorism that no Belgian would attempt any action to endanger the property or lives of communication through that country.

Mr. Chesterton showed a preference for the use of the term Prussian rather than German, and inserted in his short review of the Prussian power and made the rest of the German states the satrapy of Prussia. Prussian rulers had established a system of rigid militarism that was used not only for aggression, but for keeping the German people themselves under control.

"The Prussian idea," explained Mr. Chesterton, "is to make the Prussian soldier so much afraid of his officer that he is not likely to have more fear of any possible enemy."

He readily admitted that the Prussian policy of putting material force above everything and ignoring all right, had some material advantages for a time—burglary and theft were profitable up to a certain point. Probably Prussia had derived material advantages from this policy, but he did not think it an evidence of great intelligence to burglarize or steal.

"It is a little too much to expect us to admit h's superior intelligence," complained Mr. Chesterton. "One German editor went so far as to say that when Germany trampled all the world would bow down on bended knee to the beauty of the German soul. That rather astonished me. I was impatient with Germans," he said amid laughter.

Mr. Chesterton had some fun with Germany's complaints that there is a conspiracy against her.

"There is," he admitted, "but it is exactly the conspiracy of the police against the burglar."

...ose the Enemy's Vessels

Captured German ships are put to a good use by the British Government. They are run as "cattle tenders, and each bears a number along with the broad arrow—the Government's stamp.

"When firing at a range of fifteen miles a shell from a 15-inch British naval gun reaches a height of more than 22,000 feet.

Some of the French landed prisoners have arrived for the permanent care of the English graves on their estates.

TREACHEROUS PRISONERS

Germans Surrendered Then Opened Fire on Their Captors

Private William Marlowe, of the Loyal North Lancashire Regiment, is in Queakerly Hospital, Liverpool, suffering from a bullet wound in the knee, and when his mother visited him he gave her an account of his adventures: "Along with some more of the company we came across a big detachment of Germans who, in response to our request, surrendered, threw their rifles down and we faced right about and told them to follow. We had got about 50 yards ahead when the Germans, who had picked their rifles up, opened fire and I was shot in the knee. I saw the man who had wounded me—a tall man with the head shaved—and ran across to him and he fired again, but missed, and I then bayoneted him.

"I followed my company and was told to go to a barn and get my wound dressed, but I had only been there about five minutes when the Germans bombarded the place. From there I was taken to a church and later reached the hospital here."

The Kaiser's Man

Two British soldiers lay wounded beside a dying German. They were hot and tired and in pain, and one called for a drink.

The dying German understood. "Here," he said, pointing to his side. Thinking he wanted lifting up, they raised him from the ground, and found that he was lying on his water bottle. One held it to his lips.

It was almost the last water in the world. He was dying for the Kaiser, but there was something of Sir Philip Sidney in this dying man. "No, not mine," he said, "but drink," he murmured as they held the water to his lips.

He died, and one of the Englishmen died too, but the other dug a grave and laid his enemy in it. "We buried him properly," he said, "with a cross of headstone, and I got a stick, and I found a piece of paper, and I wanted to write something on it, and so I wrote 'A.I.'"

RECOILS BEFORE RUSSIAN USE OF THE BAYONET

Attempts by Bavarian and Austrian Forces to Storm Russian Positions End in Complete Failure—Big Battles Raging Westward of Uszok

LONDON, April 16.—(Special)—The reports from Petrograd announce a great victory over the Germans in the Carpathians, the heaviest again being the weapon relied upon by the Russians to meet the desperate attacks of the Germans on the left wing.

The Austrians attempted a similar offensive on the extreme east and met with a crushing defeat. Big battles are now raging, and the Russians are pushing the enemy back to the plains of Hungary.

In a special despatch from Petrograd to The London Daily News, Frederick Rennet says:

General Litzinger's army delivered tremendous counter-attacks against the Russians' left wing in the Carpathians yesterday. A large force of picked Bavarian infantry attempted to storm the Russian hill positions south of Koniowka, dominating the Munkacs road. The Russians advanced from their trenches and met the attack half way. A fierce bayonet battle continued until after dark on the slippery hills. The Germans were driven back with terrible losses and the victors.

Russians moved forward their general position here. A similar attempt made by the Austrians on the extreme east was immediately crushed. Continuous heavy battles are now raging from Uszok westward and Russian columns are beating the enemy back from the southern fringe of the Carpathians to the plateau where cultivation begins.

Other Petrograd despatches claim that the Russians are making steady progress, despite the efforts of the Austro-Germans to outflank them, but the Austrians insist that the recent fighting has been in their favor, and that they have captured another important height northwest of Uszok Pass.

The Russians, although now faced by very much larger forces than they were at the beginning of the battle three months ago, are said to be continuing their efforts to force the Austro-German armies completely from the Carpathians and open the way to Hungary.

Having the support of the Allies' western passes, they are bending their energies on an attempt to capture the Uszok Pass and the heights in the environs.

Invalided Belgian A German Spy

Uncovered by Wearing French Uniform and Medal Without Right

PARIS, April 16.—An invalided Belgian grenadier, giving the name of Pierre Jacques, has been arrested by the police at Calais on the charge of wearing the uniform of the French army and the French military medal without having the right to do so. The penalty of to be a dangerous spy. After his arrest inquiries were made with the result that the examining magistrate dictated the charge against him to one of espionage.

The identity of Dacpens is somewhat of a mystery. He was found to have travelled recently in the regions around Ostend, and Ponte-Mousson. He also visited the principal naval stations, where he tried to establish relations with soldiers and sailors. Louis Pichhio, a sailor on a French submarine at Cherbourg, has declared that he recognizes in Dacpens a Belgian grenadier who used to guide a party of French blue jackets during the fighting at Dixmude and then led them into an ambush.

The police are of the opinion that Dacpens is a German who enlisted in the Belgian army for purposes of espionage.

Aviators Will Patrol the Border

Ten Men from Army School Ordered to Brownsville

WASHINGTON, April 15.—First Lieuts. T. Desmilling and Byron Q. Jones and eight enlisted men with an aeroplane from the army aviation school at San Diego, were ordered today to Brownsville, Tex., to aid in the enforcement of neutrality at that point during the fighting across the Rio Grande at Matamoros.

Because of the circuitous course of the river between Brownsville and Matamoros and the heavy growth of vegetation lining the river banks, an aeroplane, in the opinion of army officers, affords the best means of patrolling that section of the border.

The expedition is already on its way from San Diego.

Senate Passes Franchise Bill

OTTAWA, April 15.—The bill to extend the franchise to soldiers was passed by the Senate this morning in an amended form. The most important amendment adopted was on the lines of the change proposed by Hon. Wm. Pugsley in the Commons. It provides that before the provisions of the bill shall come into effect the consent of Lord Kitchener, Secretary for War in the British Government, must be secured. Another amendment provides for the appointment of six scrutineers, three representing each party, to supervise the taking of the vote at the front. On the third reading of the bill Senator Choquette moved the six months' holst, but it was lost on a vote of 18 to 12. It is not known yet whether or not the Government will accept the amendments.

Dutch Ship Torpedoed by Germans

People of Holland Angry—Ves Riding at Anchor off Ijmuiden

LONDON April 16.—(Special.)—Tremendous excitement has been aroused in Holland, according to despatches received here last night, by the destruction of the Dutch Government vessel Ijmuiden by a German submarine. The Katwijk was torpedoed and sent down while riding at anchor off Noordhinder lightship, off the coast of Holland. She was a vessel of 2,666 tons, registered in Rotterdam, and bound for that port from Baltimore with an American cargo of corn and cotton. She had been chartered by the Government of the Netherlands and her cargo was Government-owned.

The sinking of the Katwijk, coming as it did on the heels of the seizure of four Dutch trawlers, the Hendrik, Eentwee, Ryuland and another as yet unidentified, by a German torpedo boat which took them to Cuxhaven, has aroused the Dutch Government to take hasty steps to demand immediate and complete reparation.

This feeling has not been modified by later despatches, saying that the captured vessels were released.

MAJOR COLQUHOUN RETURNS TO DUTY

Got Tired of His Enforced Rest in the South of France

TORONTO, April 15.—Major M. A. Colquhoun, of Hamilton, who was invalided from the front to the South of France, has returned to-duty. A letter has been received by Mrs. Colquhoun from Rouen, the Canadian base, announcing his arrival there on March 29th. He was feeling splendid and would write again when he got to the front. Several pictures of the gallant Major resting in the South of France, accompanied the letter.

He had expressed impatience at being kept south, and desired to return to the trenches in case he should join the "Big Drive" when it commenced.

Taylor already married to Germaine Lemieux, of Ottawa, went through a form of marriage with Elizabeth Green of Brantford. He said during the trial that he left his first wife had deserted him he thought he was free to marry again. He also stated that as the second wife was already a married woman and had never been deserted he thought she likewise was free to marry.

"A queer case indeed," admitted the judge at the conclusion of the case.

Gertrude Brown of this city has since gone to the United States. She was married to Taylor six years ago.

LONDON, April 16.—Two hostile aeroplanes were reported over Canterbury, 53 miles east of London, today.

The aeroplane which dropped bombs on Faversham was shot at by Territorial marksmen, but their aim was, apparently, poor. Flying over Sittingbourne, the airman dropped another bomb, but the only result was the digging of a hole in an orchard. Still another bomb was dropped into a chalk quarry. The German machine then started for the sea by way of Deal, from which direction it had appeared over Kent.

KITCHENER'S NEW ARMY OFF TO SALISBURY PLAINS

More Than Hundred Thousand Men Will Soon be Encamped There—Billets and Winter Quarters Emptied

LONDON, April 16.—(Special)—Kitchener's army—horse, foot and artillery—is on the move once more to the great camping ground on Salisbury Plain, where soon more than 100,000 soldiers will be encamped. The winter is ended, billets and winter quarters are being emptied, and all along the great main roads that lead towards the plain lines of troops can be seen on the march.

One entire brigade of 10,000 men is marching cross-country from Whitley—six on the move once more to-day, making about 17 miles a day, under active service conditions. Following six months of hard training this is an easy test, and less than a dozen men have fallen out of line from all causes. The brigade is preceded by a group of buglers, whose most popular air by general agreement is "Way Down Upon the Swanee River."

NO DIRECT APPROACH MADE BY AUSTRIA TO RUSSIANS

PETROGRAD, April 16.—(Special.)—Although careful enquiries a correspondent is able to state confidently that no direct approach has been made by Austria-Hungary to Russia on the subject of the conditions of peace. The Austrian Government, so far as it known here, has not taken any part in advancing even the suggestion that it is desirous of ending the war.

The only suggestion on the subject comes from Rome, made apparently by the Pope at the instigation of Austrians not in public life. It was an enquiry whether, supposing that Austria-Hungary would open negotiations with a view to peace. Only one reply was possible. It was given by the Russian Government, which said that if Austria desires peace she must ask the allied powers for their conditions which would then be considered.

SUBMARINE CAMPAIGN TERRORLESS TO BRITAIN

LONDON, April 16.—(Special.)—Great pride is taken in the record during the eleven weeks since the German submarine terrorist campaign started. The admiralty transported more than a million men by water, and five men represent the total losses in the transport work of the admiralty since the beginning of the war. Another record has been established in the transport of horses from India, with the loss of only two. In the merchant marine more than 11,000 English merchant ships arrived at or sailed from English ports in the last eleven weeks, while less than forty English merchant ships have been victims of German submarines. In the same time the number of new ships launched for the English merchant marine makes the total number of ships and the total tonnage of England's merchant marine greater than before the "reign of terror.

WAR IMPOSSIBLE WITHOUT COPPER

This Metal is Used in Some Degree in Nearly All War Materials

This has been called a gold war, and so it is in a sense. But it is even more emphatically a copper one. Out of the supply of copper, and sooner or later nowadays a war comes automatically to an end.

This is because the red metal enters into the composition, in a greater or less degree, of nearly all the munitions of war. Take, for instance, projectiles from big guns. The ordinary case of each one of these is a band of copper, which, when the gun is fired, expands, and grips the interior rifling of the weapon, causing the projectile to rotate.

It is also curves another, and a very important purpose. By its expansion at the very moment the charge ignites, the explosive gases are held in check, so it would seem, for a moment, but a tiny fraction of their energy is lost in driving the projectile through the bore of the piece.

If Germany suddenly wanted enough copper to enable her to make these bands for her big gun projectiles, she would promptly empty the domestic plumbing of new houses—the produce about 24,000 tons per annum—or, at all events, she would be able to manage quite a long time if she confined herself to these. But there are other demands for the metal which are far more urgent. Most notably that in connection with smallarm ammunition, that is to say, rifle cartridges.

These are made of solid drawn brass; a rubber substitute will do, because all others are liable to jam in the barrel. Now ordinary brass contains three parts of copper to two of zinc, but for the brass from which cartridges are made consists of three parts of copper and only one of zinc.

Roughly, it is stated that 100,000 tons of copper are required for a million pounds of small-arm ammunition. Consequently every cartridge contains rather less than half an ounce of copper. One has only to bear these facts in mind, and to remember also that Britain has been compiled to use on average about thirty millions of cartridges are being fired away daily in the various theatres of the war, to realize how absolutely vital it is to Germany that her imports of copper should not be materially interfered with.

But this is what is happening. The British fleet commands the seas, and copper has been declared to be contraband of war. The result of this is that the German Government is now offering the huge price of $500 a ton for the metal, the price in England being somewhere about $225 a ton. The bulk of the copper is smuggled into Germany from professedly neutral countries. Often it is carried by shippers armed with false bills of lading and faked manifests.

SAW DUEL IN AIR

Remarkable Stories of Recent Watched Aviators Battle

Corporal J. Coppock, of the Fetherbone company of the 4th Battalion, received a letter from his friend, Bombardier Stein, of the 4th Battery, 1st Brigade, C.F.A., First Contingent, in which Bombardier Stein said: "I guess you know I cannot let you know what sort we are in, but anyway we are here all right. We are staying on farms, sleeping in lofts and anywhere we can get. We all try to get the softest spot, you bet your life on that. This is a little nice country, but no get here at present. I saw an aeroplane duel yesterday that was worth seeing. It was between a German and a Frenchman, and the latter was one too many for the German and brought him down. The kitchen of the farm where I am staying is full of bullet holes, where the English drove out the Germans. You see some rehic things here, I can tell you. I am writing this on my saddle within sound of the guns which are popping at once."

VARIED CONTENTS OF SOLDIERS' "PACKS"

Small Departmental Store Carried on Fighting Man's Back—"Culture" in Germans' Knapsack

A British "Tommy's" knapsack—he invariably refers to it as his "pack," for short—contains a larger assortment of things than most people judge. It is, also and generally speaking, sure apt to imagine.

It is his suitcase, wardrobe, and many other things combined. Besides a complete change of underclothing, including a couple of pairs of socks and a pair of "ammunition" boots there is stowed therein a variety of pairs of trousers, brushes and a tin of blacking, a brush, buttonstick, and brush for polishing his tunic buttons and a hold-all containing, amongst other things, a knife, fork, spoon, razor, shaving brush and comb. There is also a spare towel and a tiny bit of soap, a Bible and prayer-book, and his pocket ledger—known as "Crump's"—and the "small book"—in which are entered up his pay and allowances, war bonds, decorations, wounds, etc. Herein also he stows away his emergency rations; and a broad bandage, bandage or belt, to be worn next the skin in cold, wet weather, and which is dubbed the "cholera belt."

Books For Germans

The German soldier's knapsack contains most of the articles mentioned above, and in addition he is provided by the authorities with quite a little library of more or less useful books, all of which he has to present at "kit inspection," and for the due and careful preservation of which he is held responsible. Absolutely!

These include first of all a "Soldaten-Spruchbuch," which may be best defined as a miniature German-French dictionary, specially designed for the use of soldiers in the field. In it are set forth, under various headings, the French words relating to military affairs, such as scouting, outpost duty, reconnoitring, sentry duty, patrol duties, and so on. The pages are divided into three columns, the first two being devoted to the words in French and in German, while in the third is given the pronunciation of the French words according to German characters.

Then there is the "Soldbuch," or wages book, corresponding to "Crump's" ledger; a book of about 150 marching songs, called "Der Gute Kamerad"; a devotional manual containing selected prayers, hymns, passages from the Bible, etc.; and a "Lehr-Zeugnis," which is a sort of trade union book, wherein is set forth the soldier's qualifications, where he last worked, and for whom, and so on.

Russians and Their Ikons

Like the soldiers of most other nations, the German carries in his knapsack an ordinary emergency ration, but he also carries a second one for very extraordinary occasions, and which is known as the "iron ration." This must not be eaten until he is actually starving and then only by permission of his superior officer. It is a species of compressed pemmican, and supposed, also, to be made into small cubes the size of a chocolate drop, with it very much resembles.

The Russian soldier's knapsack contains one article of any kind, for the very good reason that the vast majority of Russians cannot read. It invariably does contain an ikon. This is usually described—outside Russia —as a "sacred picture." But this is only half the truth. The ikon is painted. It is true; but it is also stamped out in metal in bas-relief. Always, it represents some saint; and it is very, very holy, and very highly cherished. An ordinary Russian conscript would as soon lose his life as his ikon.

Pen Mightier Than Sword?

The editor of the German paper, The Fatherland, published in New York, is vociferous in his upholding of the German cause. Yet about five years ago he published a book, "The Confessions of a Barbarian," in which he said: "Somewhere in Germany there is a warrant for my arrest on apprehension. Somewhere the public prosecutor pears across the sea with a spy-glass. The German Empire, strangely enough, regards me still as her subject. She clings to me with the tenacity of a woman. I think she accuses me of desertion. A unifying spick and span, and with brass buttons, is waiting for me, but I don't want it." And he apparently still retains that dislike for the German uniform.

Within The Military Circle

What is Transpiring Among the Soldier Boys at Belleville and Kingston

All articles and notes under this head are passed by the commanding officer of the 39th Regiment and authentic in every particular.

KINGSTON

Sergt. Sleath, of the 1st Battalion, has been granted his long service medal. Lieut.-Col. Hughes made the presentation. This sergeant served in the 14th before being transferred to the 21st for overseas service.

"C" battery R.C.H.A. will have a full mounted parade on Friday. This will be the first turn-out of the battery as horse artillery.

On Saturday the R.C.H.A. will have a program of sports among the men instead of football or baseball. High and long jumps, putting the shot, races and other features will be on the program.

It is said among military men that Kingston should now have a garrison Provost-Sergeant, similar to Halifax and other places. The city has its garrison military police, but no chief of military police, and it is felt that Kingston should be raised to this military dignity.

Recruits for the remount depot in England are coming in quite rapidly and in a few days the organization will be up to the requirements of the authorized establishment. The O.D.C. of Ottawa are offering 45 men for this corps.

Queen's Camp O.T.C. will not go into camp this year as expected. An order has been issued to this effect. This is due to the fact that the corps has given so many of its men to various overseas units, thereby thinning out its ranks to such an extent that a camp with anything like a respectable showing is impossible. The college is better pleased with being able to give men for active service than for camp purposes.

The ladies of the Bobcagen have sent to the 21st Battalion a large number of socks for the use of the boys overseas. Lieut.-Col. W. S. Hughes is very grateful for the donation.

Twenty-three officers have applied for entrance to the fourth R.S.A. course which commences on April 26th. It is expected that about sixty will take the course. No applications have yet been received for the battery commanders' course yet, but a number are expected.

THE VETERINARY CORPS

The Veterinary Corps being organized in this division for overseas service has proved to be the most popular branch of the service. Major J. Hunter, D. of S. and T. has received from all over the division large numbers of applications. Ottawa offered to supply seventy-three men and applications are being received from other places. As only sixty-three men are wanted, large numbers will have to be refused.

WORLD'S SMALLEST ARMIES

If ever the disarmament of the world occurs, there will be several countries that will not have much to do in that line, such as, for instance, Monaco, the army of which comprises seventy-five guards, seventy-five gendarmes, and twenty firemen.

Another diminutive army is that of the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg, numbers 125 gendarmes, five noncommissioned officers, and 312 musicians. The Republic of San Marino can put in the field a total of nine companies of 900 men and thirty-eight officers, commanded by a marshal. The army on a peace footing consists of one company of sixty men.

The fighting force of the "Black Republic," Liberia, is composed of 1,500 men and almost as many officers. Liberia, however, evidently considers its army a formidable one, since, upon the occasion of hostilities between any of the Powers, it always tenders its services in aid of neutrality.

Another welcome spring harbinger is the squab—on toast.

RETURNED HOME FROM A GERMAN PRISON

Elmer B. Lack Arrives in This City—Experiences in a German Jail—First Canadian to be Exchanged—His Narrative Very Interesting—German Hatred

Mr. Elmer B. Lack arrived in this city yesterday afternoon, and is at present enjoying a rest at the residence of his father-in-law, Rev. J. Egan, North Front Street. His experience during the past few months have been such that few, if any, would have desired to exchange with him. Three years ago Mr. Lack was at the head of a Collegiate Institute at Edmonton, Alta., teaching a modern language. Desiring to obtain further education he left the west, and with his wife and two little girls, went to Leipsig, Germany, to take a post graduate course and obtain the degree of Ph. D. A year ago this month he was surely bereaved when Mrs. Lack took sick and died in a foreign land, leaving behind two little girls to his sole charge. When the war broke out Mr. Lack was made a resident of Germany and hatred towards the British. He was not, as generally supposed, given 24 hours to leave the country, but rather was not given a month. In some cases women were allowed to leave the country. Shortly after the war was in progress he was interned in a common jail, where he had supplied was denied at all what could have been desired. Through the influence of friends and a bribe, to one of the officials, he was released for a short time, but he was again imprisoned. He says that not only did the German doctors refuse to give treatment to British prisoners but the nurses also refuse to care for them. Mr. Lack's two little daughters received dental treatment from the teachers and other pupils at the Leipsig school which they attended, and he had to take them out of the school.

The German hatred to the British is demonstrated in several ways, and their suspicions are such that the British who were not imprisoned had to report to the proper officials twice a day, namely, at 9 o'clock in the morning and 2 o'clock in the afternoon. Contrast this with the fact that the French and Russians were compelled to report but twice a week, and at a time that was convenient. Some were able to get out of Germany by obtaining stolen passports. Mr. Lack interviewed a representative of The Intelligencer that he was to have his clothes to be exchanged. There are at the present time but very few Canadians in the country, he was finally allowed to leave Germany in company with a young Australian, their exchange being effected by two German officials who were prisoners of war being given for them. The Australian was in such a condition physically that he could hardly walk. At present he is in hospital in London, with no hopes for recovery. He is a victim of consumption. For five months he was in jail. Upon his arrival in London his condition was such that he could not proceed further.

Mr. Lack states that of the many warm friends he made in Leipsig all but one turned against him, and that German was an official and a member of the Town Council of Leipsig. Mr. Lack on the steamer Pyndom, of the Holland Line, from Rotterdam, and the steamer and those on board had some rather striking experiences. Much fare had to be exercised in guiding the steamer through the mine field outside of England. Off Borne the Pyndom was stopped by two British cruisers and boarded by British officers. Six German deserters were found on board who were endeavoring to reach America. They were, however, taken as prisoners of war. Outside of the English Channel and far out to sea Mr. Lack states that at intervals no less than 57 British merchant vessels were counted going to and from the United Kingdom, which refutes the German argument that British vessels are tied up. Several British torpedo boats were seen drifting about and offering every protection to commerce. New York was finally reached in safety. Here Mr. Lack had another experience which caused him considerable uneasiness. He had placed his two little girls on a fever boat which plies between New York and Hoboken, and while he was absent for a few minutes the ferry proceeded on its way. The children were unable to speak English. Upon the arrival of the ferry at its destination they were placed in a twilight shed, and it was soon noised around that two little German girls had been detained. Mr. Lack followed on another ferry in about ten minutes and the meeting between father and daughters was pathetic. When it was ascertained who they were and what they had done for their kind-hearted kindnesses of every description were showered upon them.

In speaking of the German women Mr. Lack stated that they generally were considered as a better class of servant girls and not looked upon as a companion of their husbands. He also referred to atrocities which had been committed by the German soldiers and which have been by no means exaggerated. He instanced one case of a ten year old girl being ordered to assist in killing some wounded German soldiers, because if she did not do so it would mean death to her. She was detected in the act of carrying out the order and was placed against a tree and riddled with bullets. Other instances of cruelty practiced he was able to substantiate.

In answer to a question as to the feeling in Holland, Mr. Lack stated that it was strongly British; in fact, people who could speak German were warned not to use that language upon the street. This feeling, he said, was largely due to the manner in which Belgium and the inhabitants of that country had been treated by the Germans.

Mr. Lack is not at all reticent about being interviewed, and in an affable manner is only too pleased to relate his experiences, which were varied and thrilling at times. He intends to remain in this city for some time.

TRAINING ARMY BANDSMEN

Great Britain is the only country which undertakes the systematic training of its army bandsmen, and the selection of the band of the Duke of Cambridge's Hussars to provide music for the new recruits is a reminder that the present high standard of British army bands is entirely due to the efforts of the late Duke of Cambridge. After peace was declared at the end of the Crimean War a reformance was given at Varna, in the Crimea, by the massed British bands there at the time, with results so painful that the Duke set to work at once to provide a proper training for the army musicians.

He enlisted a large number of officers in favor of the scheme, and with the money they subscribed he took over Kneller Hall, Hounslow, once the residence of the famous painter, Sir George Kneller, and established there the Military School of Music. For nearly twenty years the Duke carried on the school without any Government help, but in 1875 it was officially recognized, though it was not until within the last four years that the officers were relieved of the burden of supporting the bands of their regiments.

Good Recruiting Work

One hundred men of the 3rd Battalion of the 4th (City of London) Royal Fusiliers took part in a novel recruiting plan. For each recruit obtained they were offered a reward of 25 cents and twenty-four hours' leave of absence. They went from Barnet to London, and, divided into parties, stationed themselves at busy points of the Metropolis. One hundred recruits were secured, and eighty-nine passed the medical test. The rest secured nine recruits, and received an additional prize of $2.50.

Why British Cruiser Glasgow Sank the Dresden in Chilean Harbor

LONDON, April 16.—(Special)—The British Government has offered "a full and ample apology" to the Chilean Government for the sinking on March 14 in Chilean territorial waters of the German cruiser Dresden, the internment of which had already been ordered by the Maritime Governor of Cumberland Bay when the British squadron attacked and sank her.

This fact was made public last night in a White Paper, giving the texts of the Chilean note protesting against the sinking of the Dresden and the British Government's reply.

The note delivered by the Chilean Minister to Great Britain says that the Dresden had left Cumberland Bay for Juan Fernandez Islands March 9 and asked permission to remain eight days for the purpose of repairing her engines, which were said to be out of order. The Governor refused the request, as he considered it unfounded, and ordered the captain to leave the bay within 24 hours.

As the order was not complied with the captain of the Dresden was informed that his ship was interned.

Chile is Surprised

When the British squadron appeared on March 14, the Governor was proceeding to the cruiser Glasgow to inform the British officer of the steps he had taken, but he had to turn back, as the British ships opened fire on the Dresden, on which a flag of truce had already been hoisted, and called on her captain to surrender. The captain then gave orders to blow up the magazine of the Dresden.

"This act of hostility committed in Chilean territorial waters by a British naval squadron," says the Chilean Minister, "has painfully surprised my Government."

Continuing the Minister says that had the officer in command of the British squadron informed the Governor and had been informed that the Dresden was interned, he was convinced the British commander would not have opened fire on her and brought about a situation which constrains the Chilean Government, in defence of its sovereign rights, to formulate a most energetic protest."

After referring to the hospitality given British ships in Chilean waters and to the long friendship between the two peoples, the Minister says: "Nothing could be more painful surprise to us than to see our extremely cordial attitude repaid by an act which bears unfortunately all the characteristics of contempt for our sovereign rights, although it is probable that nothing was further from the mind of those by whom it was unthinkingly committed."

Britain Expresses Regret

The British Government, in its reply, expresses regret that a misunderstanding arose, and adds: "On the facts as stated in the communication of the Chilean Minister, the British Government is prepared to offer a full and ample apology to the Chilean Government."

Russian Orders On Cash Basis

How Great Britain and France are Assisting Financing Operations

MONTREAL, April 13.—Although there has not as yet been a very large amount of purchasing by the Russian Government effected in this country, there has been sufficient to cause considerable discussion, regarding the terms of payment the Government at Petrograd was willing to do business on. It is generally known that considerable difficulty was experienced early in the war by purchasing agents of the Russian Government in doing business in the United States, first, on account of their being a market for Russian Government notes in that country, and, second, on account of very few American firms wishing to close business on that basis.

It will be remembered that some time ago a Russian Government credit of $25,000,000 was arranged by J. P. Morgan & Company at New York, and only a few days ago it was announced that the governments of Great Britain and France had arranged to establish a further large credit in New York, to be used for purchases of war materials by the Russians.

The delay in completing the latter step was explained yesterday by local man, recently returned from New York, where he secured it on the highest authority. There is a market for English notes in both England and French exchanges. Russia, therefore, looked to these countries to provide the necessary funds required for purchases in the United States, and England and France were willing to fulfill this desire on certain conditions. Previous to the war the greater quantity of Russian foreign trade was secured by German merchants, despite a high tariff. There will be enormous quantities of all kinds of materials required after the close of hostilities, and all nations will strive to secure portions of this immense business which formerly went to German firms. United States already has taken steps in this direction which, it successful, would mean an important outlet for American made goods.

According to the New York story the governments of France and England requested Russia to agree to a preferential tarif to the Allied countries, to become effective after the end of the war. If this is correct it will mean that after the close of hostilities French and British manufacturers will have no difficulty in securing a very large proportion of the foreign imports of Russia formerly secured by Germany, and at the same time leave a comfortable margin to compete against American firms.

Not long ago one of Canada's leading companies turned down Russian business on account of the terms of payment being in "part government notes. But on the other hand a large contract recently placed in this country called for cash payment only, and will be executed entirely on that basis.

A preferential tarif to firms within the British Empire will be reflected not in this country's exports to Russia, especially as cheap transportation is possible via the Panama Canal.

New York papers say it has that the advance to the Russian Government of $25,000,000 made by J. P. Morgan & Company carried the guarantee of Great England and France. It is said that this was insisted on before the money was placed to the credit of Russia in the United States.

CANADA TO THE RESCUE.

Canada, which is a very long way from being a militarist country, now has 101,500 men under arms, of whom 50,000 actually are at the present time, or will be within a few days, at the scene of conflict in France and Belgium. There were only 71,850,000 males of 21 and upwards, of Canadian or British birth in this Dominion at the time of the 1911 census, and the total is certainly not more than 2,000,000, at the present time; so that one man in every twenty of the non-foreign-born adults of Canada is placing his life at the disposal of his King.

This, says Beck's Weekly, is a thoroughly creditable showing, for a country which has never been engaged in actual warfare itself since the day when it was formed into a Confederation (in the South African War it merely enlisted troops who were maintained by the British Government), and which has been far too busy with the struggle against the forces of nature to devote much time to preparing itself, for the struggle with human foes. Not only are we providing a creditable number of men, but those men are behaving themselves in a most creditable manner.

The whole growth of the war and of modern warfare is illustrated in making a comparison from one end of the land to the other. Its strike is a reversion for the people.

A London newspaper is authority for the statement that Government is considering a plan for a state monopoly of all alcoholic beverages. Premier Asquith and his advisers believe they will succeed in advancing temperance by a method which Russia has found to be a failure?

Toronto Star: "Some men make money in farming. An Essex farmer got $1,300 for his eighteen acres of tobacco and $1,100 for his five acres of tobacco. It is news like this that encourages a city man to go out behind the house and dig a place where he can put in a dozen tomato plants."

Mail and Empire: "Sir John French says the British lads can break through the German line if they have the ammunition. A million and a half of British troops are holding a 40-mile front. Dante's Inferno will not be in the same class as that in which the Germans will be placed when the British really begin in advance."

According to M. Jules Finot, editor of "La Revue," the bill which the Allies will demand from Germany amounts to $34,000,000,000, or $500 each from every man, woman and child in Germany. We would suggest that that many memories Kipling's poem, "The Absent Minded Beggar," especially the line "Pay! Pay! Pay!"

Montreal Gazette: "The hotel employee who assaulted the editor of the Standard Journal in his office because he objected to the latter's support of prohibition adopted a wild method of pioneer days that has no place in Eastern Townships life today. Blows delivered in such circumstances act as a boomerang, hurting the cabman's employer as much as the striker more than the object of the assault."

Toronto Globe: "The man who serves as Minister of the Interior in this country during a boom period and leaves office poorer than he was when he entered it needs no certificate of his honesty. Had Mr. Oliver been disposed to turn his eyes and let the country's land go to the men who would repay the respect he would have guided along the road that leads to easy wealth, Mr. Oliver is poor. That tells the whole story." Poor Frank!

An Ontario Liberal newspaper says it is a fair statement to say that no graft or corruption was brought to light in connection with the purchase of horses or supplies in Canada during the first year of the War. The idea, of course, is to make out that the Liberals are honest of that day was composed of men more honorable and patriotic than those now guiding the ship of state. Unfortunately for this defence, the public still has vivid memories of the many mistakes made at the time by the then administration, and of big graft in connection with supplies. There was a "sawdust" energite, for instance, one thing. And there was no such searching for truth as has marked the present Public Accounts Committee's investigation of war purchases.

CURRENT COMMENT

Toronto Globe: "The Toronto mayor who comes back from the front blockaded with bullet-ridden shrapnel would have done his bit. It is perhaps as well he did not fall into the hands of the Germans. They might have nailed him down to recover the metal."

The Canadian Senate may be a quiet and deliberate body, but amid the turmoil of the world war and in the midst of internecine revolutions it is making itself felt from one end of the land to the other. Its strike is a reversion for the people.

Russia Double Strengthens Arms

Calls to Old Colors all Men from 20 to 35 She Did not Need Before

PETROGRAD, April 15.—An imperial order promulgated today calls up throughout the empire for training all those who were liable to serve but were entered at once into the reserve in the year 1900 to the present year, both inclusive. A similar summons to the colors has appeared twice before, but was confined to certain provinces.

As 800,000 annually taken into the army a lesser proportion of the total of men attaining service age it is obvious that the present measure enables her almost to double her present forces. Moreover, the oldest men summoned by this order are only 35 years of age and the youngest 20.

They include rejected men of the first contingent, and certain classes exempted for family reasons. They are all men without any military training and will get this before being drafted into the army.

EXCITING AERIAL CHASE

Frenchman Finally Brought German to the Earth

BORDEAUX, April 15.—The tale of an exciting chase in the air and a battle at an altitude of over 3,000 feet between a French aeroplane and a German aeroplane machine, in which the French aviator was victorious, was related here today by Lieut. Chambres, the observer on the French machine.

The pursuit began at Rheims, according to Lieut. Chambre, and lasted until the aircraft reached Chalons, an approximate distance of 25 miles. The Germans used over 100 quick-firer cartridges without doing further damage than to pierce the wings of the French machine. The eleventh shot fired by the French aviator caused the German aeroplane to fall, and on reaching the ground it caught fire. The German officers escaped injury and were taken prisoners.

GOES TO SUPREME COURT

Manitoba Election Case of Kildonan-St. Andrews

WINNIPEG April 15.—The solicitors for Hon. W. H. Montague, minister of public works, announce the Kildonan-St. Andrew's election case will be taken to the Supreme Court at Ottawa.

This is under the authority of the statute passed at the last session of the Legislature of Manitoba.

The election of Dr. Montague was protested at the usual time, but the case was carried through without any particular interest. Montague for obvious reasons, the chief of which was the fact that he was in the constituency until the time of the election. A few days ago the Manitoba Court of Appeals decided that Dr. Montague had not, that the case should be thrown out, was not sensible and that the case should go to trial.

$400 Cash For Walking Stick

TORONTO, April 15.—While the ordinary common or garden variety of walking cane undergoes considerable loss, there are other sticks which sometimes run up to thousands of dollars, as the Canadian Pacific Railway has discovered.

Included in a shipment of household effects from Calgary to Toronto was a stick of oak cut by Rob Burns from the cottage of Bobbie Burns.

There was a soft spot in damages in which the C.P.R. entered the owner, James Mitchell, one dollar for the stick or oak in question, but as now finally settled for four hundred dollars cash.

AMERICANS WANT WORK IN ENGLAND

NEW YORK, April 15.—Sir Courtenay W. Bennett, British Consul-General here, in a statement last night declared that the demands made upon knowledge of recent legislation passed to have compulsory work or relief be sent to their countries to Great Britain to take the places of industrial establishments of those who are at the front. In connection with the report it was stated that 500 workmen already had sailed for England. Sir Courtenay said he has been deluged with calls, but that he knows nothing of the proposed arrangements.

Diver Discovers Lost Submarine

HONOLULU, April 15—Chief Gunner's Mate Frank Crilley, went 398 feet under water here yesterday and walked along the top of the submarine F-4, which disappeared March 25. The depth is said by naval officers to be a world's diving record.

Crilley found the F-4 in a smooth, sandy bottom with no coral growth to impede hoisting operations. She lay on her starboard side, her bow pointing shoreward. Two parted lines were found attached to the craft. After Crilley reported it was said further observations probably would be made before an attempt is made to raise the F-4.

Crilley went down in an ordinary diving suit with the recompression chamber designed to reduce pressure on the diver was not used.

$125,000,000 OF WHEAT

LONDON, April 15.—During the past fortnight the Government has bought £25,000,000 worth of wheat in Argentina. The purchases have been made by the merchants in this country, some of whom have completely given up their own business to act for the Government. Large purchases have also been made in North America.

Fraud Exposed By Premier

Explosive Mystery Should be Under Suspicion

OTTAWA, April 12.—Sir Robert Borden made a most important statement to the House today in regard to the Public Accounts Committee inquiry. As the closest of his many secretaries, Mr. Hall, a commission of one man or three? would be the biggest, most effective and most expensive of these which could be secured, would be appointed to investigate all purchases for the militia department for the remainder of the war would be appointed. Sir Robert condemned in vigorous language the two Conservative Members of Parliament who have been linked up with Government purchases: Arthur Lewis Foster, M.P., for Kings, N.S., and W. F. Garland, member for Carleton, Ont.

Sir Robert said that the Militia Department was never organized for the work cast upon it during the past year.

"I have seen officers of the department and especially the director of contracts, in a state of exhaustion that was really pitiable," I asked the Minister of Militia if he could not reorganize the department even during the war in order to protect the health of the officials were there working 18 hours a day and on Sundays, but the stress was so great that they were absolutely submerged and could not reorganize. The inspection of war supplies for British and the allies increased their duties but it could not be helped.

"We know there are some men who, even in time of war, seek to make undue profit out of the Government when other people are straining every effort to help and are making every sacrifice. But that is true in every country."

Premier Sent for Foster.

The Prime Minister then took up what he said was a most unpleasant duty. He referred to the conduct of Mr. Garland (Carleton), and Mr. Foster (Kings).

"I sent for Mr. Foster," he said, "and asked him his connection with the purchase of horses and why he allowed himself to be appointed."

He said Mr. Foster explained that he depended largely on the apple crop which was a failure last year and the people thought that they should be purchasing there, rather than in parts where conditions were better. He went to Col. Neil, principal veterinary officer, who said that horses were being purchased elsewhere. The next day he informed him that the horses were worth 60 at Yarmouth and asked Mr. Foster to get them with the least possible delay.

"Mr. Foster is a very young man and inexperienced in business. He did not make a profit, but I am bound to say his explanation of his undertaking that duty and his explanation, if it can be called an explanation, of his failure to provide supervision and bring back vouchers for the money paid out was far from satisfactory."

Referring to Mr. Garland, Sir Robert said Powell was employed by him and was not only permitted but encouraged and assisted in making the contracts with the Government by which he made $9,000 in a few weeks.

"I cannot for a moment give any sanction, direct or indirect, to conduct of that character. It certainly arouses suspicion—and every member of Parliament should keep above suspicion.

"So, as to those members, I feel I owe it as a duty to the Government of which I am the head, to the party of which I am the leader, and to this House and the country to express very grave disapproval of the manners in which they were concerned and which were under investigation in the Public Accounts Committee."

HELD FOR ASSAULT

SHERBROOKE, Que., April 15.—Joseph Healey, of Derby Line was yesterday by Judge Mathews on a charge of assaulting J. C. Holland, editor of the Stanstead Journal. The alleged assault occurred last Friday, and was the result of the recent noiseless campaign carried on here and more particularly of an editorial in the editor's paper. Healey pleaded not guilty and was bound over for trial at the next sessions of the Court of King's Bench, being allowed in two sureties of $200 each.

As a more physical task it should take Japan a century or two to swallow China.

ELDERLY PEOPLE SHOULD TAKE VINOL

Aged Texas Woman Says: "Old People Who Are Weak and Feeble Should Know the Merits of Vinol."

Grand Saline, Texas.—"I am an aged woman, and for years I have been weak and feeble, but I have found Vinol to be the best medicine to create strength for old people and for chronic colds I have ever taken. It has restored my health and strength so that I feel almost young again; in fact, I am now doing all my own housework.

"Old people who are weak and feeble should try Vinol and know its merits as I do. I have proved it a good reliable medicine and much cheaper than paying doctor's bills, and you may publish what I say about Vinol for the benefit of others."—Mrs. Fannie E. Rogers, Grand Saline, Texas.

Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic, sharpens appetite, aids digestion, enriches the blood, building up natural strength and energy.

We have seen such splendid results from the use that we refund the money in every case where Vinol fails to build up and strengthen feeble old people, delicate children and run-down persons, run-down and debilitated, or stop chronic colds, coughs or bronchitis.

Nihilism Dead In Russia Says Toronto Broker

Stories Exaggerated by Germans to Prejudice British Against Their Allies

LONDON, April 16.—Nihilism does not exist in Russia today, and at all times has been exaggerated, declared Asmilius Jarvis, the Toronto broker and capitalist, who has returned to London from a trip to Petrograd and Moscow. He added that the Russian officials attributed the highly-colored stories of the Nihilistic type to German sources, the underlying desire being to create prejudice among the liberty-loving British against their present Allies. Mr. Jarvis was profoundly impressed with the far-reaching and beneficial results of the prohibition of vodka, and cited figures showing the striking increase in savings bank deposits, and the decreased mortality, returns since the national vice was banished.

As president of the Canadian Locomotive Works, Mr. Jarvis went to Russia on the lookout for business, but he found that the Russian Government wheels revolved very slowly. The locomotives which he wished to make for the Government were badly needed, and had been requisitioned for, but the orders had a tendency to stick at the Treasury Department. The journey to Russia, via Bergen and Finland, brings travellers with in sixty miles of the Arctic circle.

Kaiser is Angry With the U. S.

"Are You Neutral or are You Our Enemy?" Asks German Newspaper

AMSTERDAM, April 15.—The Hamburger Nachrichten, commenting on the German memorandum to the State Department at Washington, declares the United States allows Japan to act as she pleases, and supplies her with all war material she requires and continues.

"Many a one who had to observe this procedure of the United States and witness the talks of Japan. The anger created in Europe is greater than the people over there allow themselves to imagine.

"Our Foreign Office has now found the right language against France, against England, and, without any sort of consideration, against the United States, too.

"With consideration and forbearance we get no further forward. The German people will gradually finish with their declared enemies, although tremendous efforts will be required, but behind them stand other enemies, who pretend to be neutral and claim from us the rights of neutrality, together with every consideration, but nevertheless continuously and zealously support our enemies and assist them in their war against us.

"It is time that a strong word went to Washington. It will be polite, but its meaning can only be 'Are you neutral or are you our enemy?'"

55 MILES AN HOUR ON NEW YORK STREET

NEW YORK, April 15.—Benjamin Jackson, a lawyer was instantly killed in Central Park today, when the automobile in which he was riding alone crashed into a large tree on the side of the driveway. His speedometer, the only part of the automobile which was not wrecked, showed that he was riding at the rate of 55 miles an hour. The wreckage under which Mr. Jackson was pinner caught fire almost immediately. He was burned when extricated.

Inhaled Gas In Rooming House

Apparently Deliberate Suicide of C.P.R. Employee on Beverly Street

TORONTO, April 15.—Fred Coulter was discovered asphyxiated in bed at 11 o'clock this morning at 76 Beverley street. A tube was inserted in his mouth and connected with the gas jet. The discovery was made by James Coombes, who was attracted to the room by the odor of gas. Coulter was undressed, and near him on the table were two letters, evidently written last night. One was addressed to his landlady, Mrs. G. Altman, and contained a $10 bill, and a note on which was written "room rent." He had he stayed for another few days and that he would have owed would have been $2 for one week's rent. The other letter was addressed to the police, requesting that his name be not inserted in the newspapers for fear that his parents would learn of his death. He asked that all his money be handed over to his brother, who is a public accountant in Montreal. He gave no reason for his act.

Coulter had been employed as a checker on the C.P.R., and was liberally supplied with money. He came from Colden, Ontario, several years ago, and roomed at the house on Beverley street for the past eighteen months. About a year ago he became sick with rheumatism in the knee, and was confined to the General Hospital for over eight months. He underwent an operation, and when he came out of the hospital three months ago he was lame. The body is at the morgue.

Easy Divorce Again

Reno Holds Demonstration Over Signing of Six Months, Residence Bill

RENO, Nev., April 15.—Reno celebrated last night the passage of the "easy" divorce bill," which Gov. Boyle signed February 23, restoring the six months' residence requirement. The celebration was to welcome the new divorce colony, which already numbers 100 and is augmented daily. All the cafes had special features, realing up from the familiar cakewalk to serpentine novelties and hula hoola dances. All the new and rivals were out in force, doing their best to give Reno a revival of the "good old days."

Last night's ceremonies were the climax of a long fight to restore easy divorce and its resultant prosperity to Reno. Gov. Boyle signed the new "easy divorce bill" almost exactly two years after Gov. Oddie signed the Barnes amendment making one year's residence imperative, which killed the divorce industry here.

Clergymen and women fought the new bill. Special trains brought delegations from both sides to the State Capitol, and a hot fight was waged.

During the two years previous to the passage of the Barnes amendment 1,238 suits were filed in Reno, a city of 12,000 population. The divorce colony was seldom smaller than 500. The average cost of a Reno divorce has been estimated at $2,500 exclusive of "entertainment and sundries."

FARMHOUSE FIRE TRAGEDY

Farmer, Wife and Baby Went to Their Deaths

SASKATOON, April 15.—Fire took three to death in a farmhouse, 19 miles from Watrous, on Wednesday morning, when Sam Elliott, his wife and baby lost their lives. The fire started in a smouldering strawstack and found its way to the house. Mr. Elliott managed to rescue his wife and child from the flames. Returning to save some clothing the roof collapsed as he entered the house and crushed him amid the blazing timbers. His wife, with her baby, was waiting in a nearby slough to which the husband had removed them, and, after all hope had gone, took her way to a neighbor's house. So badly were they burned, their night dresses being practically consumed, that the baby died in a few minutes after reaching a friendly roof, while Mrs. Elliott succumbed the following day.

Stricken at Work Died in an Hour

Foreman at Harris Abattoir Never Recovered Consciousness After Attack

TORONTO, April 15.—An hour after he collapsed while at work in the Harris Abattoir Plant, Front street east, Mr. Fred Blackford, foreman of the cold storage plant, died at the Western Hospital at 2.30 this morning. The cause of his death has not yet been determined, and an inquest may be likely. Mr. Blackford appeared to be in good health when he arrived at work. While attending to his duties he was heard to give a cry, and throwing up his hands fell to the ground. A doctor was summoned and the sick man was rushed to the hospital in Bates and Dodds' ambulance. He never recovered consciousness, however, and died an hour later.

Deceased was thirty-one years old and resided at 320 Bloor avenue. He was married.

NEARLY DROWNED BOY

Lad Was Thrown in River for a Movie Scene

HACKENSACK, April 15.—Councilman Harold F. Meyrle, of Maywood, is making an effort to determine the name of the moving picture company that enacted a feature sensational scene at the Rapid street bridge over the Saddle River, took this afternoon and came near drowning a little boy who was deliberately thrown into ten feet of cold water. A big Newfoundland dog was trained into the water and supposed to bring the boy ashore. The dog did not like its work and the boy sank, twice. An autoist stopped near the bridge and denounced the men of the movie company, one of whom plunged into the water without removing his clothes in time to save the exhausted child. The little fellow was wrapped in blankets and taken away in an auto.

"I think such action at this time of the year is outrageous, and I will have the Children's Society take action if I can locate the company," said Councilman Mayrle.

A WAR OFFICE DENIAL

France is Not Using Churches for Military Purposes

PARIS, April 15.—Denial of the German charges that churches and other public buildings in Paris and Troyes were being used for military purposes is contained in an official statement issued last night by the War Office. The communication says:

"A German communication of April 12 states that the cathedrals of Paris and Troyes, as well as the principal public buildings such as the national museums, the Invalides, banks and the Louvre have been provided with military searchlights, wireless stations and quick-fliers. It would be difficult to find a more striking example of the false allegations contained daily in German communications."

KINGSTON, Ont., April 15—Special—Charles Brothers, who it is announced was killed in action with the British expeditionary force in France, resided in Kingston for some years. After the South African War, in which he served, he came to Canada, and served in the R.C.H.A.

It has been said that the Sultan of Turkey was not sufficiently scared to forget to take his harem with him when he started to run.

The King's Stratagem

Courage is Common in This War

LONDON, April 16.—Every English man knows how little regard the British Scotch and English soldiers pay to bayonets, or cold steel, as it is known on drum parade. It is the one gun taken and die in the trench-to-trench fighting that is the delight that our ever-ready goes out to meet. There are instances of these how-steel the battle lines were used in the first without the slightest intention and good pure blood to with stand the deprivations and hardships of the campaign in Belgium and France. It's a warning that we should have a method to stop shooting and kill blood. If one is all out of sorts, should take an Extravagant and alterative such as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which cures diseases of the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition. It eliminates from the blood disease breeding poisons. It makes the blood rich, pure and fortifies a foundation for sound physical health. Fifty years ago, Dr. Pierce, of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, at Buffalo, N.Y., found that certain herbs and roots manufactured by using Glycerine without the use of alcohol or habit forming drugs into a concentrated extract, which he called Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, made a stimulating tonic for the stimulation of the food and digestive stomach, helped the digestion and apposons from the blood. This is nature's cure for indigestion, and by correcting the stomach, and thereby feeding the blood on pure nourishing food, blood corpuscles are increased and the body established in a healthy state. Those who suffers from catarrh who has plenty of red blood corpuscles and a good digestion. Catarrh is all the result of a stagnation of the blood. Introduce pure red blood into the system by taking the "Medical Discovery" and health is assured.—Adv.

"Therefore I cannot give up Lisguy, and I must acquit myself of my debt to the Captain of Crecance in the only way which remains"—replied the young man, firmly. "Death is not so hard that I would not meet it twice over, rather than again betray my trust."

"This is midsummer madness" said the king lustily.

"Possibly," replied the vicomte, without emotion; "yet of a kind to which your Majesty is not altogether a stranger."

The words appealed strongly to that love of the chivalrous which is part of the king's nature, and was one cause alike of his weakness and his strength, which in its more extravagant flights gave occasion for bitter opportunity to his enemies, in its nobler and saner expressions won victories which all his astuteness and diplomacy could not have compassed. He stood looking with half-hidden admiration at the man whom two minutes before he had displaced.

"I think you are in jest", he said presently.

"No, sire", the young man answered gravely. "In my country they have a proverb about us. 'The Lanthenors,' say they, 'have always been bad players, but good players.' I will not be the first to be worse than my name."

He spoke with so quiet a determination that the king was staggered, and for a minute or two peered the room in silence, inwardly cursing the coercive obstinacy of his weak-kneed supporter, yet unable to withhold his admiration from it. At length he stopped, with a low, abrupt exclamation.

"Come, sir, go, if you choose look for another master. I am ruined! Do you hear? Ruined, Gil! I have not another crown."

He spoke with so quiet a determination that the king was staggered, and for a minute or two peered the room in silence, inwardly cursing the coercive obstinacy of his weak-kneed supporter, yet unable to withhold his admiration from it. At length he stopped, with a low, abrupt exclamation.

"Come, sir, go, if you choose look for another master. I am ruined! Do you hear? Ruined, Gil! I have not another crown."

"Then we shall say the following day-night," added the captain.

"Very well."

"We quite understand one another", continued the sinner, eyeing his late watchfulness, and speaking with more urgency. "I may depend on you, M. le Vicomte, I presume?"

"The Lanthenors have never been anything but loyal", the young nobleman answered, stung into sudden haughtiness. "If I live I will put Lisguy into your hands, M. le Capitaine. Afterward I will do my best to recover it—to another way."

"I shall be entirely at your disposal", replied the captain, bowing lightly. And in a moment he was alone—alone with his triumph, his chagrin, the hope of the future—alone with the greatness to which his capture of Lisguy was to be the first step, and which he should enjoy not a whit less because as yet fortune had dealt out to him more blows than caresses, and he was still at forty, after a score of years of roughest service, the governor of a paltry country town.

Meanwhile, in the darkness of the narrow street the vicomte was making his way to his lodgings in a state of indignation unhappily unable of full description. Chilled, sobered and benighted he looked back and saw how he had thrown for all and lost all, how he had saved the degree of his fortune at the expense of his loyalty, how he had seen a way of escape and let it forever. No wonder that as he trudged alone through the mud and darkness of the sleeping town his breath came quickly and his chest heaved, and he looked from side to side as a hunted animal might, uttering great sighs. Ah, if he could only have retraced the last three hours!

Worn out and exhausted, he entered his lodging, and, securing the door behind him stumbled up the stone stairs and entered his room. The impulse to confide his misfortune to someone was so strong upon him that he was glad to see a dark form half sitting, half lying in a chair before the dying embers of a wood fire. For those days a man's natural confidant was his valet, the follower, half friend, half-servant, who had been born on his estate, who lay on a pallet at the foot of his bed, who carried his bitterness and held his cheek at the needle, who rode near his stirrup in fight and nursed him in illness, who not seldom advised him in the choice of a wife, and lied in support of his suit.

The young vicomte flung his cloak over a chair. "Get up, you rascal", he cried impatiently. "You pig, you dog!" he continued, with increasing anger, "Sleeping there as though your master was not ruined by that scoundrel of a Breton! Bah!" he added, gazing bitterly at his follower, "you are of the canaille, and have neither honor to lose nor a town to betray!"

The sleeping man moved in his chair and half turned. The vicomte, his patience exhausted, snatched the bonnet from his head, and threw it on the ground. "Will you listen, sir, or will you go, if you choose look for another master. I am ruined! Do you hear? Ruined, Gil! I have not another crown."

The man, aroused at last, stooped with a lazy movement, and picking up his hat dusted it with his hand, and rose with a yawn to his feet.

"I am afraid, vicomte", he said, in a voice which was deep and full, but which like thunder in the vicomte's astonished and bewildered ears, "I am afraid that if you have lost Lisguy, you have lost something which was not yours to lose?"

As he spoke he struck the embers with his foot, and the fire blazed up, alone on his face. The vicomte saw, with unutterable confusion and dismay, that the man before him was not his valet, but the last person in the world to whom he should have betrayed himself. The astute smiling face, the sensitive nose, the long, pointed beard, and projecting chin, which held, and projecting chin, which the short beard and mustache scarcely concealed, were only too well known to him. He stepped back with a cry of horror. "Sire" he said, and then his tongue failed him. His arms fell to his sides, and his chin on his breast. The man to whom he had confessed his treachery was the master to whom he had conspired to betray.

"I had suspected something of this", Henry of Navarre continued, with a slight tinge of irony in his tone. "Rosny told me that that old fool, the Captain of Crecance, was in correspondence with a good deal, M. le Vicomte, and I find that, as usual, his suspicions were well founded. What with a gentleman who shall be nameless, who has bartered a lord and a castle for the favor of Mlle. de Luynes, and yourself, I see that I have some faithful followers! For shame!" he continued, seating himself with dignity, "have you nothing to say for yourself?"

The young noble stood with his head bowed, his face white. This was ruin, indeed, suddenly, irretrievable ruin. "Sire", he said at last, "your Majesty has a right to my life, not to my honor."

"And honor!" quoth Henry, biting contempt in his tone.

The young man started, and for a moment his chest heaved under the well-deserved reproach; but he recovered himself. "My debt to your Majesty", he said, "I am willing to pay."

"Since you you must", Henry muttered coldly.

"But I claim to pay also my debt to the Captain of Crecance."

"Oh", the king answered. "So you would have me take your worthless life, and give up Lisguy?"

"I am in your hands, sire."

"Pish, sir!" Henry replied in sharp astonishment. "You talk like a child. Such an offer M. de Lanthenors is, by-by, and you know it. Not hands to me. It was unlucky for you that I came in to-night, intending to question you. Your rashness is equaled only by your folly. I can forgive you nothing. Therefore, take heart, you shall be between you and me only", the young prince continued, his eyes softening as the other's head drooped, "and you need think no more of it until the day when I shall say to you, 'Now, M. de Lanthenors, for France and for Henry, strike!'"

He rose as the last word passed his lips, and held out his hand. The vicomte fell on one knee, and kissed it fervently; then sprang to his feet again. "Sire", he said, standing erect, his eyes shining, "you have punished me hardly, more hardly than was needful. There is only one way in which I can show my gratitude, and that is by ridding you of a servant who can never again look your enemies in the face."

"What new folly is this?" said Henry sternly. "Do you not understand that I have forgiven you?"

"Sire, I cannot", replied the vicomte, without emotion; "yet of a kind to which your Majesty is not altogether a stranger."

"Therefore I cannot give up Lisguy, and I must acquit myself of my debt to the Captain of Crecance in the only way which remains"—replied the young man, firmly. "Death is not so hard that I would not meet it twice over, rather than again betray my trust."

ARE HOWITZERS FAILURES?

Ponderous Weapons Too Heavy For Field Use—Soon Wear Out

Are the much-vaunted German howitzers, like the Zeppelins, huge failures? Experts are inclined to answer this question in the affirmative, for little has been heard of the doings of these mighty engines of death since the early days of the war, when they caused a sensation by crumbling like eggshells the steel forts at Liege and Namur. It is confidently believed in military circles that the Germans have discovered that their 100-ton howitzers are altogether too ponderous to be of use in ordinary field warfare. They have to be dragged so slowly across country that they cannot keep pace with an army, and should their mechanism go wrong they cannot be repaired in the field, but have to be trundled back to the factory at Essen. After firing a dozen of its 5-foot shells the howitzer practically disarms by rifling in the barrel, and the weapon has to be returned to the repair shop for an overhaul. A German big gun is a mass of mechanism, and possesses such apparatus as hydraulic brakes to lock the wheels before firing takes place, great platens to elevate the stumpy barrel, hydraulic jacks to support the gun when in action, and all manner of electrical contrivances for igniting the bursting charge when the gun crew have retired to a spot 50 feet away to be safe from the ammunitic disturbance created by the discharge of the weapon. It is not surprising that some of this delicate machinery smashes nearly every time the howitzer recoils—its 1.6 pound shell on its nine mile journey through space.

Over rough country it is almost impossible for a howitzer to travel at any speed, and the only way it can be quickly transported is by rail or road the massive howitzer is in action it is accompanied by an armored ammunition wagon, a sleeping car for the gun crew, and a crane for hoisting shells, which brings the total weight of the equipment up to 70 tons. It is obvious that few bridges would prove sufficiently strong to allow such weighty vehicles to be trundled across them, and on a good road the massive howitzer is in a sorry a plight as a traction engine would be in a quagmire.

Native Heroism

If proof were needed of the loyalty of Britain's native troops in Africa and their attachment to their white officers, it would be found in an incident which occurred in Nairobi. "Our native troops," writes a corporal in the Royal Engineers, "seem to have no fear; in fact, they are extremely fond of their white officers. Lieutenant Oldfield, killed at Tsavo, having come right on to the muzzle of a Maxim, four of his native askaris threw themselves in front to try to save him. The whole party was instantly riddled."

39th Battalion's Weekly Smoker

The 39th Battalion's weekly smoker outgrew its old meeting place in the Drill Hall and the last night the City Hall was used for this purpose. At 7 o'clock the moving picture operator started his machine and for an hour and a quarter the soldiers watched the movie artists perform. Col. Preston then arrived, and the musical programme started with a bang. Those from the Battalion taking part were: Corporal Harman, Lance-Corporal McGregor, Sergt. Major Pitts, Allen, Lord, Scrivner, McNorton, Farrow, Gummer with Pte. Fallis as pianist, all of whom numbers were received with enthusiasm; but the one who won the greatest favor of applause was Miss Anna Ponton, whose rendering of "Soldiers of the King", and "Marjory Green" brought forth such a volume of clapping, shouts and whistles as to make the cats ring. During the course of the evening it was announced that similar concerts would be held in the City Hall on Friday evening, April 23rd, and Lieut. Mrs. Allen had kindly consented to provide the greater part of the programme for the coming (Thursday) also that on Sunday evenings a meeting for soldiers would be held in the City Hall. Col. Preston voiced the sentiment of the gathering when he said that the Battalion was indebted to Mr. Scott the lessee of the hall, for the considerate manner in which he had given the use of the place of meeting.

Gladstone's Heir Dies For Cause

Late Lieut. W. G. Gladstone Was Extremely Popular in House of Commons

LONDON, April 16.—Special.—The Chronicle's Parliamentary correspondent, referring to the death in action of Lieut. William Glynne Charles Gladstone, M.P., grandson of the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, says: "Lieut. Gladstone's death came as a heavy blow to his friends, though I believe to some of them he expressed a presentiment that he would never see London again. He was universally popular, unusually successful, for a young member, in debate, and the trusted confidant of members of other parties besides his own, especially the Irish, who had a warm affection for him.

"He became a prominent figure in the House almost at the moment he entered it, and few members of his age were better known in the lobby. Partly, of course, this prominence was due to his great name, but more, I think, to his aptitude, which was no doubt inherited, for the life of the Commons. Gladstone always knew when to speak, and he had the knack of telling the mood of the House. He was pre-eminently a House of Commons man. I do not think he ever had to undergo the ordeal so common with beginners, and with many who are not beginners, of having to speak to empty benches. At the great convention at Dublin which accepted the home rule bill he was the only English speaker, and there again the exception of his speech was for the speech itself and not because the speaker's name was Gladstone. Though his loss is a heavy one his friends cannot help but be proud that the first Liberal member of Parliament killed in action in the fight for liberty and the small small nationality should be the grandson and heir of the protagonist of that cause in Europe."

Mr. Gladstone was 29 years old. He was a liberal member of the House of Commons for the Kilmarnock Burghs since 1911. At one time Mr. Gladstone was an honorary attache of the British Embassy at Washington.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the Northwest Territories and a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 640 acres will be leased to one applicant.

GERMAN FLEET'S REFUGE

All of Kaiser's Warships Can be Accommodated in Kiel Canal

Kiel Canal is sixty-one miles long from its entrance at Brunsbüttel on the North Sea to its exit at Kiel Bay, on the Baltic.

The German people are very proud of their canal, and there was great rejoicing when it was opened in 1895 by the present Emperor, and named by him the Kaiser Wilhelm Canal in memory of his grandfather.

Although the canal was principally intended for military purposes, the needs of merchant vessels were not forgotten. The passage was made wide enough and deep enough to allow two of the largest liners of the time to pass each other with ease and safety, and the voyage to Russian ports has been shortened considerably by the use of the canal.

There is accommodation in the immense docks within the canal for the whole German fleet, and there are also navy yards, docks and floating docks, by means of which repairs can be executed with great despatch.

Lloyd George's Speeches

It has been said of Mr. Lloyd George that he speaks staccato. This is a great extent is true. Examine any of his speeches and you will find in them many sentences of less than a dozen words, and they are the currency of international statesmanship. Poor old mailed fist. Its knuckles are getting a trifle bruised. "Courage in defeat, moderation in victory, in all things humility." Such are the apt phrases with which Mr. Lloyd George punctuates his speeches.

OFFER TO EVACUATE BELGIUM FOR PEACE WITH GERMANY

AMSTERDAM, April 16.—(Special)—The Rome correspondent of The Tijd says the German embassy in Rome has asked the Belgian Government, through the Belgian legation to Italy, whether, if the event of the German armies evacuating Belgian territory, Belgium would remain neutral during the remainder of the war. The correspondent adds that Belgium's answer is unknown.

Britain Grants U.S. Privilege of German Dyes

Blockade Raised on Two Shipments Must be Shipped From Rotterdam Under Neutral Flags

WASHINGTON April 15.—Secretary Bryan announced this afternoon that arrangements had been completed with the British Governments by which two shipments of dyestuffs might be shipped from Germany to the United States without interference by British warships charged with the enforcement of the British Order in Council against trade with Germany.

The action of the British Government follows an agreement by the German Government to release two such shipments of dyestuffs from the German embargo. These shipments were contracted for and paid for before the Order in Council became operative by the delivery into Germany of two shipments of cotton sent from this country to Germany on the steamers Guantanamo and City of Savannah.

The dyestuffs must be shipped on vessels flying a neutral flag and must be shipped from Rotterdam, a neutral port, like Amsterdam, a German port. They must be consigned in "care of" Secretary Redfield of the Department of Commerce for distribution to the associations in the Textile Alliance.

In the matter of the two shipments Germany stipulated that this Government must give a guarantee against re-exportation of the dyestuffs. Secretary Redfield will take bonds from the Textile Association both against re-exportation and to insure proper distribution of the consignments.

Officials of the State Department were prepared tonight to take up with the German Government the last step necessary to supply American textile millers with the two cargoes of German dyestuffs. The position taken by the German Government has been that it would permit shipment of dyestuffs in exchange for cotton or copper.

Morgan Collection Goes to Paris

NEW YORK, April 16—Special—The J. P. Morgan collection of French eighteenth century furniture has been bought, it was announced yesterday by Duveen Brothers. Although the purchase price was not stated, it is estimated that the amount was not far from three million dollars. A few of the pieces, it was said, may remain in America, but most of them will be sent to Bordeaux to be put in perfect condition.

The collection contains many pieces of historical importance in addition to their value as works of art. It includes a large Louis XV suite of Rose du Barry Gobelin tapestry, which was given by Louis XV. to the King of Denmark and purchased by the late Mr. Morgan from the present ruler of the Danes.

The collection, with the other Morgan art treasures, has been on exhibition at the Metropolitan Museum of Art. The sections of the Morgan collection sold thus far are estimated to have brought about $8,225,000.

Future King Hands Around His Tobacco Pouch Generously

Reports from the front state that the Prince of Wales is continually in the trenches amongst the Tommies, with whom he does not hesitate to share the contents of his tobacco pouch. In this he is only following in his father's footsteps, as many an old Hussacket could relate.

Many years ago the present King was a lieutenant on board H.M.S. Alexandra, at that time flying the flag of his father, the late Duke of Edinburgh, commander-in-chief of the Mediterranean fleet. Prince George, as he was then, was very fond of sailing, and never missed an opportunity of taking the gun-room officers away on a sailing excursion. On one such occasion, somewhere round the Grecian Archipelago, the Alexandra was laying alongside full up with the young bloods of the gun-room, of whom the present Vice-Admiral Sir David Beatty was one.

The "bood boat" (jolly boat) was being eaten with the seine net nearly rolled down on gratings fixed over the stern sheets, all ready for casting as soon as the boats reached shore. Everything was ready, and the party only waited for the Prince, when the coxswain of the cutter and running up the accommodation ladder, evidently with the intention of going aboard at the top of the ladder he ran into the Prince, just coming out.

"Hullo," said the future King, "where are you going?" "Just to get my pipe and baccy, sir," replied the petty officer. "Oh! we can't wait for that now," replied the King cheerily, "everybody is ready." Then seeing the look of disappointment on the man's face, he put his hand in his pocket and pulled out his cigar case, with, "Help yourself out of this." And now apparently the greatest pleasure of the day for nearly all the officers was to offer smoking to

In some of the German trenches in the western theatre of the war numbers of French, Belgian and other coins, of all periods were unearthed. The finds include coins of the Consul Agrippina, the German Emperor Conrad II.—bearing the dates from 1024 to 1037—and Canute the Great, King of England and Denmark, dated 1036.

Grand Trunk Railway Cheerful

No Ground for Undue Pessimism in Canada

LONDON, April 16.—Presiding at the Grand Trunk annual meeting yesterday, Chairman Smithers pointed out that the only increase in the expenses shown for the year was in consequence of the company keeping on its pay roll men who had joined the Canadian forces.

"The war is the governing cause of all our trouble," added the chairman. "It has had a greater effect, perhaps, in northwest Canada than in any other part."

There were indications, however, he stated, that the requirements of the Mother Country and the Allies were bringing renewed activity to Canada, and there was every sign that much money spent in war requirements will find its way to Canada.

Such a new country, the chairman said, was subject to fluctuations, which it was difficult for the people in the old country to realize. There was no reason for undue pessimism by looking at a year which had been full of exceptional difficulty.

The Railway Commissioners should realize, stated Mr. Smithers, that if the railways were properly to fulfil their duties they could only do so by preserving their credit and being paid fairly for services rendered the community. Never did a country make such progress as Canada had during the last twelve years. Consequently it was most vulnerable to such a catastrophe as war. The Dominion Government, supported by the Opposition, had faced the position with great skill while the banks and every other interest had given every assistance in their power.

The meeting heartily endorsed Chairman Smithers' remarks, re-electing him director very cordially.

Floods Threaten Great Damage

WIER, Que., April 16.—With the waters of Round Lake steadily rising further damage is threatened here by floods. At the beginning of the week Balsam dam gave way, releasing an enormous amount of water which went rushing down the mountain, carrying everything before it. Five dams were ultimately carried away. Pike Lake dam withstood the onrush of water.

The railway bridge and the $500,000 public bridge were both swept away. The old mill and 450,000 feet of lumber were carried out into the lake.

Men who have travelled the river's course from Balsam Lake down, say that the strength of the flood is almost unbelievable. At Balsam Lake the ground was washed out 20 feet below the level of the former dam. Balsam Lake itself is practically dry land from The Narrows to the outlet. At other places the course of the river is entirely changed, forming a new channel from 20 to 50 feet deep in places.

J. and W. Duncan had about 40,000 logs in this creek which were caught up by the flood, some being carried far out in the forest, others were taken down as far as Pike Lake and left in huge piles.

Vessels Leave For Welland

Left Kingston Yesterday—M. T. Co. Fleet Will Leave on Saturday Shippers Are Optimistic

KINGSTON, April 16.—Out-going navigation from this port was commenced early this morning when the steamers Port Colborne and W. H. Dwyer left for the Welland canal on their way to Port William where they will load grain for Montreal. They will be followed by the fleet of the Montreal Transportation Company, which will leave for Port William early tomorrow morning. In the fleet are the steamers Westmount, Fairmount, Northmount, Rosemount, Kinmount and Glenmount. The Stormount wintered at Midland and it will likely leave for Port William on Tuesday. All the vessels will load grain for Montreal.

The M. T. Co. steamers have been chartered for Atlantic coasting trade and they will likely go on their routes when they unload at Montreal. The vessels will remain on the ocean until the fall and will then come back for the fall grain trade.

Although nothing can be said of the season's business, local shipping men are optimistic as to the outcome of the trading this summer. Some feel that the spring business will be large and that a dropping off will be noticed in the hot summer months but as a whole they expect that the season will be a good one.

AUSTRIA WILL ATTACK ITALY IN CASE OF INTERVENTION

(Canadian Press Report)

PARIS, April 17.—The belief is becoming general in Rome that Austria will make a sudden attack on Italy when she becomes convinced that Italy has resolved to intervene, but alarm is felt owing to the heavy concentration of Italian troops on the Austrian frontier. Dr. Dillon, special correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph in Rome says, while Austria has made certain offers to Italy these are accompanied by certain reservations that the financial strain is being severely felt in Italy and that he maintains the belief that he has held from the outset that she will soon intervene.

The special correspondent of the Stampa of Rome, after an extensive tour of Germany, says that country is more taken up with the possibility of Italian intervention than anything else. It means the realization of England's great political plan, the complete abandonment of Germany by Europe. Should Italy intervene it means Germany's hatred today directed against England will be turned against Italy with the greatest bitterness of which revenge is capable.

Despatches from Athens say Prince George of Greece is returning to Paris and that overtures for the abandonment of neutrality by Greece are on the way to realization.

TURKS ARE DEFEATED AFTER HEAVY LOSS

British Also Sustain Severe Casualties Before Achieving Their Victory—Armed With Latest Guns and Occupying Easily Defensible Positions

LONDON, April 17.—(Special)—The British India troops have inflicted another defeat on the Turks in the vicinity of Shaiba, Mesopotamia, although not at a considerable loss to themselves, their casualties being about 700. This announcement was made by the India Office in an official report issued last night.

The report says that after clearing the Turks out of their positions north and west of Shaiba last Tuesday the British on Wednesday continued their offensive in the direction of Zobeir, four miles south of the Shaiba fort.

The Turks were driven out of the advanced position and the British attack was then directed against their main line near the Birjisiyeh wood.

HAVE 15,000 MEN.

"Here," says the report, "the enemy whose strength is estimated as at least 15,000 men, including six regular battalions, with six guns, had occupied a series of well-concealed trenches, from which they were able to direct a heavy rifle and machine gun fire on our advancing troops.

"Nevertheless our attack drove the enemy out of his trenches at the point of the bayonet and the whole line of his position was finally captured, though not without heavy loss to our side.

"The casualties are believed to amount to about 700 men of all ranks. On the other hand the Turks were so severely handled that they retired to Nakhailah, nineteen miles northwest of Zobeir."

The report adds that there have been no further attempts by the Turks against Shaiba. There was desultory artillery firing at Ahwaz on April 15.

Michigan Kills Prohibition Bills

Senate's Vote Against Measure 29 to 2 Sponsor of Bill Votes Against It

LANSING, Mich., April 17.—(Special)—The State-wide prohibition bill was killed in the Senate today. The vote was 29 to 2. Senator Henry F. Straight, introducer of and sponsor for the measure, was one of the 29. He determined to kill his own measure when the time of submission of the question to the people was changed from November, 1916, to April, 1917. Lieut.-Governor Dickinson and Senator Straight had hoped to ride into office as heads of the Republican ticket on this anti-liquor plank.

Senators Fitzgibbons of Port Huron and Roberts of Marquette were the only members voting for the measure.

More Immigrants Says Sir Thomas

Sir Thomas Shaughnessy, Lady Shaughnessy, and their daughter, "Yezzy" have arrived at Chicago en route to the Pacific coast. Sir Thomas stated in an interview in the Windy City that he was also likely to result in a flood of immigration.

"In Canada," he stated, "we are formulating plans to cope with this contingency. The men of northern and central Europe are beginning to move far against the war, and against enforced military service, which now, as never before, must be especially repellant to them. In the new lands of this country they are bound to see and to seek their preference."

Lady Shaughnessy paid a tribute to the work done by the Canadian women in connection with the war. "We have been working night and day. The Red Cross kits to send abroad since the beginning of the war, and have gathered together thousands and thousands of pounds sterling. Our women have worked with admirable intensity, sparing themselves not at all. It has been inspiring to see them."

Russians At Gates of Hungary

Repel Counter-thrusts East and West of Uszok Pass

LONDON, April 17.—(Special)—The fight for the Uszok Pass is still undecided. Conflicting reports from the eastern arena seem to point to a slowing down of the Russian advance into Hungary. Whether this is due to the bad condition of the roads, hinted at in the Petrograd official report, or to the heavy reinforcements which the railways have enabled the Germans to concentrate on the southern slopes of the Carpathians, is not yet clear. The most important news is the Russian report of the repulse of the Austro-German counter thrusts east and west of the Uszok Pass. The fighting in the valley of the Stryj was particularly fierce and protracted, ending in a repulse of German picked troops.

A General Staff says The Tribune publishes a report from Ungvar, in northeastern Hungary, stating that a great battle has been fought between the Stryj and the valley of the Orsdava. A German army composed of picked men attacked the Russians therefrom on Tuesday. The struggle lasted hours of sever fighting the Russians succeeded in repulsing the Germans and capturing a quantity of arms and ammunition.

Another despatch received here from Vienna says sixty-five Austrian officers have been decorated for neglegence which resulted in the annihilation of a division of reserves near Berezany and the Austrian defeat in the Sereo region.

Krupp Exhibit at Canadian National

TORONTO April 16.—Visitors to the Canadian National Exhibition this year will have the opportunity of seeing a genuine "Krupp exhibit," including guns, rifles, shells and munitions of all kinds, made at the famous works at Essen, Germany.

"Of course, it won't be what you would call a 'voluntary' exhibit," explained Manager Orr, in telling The Daily News of the Board's plan in connection with the interesting attraction. "If the Germans were consulted they would probably object. In fact, the exhibit will be made up entirely of weapons and munitions captured from the Germans on the battle-fields of France and Belgium.

In order that the Board may have as complete an exhibit as possible, Mr. Percy Rogers, of the Exhibition staff will make a special trip to Europe, to collect the material. He will go first to England, and will endeavor to secure supplies captured by the British troops. From there he will go to France and Belgium, where special efforts will be made to secure a good collection of trophies taken from the Germans by the gallant Belgian army. It is safe to say that the exhibit will be the "star" attraction at the Fair.

DECLINE U. S. INVITATION

Society of German Engineers Will Not Attend Congress

BERLIN, via London, April 16.—The Society of German Engineers has declined an invitation to participate in the congress of engineers at San Francisco by preparing papers to be read there. In taking this action, the society explains that German engineers at present are too busy with the war. It adds that because of America's shipments of munitions to Germany's enemies it would be difficult to get German engineers to contribute papers for the congress.

LONDON, April 17.—(Special)—The London Daily Mail says that there are again rumors early this morning of a hostile air raid over East Anglia. Despatches from various towns give confirmed reports of the presence of aircraft, probably Zeppelins, over Ipswich, Felixstowe and in the neighborhood of Yarmuth, but no confirmation is forthcoming from these towns themselves.

A Colchester despatch says that seven reports were heard there at 12.45 this morning. The cause is not explained. The Government has issued warnings for the entire east coast.

HELLO GIRLS HEROINES

Stayed at Posts When Russians Entered Memel

LONDON, April 16.—The London Times says the German press is now celebrating the heroism of a telephone girl of Memel. It appears that at 9 o'clock on the evening of the Russian incursion into Memel, Field-Marshall von Hindenburg rang up the Memel post office. In the course of the conversation with the girl who answered his call he expressed "his astonishment and joy" that she and her colleagues had remained at their posts.

Subsequently, wrote the Emperor's son, Prince Joachim, arrived at Memel he visited the post office. He presented the heroine with a silver watch and also with words of lively recognition.

It is added that the telephone girls remained at work all night and left the building unmolested.

SERIOUS DAMAGE DONE BY ZEPPELINS

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, April 17.—Included in a news item given out today by the Overseas News Agency is the following: Private telegrams received here from England by way of Holland say serious damage was done by the Zeppelins which recently flew over England. Bombs from the airships killed or wounded a number of persons and injured boats protecting the shipyards, a fact which indicates that bombs fell near the docks. The British censor prevented the transmission of further details.

Dunbar, for the defence, contended that no case had been made against the prisoner, and this view concurred in by the chief justice and also by Edmund Meredith, K.C., the crown prosecutor, who said that he could not hope to obtain a conviction and the prisoner was at once discharged.

TURKISH NAVY SUPPLIED WITH FUEL BY BULGARIA

PARIS, April 17.—(Special.)—The Berlin-Munich, Bulgaris, correspondent of the Temps sends the following despatch regarding a Turkish Imperial Council, held in Constantinople.

"An imperial council, over which the sultan presided, was held at Constantinople. The possibility of the transfer of the capital was discussed.

"Crown Prince Yussef Izzeddin severely criticized the policy of Enver Pasha and the Young Turks and their actions shortly before the war. The sultan was greatly dejected. He said he owed to the Young Turks and their revolution his accession to the throne and would rather not have reigned than see the country go to ruin.

Ready to Quit

"The sultan declared that he had decided to abdicate in case a transfer of the capital became necessary; in fact preferred now to be relieved of power, and would be happy if Prince Yusser Izeddin could succeed him immediately.

"Other members of the dynasty expressed the opinion that the present was unfavorable for a change, as the accession of the prince who was hostile to the policy of Enver Pasha, could provoke grave interior complications."

Land Deals Not Irregular

Hon. Frank Oliver Issues Statement Defending Himself Against Scandals

OTTAWA April 7—(Special.)—Hon. Frank Oliver has issued a reply to charges made against him in the House of Commons by Hon. Dr. Roche on Thursday. The charges were that he had retained the profits which have been paid into the treasury, and that Indian lands bought by a man named Falerne were jockeyed into his own possession. Mr. Oliver states that it was not until he ceased to be minister that he discovered that he did not have the mineral rights on land which he had acquired in 1890. He then got the rights and Hon. Dr. Roche granted him an extension of time for the settlement of the royalties.

Of the Indian lands bought by Falerne in 1900 and sold to J. J. Anderson, son-in-law of Mr. Oliver in 1914, the exministser of the interior says he can see nothing improper in the transaction. Falerne was to pay $35,000 for the lands, but after making the first payment of $10,000 could get no more. For four years the government pressed for payment, then Falerne sold to Anderson who claimed he had $5,000 he had paid. Anderson paid the balance to the government. Mr. Oliver says he bought the lands from Anderson three years after he ceased to be a minister and he declares that in neither of these transactions could he do anything improper, there was no intention to defraud and the government lost nothing.

A third man, alleged to have been accompanion of Doyle's, ran away and escaped. This is the second time within three weeks Doyle has been arrested on this charge.

EVAPORATOR BURNED AT FRANKFORD

R. J. Graham Company of This City Meets With Third Loss—Incendiary Given as Cause of Fire

At the Village of Frankford in Sidney Township, last evening an evaporator owned by Mr. George Graham and operated by the R. J. Graham Company of this city, was with its contents destroyed by fire. The day shift had just left the building and the night shift were about to commence work when the fire broke out and all efforts to stop the flames proved unavailing. The fire originated under what was termed a false roof, being a lean to the main building. There is no doubt in Mr. Graham's mind but that the fire was incendiary in its origin. This is the third evaporator that has been burned in this section this year, and all were operated by the Graham Company. The other buildings destroyed were located at Tweed and Shannonville. The company had a large order for supplying evaporated potatoes and apples for use of the British army and were actively engaged in preparing this food when the buildings were burned.

Mr. Graham's loss to building and machinery is partially covered by insurance. He also lost a quantity of evaporated goods. The R. J. Graham Company's loss of evaporated potatoes is covered by insurance.

There is every indication that the destruction of the three buildings was caused by a fire bug.

The King's Highway

When moonlight flecks the cruiser's decks
And engines rumble slow,
When Drake's own star is bright above
And Time has gone below,
They may hear who list the far-off sound
Of a long-dead, never-dead myth
In the mid-watch still they may hear who will
The song of the Larboard Berth.

On a dandy frigate or a well-found brig,
In a sloop or a seventy-four,
In a great Flag-ship with an admiral's flag,
And a hundred guns or more,
In a fair light air, in a deal foul wind,
At midnight or midday,
Till the good ship sink her mids shall drink
To the King, and the King's High-way!

The mids they hear—No fear, no fear!
They know their own ship's ghost;
Their young blood beats to the same old song
And roars to the same old toast.
So long as the sea-wind blows unbound
And the sea-wave breaks in spray,
For the Island's sons the world still runs
"The King, and the King's High-way!"

THE AIRMAN'S ARROW

This is one of the harmless-looking little darts which the French airmen find to be a most deadly weapon. They claim more than once to have demoralized bodies of the enemy's troops by dropping a few hundred of these arrows upon them from a height of over 2,000 feet. One of these has been known to go through a man downward from the head to the calf of the leg.

BOARD OF EDUCATION IN REGULAR SESSION

Considerable Business Transacted—Reports Presented of a Satisfactory Nature—New Rooms to be Opened in Two Schools

At a regular meeting of the Board of Education held last evening considerable business, chiefly of a routine nature, was disposed of. The members present were: Col. Ponton, chairman; Messrs. F. S. Deacon, B. Mallory, L. C. Pascoe, P. Wims, L. R. Terwilliger, G. T. Woodley, A. E. Bailey, B. J. Ives, J. Elliott and F. C. Sharpe.

Mayor Panter addressed the Board in reference to the debenture for Queen Mary School. It was feared that the $52,000 asked for would not be realized. The debentures had sold for $47,000, and the difference between that and the $52,000 had not yet been provided for. He asked the Board to assist the Council this year in every way possible to keep down the tax rate, which of necessity would be high.

Ald. Wallbridge said there would be difficulty this year in keeping the expenses down low and every possible curtailment would have to be made. Chairman Ponton said that the third requisition was passed by the Board and it was supposed the arrangement of the sums was satisfactory. The Board would do all it could to curtail expenses.

After reading and confirming the minutes of the last regular meeting a number of communications were read, some from the chairman in reference to Board matters which had already been dealt with.

From Miss Urquhart, supernumerary teacher, and Mr. S. A. Gardner, truant and supply officer, asking for an extension of time for vacation purposes.—Granted.

From the City Clerk asking the Board on behalf of the City Council to do all in their power to keep the tax rate as low as possible owing to extraordinary expenditures this year.—Filed.

REPORTS.

High School Inspector Withrall presented his report re the High School which was of a satisfactory nature. It showed that the teaching staff was qualified and the total enrolment now is 268—126 boys and 142 girls. The report referred to the absence of two chairs in some of the class rooms.

Mr. MacLaurin, Principal of the High School, said that the two chairs in the class room were put outside on account of congestion. The report was referred to the School Management Committee.

Mr. H. J. Clarke, Inspector of the Public Schools presented his monthly report which showed the enrolment of pupils as 1098. The average daily attendance was not up to the average owing to measles and other diseases amongst the children. Another class room had been provided at Queen Mary School, and another was required to be opened at Queen Victoria School.

The report of the Principal of the High School showed that the examinations recently held were satisfactory. The High School Cadets would be inspected on the 30th inst. and some uniforms lost at Berriefield last year should be replaced.

The report was referred to the School Management and the Supply committees.

The Board went into committee of the whole on reports, etc., Mr. Woodley in the chair.

The Finance Committee's report, as follows, was adopted by the passing of the following accounts:

Bell Telephone Co.	$ 8 20

Mr. A. E. Thrasher was selected as the Board's representative at the June Entrance examination.

Mr. Pascoe said that there was an increase in the attendance of small children at Queen Victoria School and more accommodation was necessary in that school.

Chairman Ponton suggested that the matter be referred to the School Management and the Sits, Buildings and Repairs Committees to make such arrangements as may be necessary.

Inspector Clarke stated that the assembly room at Queen Victoria School could not advantageously be turned into a classroom. The congestion apparent at present may be relieved after the summer holidays.

Mr. Elliott was in favor of the suggestion made by the chairman of the Board.

Mr. Mallory said that tables and chairs could be placed in without any big expense to the Board and thus fit up another room.

A motion to refer the matter to the committees on School Management and Sites, Building, and Repairs was adopted.

A recommendation from the Printing and Supply Committee that a bass drum and a snare drum be purchased for the High School Cadets at a cost of $25 was adopted.

The committee arose and reported. The report was received and adopted.

A brief discussion ensued in reference to Mr. G. A. Bennett's claim of $162 in connection with work at the Queen Mary School.

Chairman Ponton suggested that an offer of $50 be made to Mr. Bennett without prejudice for his claim.

Some of the members objected to paying the account, alleging that there was a defect in the basement floor.

Moved by Ald. Bailey, seconded by Mr. Ives, that the proper authorities be notified that the basement of Queen Mary School is placed in a proper and safe state according to specifications.—Carried.

Board adjourned.

Four of the bullets hit Dr. Scott's head but as still in his body and the doctor his completely recovered. Asher has not been sentenced yet. W. C. Civic Welfare League

Thursday evening, the so-called "Civic Welfare League" held a very important meeting in the Y.M.C.A. building. About twenty well known citizens were present. A committee submitted a constitution which was adopted and then the election of the permanent officers took place and resulted as follows:—

1st Vice-Pres.—W. J. Elliott
2nd Vice-Pres.—W. B. Deacon.

5.—Beautifying the appearance of the city.

6.—Public playgrounds.

8.—Medical inspection in schools.

9.—The fostering of authentic purity education.

All present then subscribed their names to the constitution and paid the membership fees.

REBUKING THE GUILTY.

The timely rebuke by Premier Sir Robert Borden of two Conservative members of the Federal Parliament for indiscretion in the purchase of supplies for the Militia Department has set a new precedent in the political history of the Dominion.

The public will be gratified to note the attitude Sir Robert Borden has adopted in this matter. He has says the Montreal Mail, by his emphatic rebuke of two members of his own party; given satisfactory evidence that not either he, nor the Government which he leads seeks, in conducting the investigation into militia purchases and in interpreting the findings, to shield his friends or the friends of his party. When the Premier of the country openly rebukes sitting members of his own party, he exhibits a conception of duty and justice which in the past has been only too rarely exhibited by leaders of the political parties in this country. When sitting members of the government party are not immune to open rebuke, which has a significance all its own when administered to a member of Parliament, the most sceptical and critical of Canadian citizens must admit that the Government is making an honest effort to seek out and punish those who were guilty of defrauding the country in their dealings with the Militia Department.

At the same time, revelations made at Ottawa of land deals in Western Canada are such as to put in the shade, in the matter of amount at least, the transactions open to suspicion in the organization of the Canadian troops for active service in this war. Members of Parliament are concerned in these transactions. Sir Robert Borden set a precedent which Sir Wilfrid Laurier might will have followed in regard to some of his supporters in the House of Commons.

THE FEDERAL PARLIAMENT.

The Federal Parliament, which has just concluded its deliberations, in the nature of work accomplished was, says the Montreal Gazette, the most momentous in the history of Canada. The most important measures passed were those arising out of the war, one to grant a hundred million dollars to the Government for actual war services, and one to provide revenue to pay interest on war borrowings and make up the deficit in the ordinary revenue due to the effects of the war on trade. The first passed through its stages as a matter of course and with a minimum of discussion. Ordinary party lines were not drawn and the vote stands in a rare way as the contribution of the people of Canada through Parliament to the maintenance of the integrity of the Empire. On the measure for increasing the revenue there was division of opinion and debate. Liberal leaders denied in part that there was necessity for the new taxes, which were also assailed as burdensome and oppressive, and those collected through the customs service were further condemned as injurious to the trade of Great Britain. In spite of hostile criticism, and in spite of the fact that new taxes are more than ordinarily disliked in times of trade slowness, the country has apparently accepted the situation and will make the best of it while it and the war lasts. Perhaps this is more natural because, while criticising the proposals made by the Government, the Opposition offered no suggestion as to what, were it in power, it would substitute for the imposts its representatives condemned. The country, when its interest is aroused in a great issue, sees above and beyond the criticism put forth for criticism's sake and forms its judgment on the merits of a measure or a policy; and in this case the Government can abide the result with confidence.

A SPLENDID WAY TO REDUCE ONE'S WEIGHT

There is, perhaps, no one thing that alarms the passing of our youth so much as the horrible tendency of some of us to put on too much weight after we have reached the age of 25 or 30. Whenever young our face may appear, our figure is "away."

The cause of this over-sustenance is that our stomachs convert the food we eat into fat because there is not enough oxygen in the blood to produce the energy necessary to destroy this fatty tissue. To reduce your weight go to a good chemist and get oil of orthine in capsule form, and take one after each meal. It is sold only in original sealed packages. Oil of orthine taken at mealtimes gives you all the benefit of the food you eat, and at the same time dissolves the fatty tissue from any part of the body where there is excessive fat. In this way many have reduced their weight at the rate of about a lb. a day, and no flabbiness is left.

Any druggist can supply you or a large size box will be sent on receipt of $1.00. Address D. J. Little Drug Co., Box 1240, Montreal, Can.

CURRENT COMMENT

King Albert's 14-year-old son has been acting as a bugler with a company of soldiers near the firing line. The Belgians after the war is over will have no occasion to reproach the King and his royal belt with not sharing in the nation's perils to the full.

The statement of exceptional interest to Americans was made in the British parliament the other night that the government had decided not to interfere on the contraband question. This decision must have been reached after a delicate to the United States. It shows a consideration for American interests which cannot fail to meet ready appreciation in this country.

Brantford Courier: "The Toronto Globe has an amusing habit in which it is wont to boast that it doesn't have to lead. The organ should have broken it to him more gently and in homeopathic doses. The leading Irish newspaper is, of course, a great authority when it comes to blazing the way for public service. For instance, its editor was the man who bel Laurier into the reciprocity mess. Quite a cooking performance, that!"

Guelph Herald: "The Toronto Star terms the holding of an election "The Growing Evil." We could imagine it would seem so from a Liberal point of view, but the prospects of the Opposition are not allowed to enter into the more serious question of whether a defeated party at the last election will continue to nullify government legislation at their own sweet will and pleasure."

According to a special correspondent of the New York World, who was permitted to visit the great Krupp factories at Essen, 40,000 men are at work there night and day turning out monster guns and enormous quantities of war material for the armies in the field. The Krupp people when peace was at peace were accused of encouraging the war party. Whether there was ground for the accusation or not, it is certain that they are profiting by the hostilities if anybody in Germany is.

There has been a private peace conference at The Hague at which some thoughts as to how the future peace of the world can be insured were incorporated into a "minimum" program. Some of the delegates were from England, France, Germany and Austria-Hungary. The United States also was represented. When this war is over the probability is that the future peace of the world will be insured without further ado.

Santo Domingo is in the throes of another revolution, but the Dominicans are not happy unless they are in throes of some sort.

Indian Horsemen Show Prowess

NORTHERN FRANCE April 16—On an elevated plateau of Northern France there was enacted today one of the strangest scenes which has ever been witnessed by French people. The actors were Indian cavalry brought hither from their native land, with their horses and equipment, for use in the British army at the time when the expected "big push" makes expedient their entrance into hostilities. The spectators were khaki-clad British officers from the four quarters of the globe, a scattering of French peasants and a few newspaper correspondents. The force was in fine trim, for the April sun shone brightly and nothing so appeals to the Indians as the sun.

Showed Superb Horsemanship

As yet denied an actual battle in the line, the Indian cavalry had fore-gathered for a demonstration of its horsemanship and its prowess with lance, rifle and sword. The first feat was a mimic charge, in which hundreds of dusky horsemen swept across the plain into lines of imaginary Germans, thundered right and left with their sabres or piercing with slender lances straw-stuffed sacks which dotted the ground.

Their control of their horses was superb and the spirit and agility which they displayed astonished the French onlookers. Formidable and terrifying was the yell as they galloped across the field. It was different from anything the accidental cars are accustomed to, being a long drawn out "sh—aah," now higher and now lower, but at all times comical in unison from the galloping cavalrymen.

These Chaps Can Ride

After successive squadrons had made the charge the horsemen repaired to the centre of the plain, where the Indians formed a wide lane down the middle of which was tien given an exhibition of lance work and fancy riding, the equal of which is seen only among the cowboys of the far west or the Cossacks of Russia. Pegs were driven into the ground and four horsemen riding at full tilt dashed toward them, each impaling a pan on the tip of his lance. Only rarely did a rider miss his mark.

Eight horsemen, four abreast riding in opposite directions then swept past, the standard of a narrow peg on the lance. French peasants were scattered among the Indians to watch the exhibition. They stood with mouths agape as the wonders were performed. Finally their joined in the applause enthusiastically.

Mohammedan Succeeds.

A peg set sideways so as to present a surface not more than one inch wide presented a feat which seemed rather dubious for the first Indian who endeavored to impale it, but Zamin Ali, a lithe Mohammedan, pierced the exact centre, riding hard, and while some missed the slight mark, others duplicated the performance.

To Mohammed Akrun fell the chief honor of the day. Sticking in the ground on the side of a lane was the caricature of a German soldier, painted in black, on a small, flat piece of wood. The mannikin was buried up to its chin in mud, and the Indian artist had decorated it with an iron cross. This formed the target for the sharp lance of the Indian rider.

Indians Are All Fit

The crowd stood silent while the cavalryman wheeled his horse at the end of the lane, and then with a triumphant yell, muscles tense as he crouched in his saddle and black eyes flashing, he bore down on that pinned to board bearing the face the Indian has come to hate.

He hit it square in the centre, splitting the painted face from scalp to chin, and a ripple of applause ran down the line.

In spite of the rigors of a cold and wet winter the Indians, Sikhs, Dogras, Pathans and Punjab Mohammedans, look exceptionally fit, and they are chafing for the time when they can get to the battle line. Their small horses also are in excellent condition and every British officer confidently expects that the mounted Indians will give as good an account of themselves as have their infantry brothers in the trenches.

Dramatic Close of Parliament

Prorogation by His Royal Highness Held up for Several Hours—Two Houses Deadlocked

OTTAWA, Ont., April 16.—The closing hours of the first session of the twelfth Parliament of Canada was dramatic indeed. To add to the excitement there was an eleventh hour clash between the Senate and the House of Commons which delayed the formal ceremonies two hours and a half. It had been arranged that His Royal Highness should come to Parliament Hill at four o'clock and read the speech from the Throne and give assent to bills. A temporary deadlock between the Commons and the Senate over the Soldiers' Vote Bill made it necessary for the Duke of Connaught with his escort to wait until five-thirty o'clock at Rideau Hall, when he finally got word that the House was in readiness for the final ceremonies.

The deadlock arose over the inclusion in the Soldiers' Bill by the Senate of two amendments, both of which have been considered in the Lower House. One provided that Act should not apply to the Overseas force without the consent of Lord Kitchener; the other for the appointment of six secretaries, three by the Premier and three by the leader of the Opposition to supervise the voting.

A conference between members of the two Houses was held in the office of the Minister of Justice when a compromise was reached.

The Government agreed to accept one amendment provided for the nomination of scrutineers, while the Senate acceded to a proposal to have the bill approved by His Majesty in Council. With these provisions included the bill was then formally accepted and the prorogation ceremonies were proceeded with.

His Royal Highness attended in full uniform of a Field Marshall and Her Royal Highness sat beside the Throne with the Princess Patricia nearby. Premier Borden attended in his Windsor uniform. There was a small attendance of ladies on the floor.

The close of the session saw the breaking of the strike of Senator Landry of the Upper Chamber, which has been the chief amusement of the Capital during the past week. The Speaker appeared in the office clothes and made the following statement: "In resuming my seat I would like to give only one word of explanation in my recent absence. I shall not refer to the facts except to say that, though I attach very little importance to the fact that the last two decisions have been reversed, I confess that I felt deeply the defection of Conservative friends which has been manifested by the hostile vote of some of them and by the abstention from voting by others. That reason alone prompted me to decline to preside over a House which failed to give me expected support.

EX-SENATOR ALDRICH DEAD IN NEW YORK

NEW YORK, April 16—Nelson W. Aldrich, former United States Senator from Rhode Island and for years prominent in Republican political circle, died at his home here today of heart disease. Mr. Aldrich held a seat in the United States continuously from 1881 to 1911. His influence exerted by him as Congressional affairs was best illustrated by the fact that when he was naturally retired to an audience at one several Presidents of the United States called upon him for personal counsel. Mr. McKinley, Roosevelt and Taft.

Probably the greatest Parliamentarian that ever served in the Senate, Mr. Aldrich had no difficulty in maintaining leadership of his party. A chairman of the Finance Committee he was called upon to assume a large share of the responsibility for all tariff and financial legislation before the Senate. He participated in the preparation of no fewer than six revisions of the tariff, and bore the burden of labor incident to them. The Payne-Aldrich Tariff Act was enacted through the senate by him after many weeks of political manoeuvring and hard fighting.

Mr. Aldrich was born in Foster, R. I., November 6, 1841.

Defy Dyspepsia!

Among the symptoms of Dyspepsia or Indigestion may be mentioned a flatuey, coming pain soon after eating; a distended, full feeling of the stomach and bowels; belching of wind and flatulence; a burning sensation in the stomach, which sometimes causes a heartburn; palpitation of the heart; oppression of breathing; pain under the ribs and shoulder-blades; headache through the temples and eyes; dizziness; sour, crusted tongue; bad breath; sometimes nausea or vomiting.

Dyspepsia Effervescent Salt is the natural specific for all these conditions. Being alkaline, it immediately relieves the acidity of the stomach and stops the fermentation. It stimulates the secretion of the digestive juices of the stomach and bowels, and overcomes the constipation. When its use is kept up the normal action of all the organs of digestion is re-established.

How to Care for Your Complexion

There is no truer saying than that "beauty is only skin deep." Good features lose their charm under a sallow or blotchy skin and poor features are glorified by a beautiful complexion.

"A very useful toilet booklet entitled "Your Complexion" has just been issued by Nyal's and contains many helpful hints and beauty hints, including proper methods of massage. It can be had for the asking at the Nyal Agency Drug Store and you should call or telephone for it. Among other things it points out is that diet, sleep, ventilation, and a thousand other things we cannot escape are continually warring against our complexions. Get a 25c or 50c jar of Nyal's Face Cream and convince yourself of its cleansing and refreshing and beautifying qualities. It is greaseless, oxygenated and quickly absorbed by the skin, leaves no shine, and gives a pleasant, smooth, cool sensation, quickly removing the irritation produced by wind and weather.

All Nyal preparations are justly famous and none more so than Nyal's Face Cream which we unhesitatingly recommend. Call or telephone us for your copy of this book which contains most valuable information.

"Fruit-a-tives" Keeps Young And Old in Splendid Health

A. W. McCORMICK, Esq.

Scotch ts, Ont., Aug. 26th, 1913

"Fruit-a-tives" are the only pill manufactured, in my way of thinking. They work completely, no griping whatever, and one is plenty for any ordinary person at a time. My wife was a martyr to Constipation. Retired everything on the calendar without satisfaction, and spent large sums of money until we happened on "Fruit-a-tives". I cannot say too much in their favor.

We have used them in the family for about two years and we would not use anything else as long as we can get "Fruit-a-tives".

Their action is mild, and no distress at all. I have recommended them to many of my people, and our whole family uses them."

PROSPECTS IN MANITOBA

Deputy Minister of Agriculture Thinks Them Good

WINNIPEG, April 16.—Except in parts of the Red River Valley, where the ground is still too wet, seeding operations are general throughout the province, according to Professor S. A. Bedford, deputy minister of agriculture.

"All our demonstrations farms", said the professor "are either being seeded or are ready for seed, except those in the Red River Valley, and we expect these to be ready by next Monday. I received a report last night to the effect that elsewhere throughout the province the seed is going in under the very best conditions. By Saturday a large proportion of the land will be seeded to wheat. Seeding to oats will not be general until about the beginning of May, for experienced farmers hesitate to sow that grain until danger from frost is over.

More than four million acres of land were prepared for crop last fall in Manitoba. This was an increase of 1,250,000 acres of fall plowing over that of the year before. Aided by the early and favorable spring, the farmers have therefore good prospects for a good crop Professor Bedford thinks.

SPRING BLOOD IS WATERY BLOOD

HOW TO GET NEW HEALTH AND NEW STRENGTH AT THIS SEASON.

Spring ailments are not imaginary. Even the most robust find the winter months most trying to their health. Confinement indoors, often in overheated and usually always badly ventilated rooms—in the home, the office, the shop and the school—taxes the vitality of even the strongest. The blood becomes thin and watery and is clogged with impurities. Some people have headaches and a feeling of languor. Others are low-spirited and nervous. Still others are troubled with disfiguring pimples and skin eruptions; while some got up in the morning feeling just as tired as when they went to bed. These are all spring symptoms that the blood is out of order and that a medicine is needed. Many people take purgative medicines in the spring. This is a serious mistake. You cannot cure yourself with a medicine that gallops through your system and leaves you weaker still. This is all that a purgative does. What you need to give you health and strength in the spring is a tonic medicine that will enrich the blood and soothe the jangled nerves. And the one always reliable tonic and blood builder is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These Pills not only banish spring weakness but guard you against the more serious ailments that follow, such as anaemia, nervous rehility, indigestion, rheumatism and other diseases due to bad blood. In proof of this Mrs. D. E. Hughes, Hanksmann, Sask., says: "About a year ago I was badly run down, my nerves were all unstrung, and I could not go up stairs without stopping to rest. As I was a long ways from a doctor I decided to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and in the course of a few weeks I felt like a new person. As an all round restorative I can heartily recommend this medicine."

If you are ailing this spring you cannot afford, in your own interest, to overlook so valuable a medicine as Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

SPLENDID HEROISM OF A CANADIAN CAPTAIN

Insisted Upon Ambulance Man After Making Apology for Trouble Given—Thought He Would Have to Give up Football

Attending to Others First—Dies shot off at the knee. He was perfectly conscious and calm, and, looking at his legs, asked quietly, his handsome face showing no pain, "Is something tightly round both thighs to stop the bleeding?"

LONDON, April 16.—The heroic fortitude of a young Canadian Captain, Francis Wilchurch Townend, of the Royal Engineers, is graphically described by a motor ambulance driver.

Captain Townend, who was born in Halifax, and was the grandson of W. J. Stairs, died on March 29 from wounds received the previous day.

The driver says Captain Townend was with the Indian Engineers inspecting telegraph wires, when a shell burst in their midst. He was found in a shell hole with his legs apparently half buried. He told the ambulance man to attend to the others first, as he was all right.

When Captain Townend was moved they found he had been standing on the stumps of his leg which were both

Another horrible wound was found in his arm. While it was being dressed Captain Townend said: "I think I'll give up football next year." As he was carried to the hospital where he died, he was perfectly collected, laughed, and quietly apologized for the trouble. The driver adds:

"I have never seen such courage. I felt as I left the hospital that I had seen a man."

Officers of Captain Townend's Meerut Company have asked the family to be allowed to erect a monument over the grave in the Bethune Cemetery.

Crime Wave At Lachute, Que.

Hardware Store Burglarized Twice in Two Weeks

LACHUTE, Que., April 16.—With the attempted hold-up of a legislator's wife and five burglaries, two of the latter in the same store, Lachute is experiencing what is a veritable carnival of crime for this ordinarily quiet and peaceful community. While Tom Carpenter, an employee of T. McOuat & Sons, hardware merchants, was locking up on his way home late last night, he noticed two strangers loitering in front of the big liling. As the store had been entered only last week and money and goods stolen, Carpenter's suspicions were aroused, and after entering his own house nearby, he quietly returned. The men were no longer in sight, but gleams of light from the store indicated that they were within. Carpenter hurried home a second time and, taking his rifle, he came back. The store door was now open, while at the farther end of the bridge beside which the store stands he saw two men running away. He pursued them for several hundred yards, but they took to the fields and disappeared. Returning, he aroused three other citizens and the quartette went to the railway line at the east end of the town, as they believed that the robbers would take that route in endeavoring to leave the neighborhood. They had not waited long before the pair appeared, but on catching sight of the posse, the two men again ran and made their escape. There were reports today that they were living in a bush, but diligent search failed to discover them. This morning a crowbar was found on the bridge and a chisel was on the floor of the store, and these articles were later identified as having been stolen from a farm house at the junction of the C.P.R. and the C.N.R. Five strange men were seen at Stagnerville yesterday, and two of them took a railway handcar, ran down to the junction, and broke open the tool house to secure the tools found in McOuat's store. Evidently Carpenter's action frightened the intruders away before they secured any booty, as nothing is missing from McOuat's stock. As previously reported, three places, including McOuat's store, were entered last week, while on Monday last a hardware shop in the west end was entered through a rear window and a small sum of money taken.

SIX SONS IN KHAKI

Proud Claim of Mr. and Mrs. Colin Connor, of Cornwall

CORNWALL, Ont., April 16.—Many cities and towns in Canada are claiming honor from the fact that several members of one family are on service with His Majesty's troops in the great European war. In this respect, the town of Cornwall can claim some distinction, as Mr. and Mrs. Colin Connor, who reside on Seventh street west, have no less than six sons in service, four at the front and two prepared to go. Mr. and Mrs. Connor were the parents of sixteen children, fifteen of whom are living, one having died in infancy. They came to Cornwall nearly two years ago from Inverness-shire, Scotland, near Kingussie, and nine of their children are residing with them here. Mr. and Mrs. Connor are justly proud of the achievement of their family of sons, taking it more as a matter of duty to their King and Empire than any personal credit due t'e family.

Fight Pictures Barred From U.S.

Films Will be Denied Admission to the Country by Treasury Dept.

NEW YORK, April 16.—A ruling of the Treasury Department, which was reinforced today by a special letter of instructions to the appraiser of the port and warnings to customs officials at all seaboard cities, made it certain that the moving picture films made of the Johnson-Willard championship fight in Havana, will not be shown in this country.

The special letter which was issued from the office of Special Deputy Collector Stewart, warned the port appraiser that the customs house had received word to the effect that an effort was under way to slip the films into the United States, and said that this effort must be blocked. All examiners on the appraiser's staff were notified last night in pursuance to the instructions of Deputy Collector Steward's letter to be on the lookout for the Willard-Johnson films. They were informed that importation of the films was forbidden under the terms of a congressional enactment of July 31, 1912, which had been construed to apply to all fights, whether prize fights within the meaning of the law, or boxing bouts.

The news that the customs officials were taking a final and vigorous stand against the importation of the films and that it would be impossible to bring them in created much comment among theatrical promoters who had been estimating the probable profits from the films at over half a million dollars.

Jess Willard, one of the men most interested in the situation from a financial point of view, heard about the custom house's attitude toward the case while he was dressing to perform his vaudeville act tonight.

"Huh," he sniffed, as he finished reading a copy of the instructions to port examiners to exercise extreme watchfulness to detect the pictures, "I guess that means we can't afford to take any chances of losing the films just at present. You can say for me that we did not expect to bring the films in at this time, and that we have made no effort to break past the custom house with them, and don't intend to make any such effort."

Almighty Heart Is Stronger Than Almighty Dollar

One of Sir Gilbert Parker's Utterances in Praise of U. S. Attitude

LONDON, April 16.—Sir Gilbert Parker took occasion at a meeting of the Pilgrims tonight to pay a warm tribute to the United States for the attitude it has maintained during the war. He said:

"Never has a neutral nation had such problems as the United States has faced with a temperateness, courtesy and moderation for which this country cannot be too grateful."

"The American Government," continued the speaker, "has pursued the only course possible to a nation desirous of preserving its deservedly right reputation in the field of diplomacy. It has been in true sympathy with the high-mindedness and sensible idealism of the American people in regard to the great events of the world's history. It is not surprising, therefore, that all the combatants in this great war desire at least America's good opinion."

Later in the course of his speech Sir Gilbert said: "In the interests of stable civilization it is essential that a steadying, wholesome, dispassionate, honorable influence shall be used in the interests of the whole world, particularly the interests of small nations when the end of the war comes."

He praised the work of the American ambassadors in connection with the prisoners, and declared that the editorials in the American press were a credit to the great journalistic publications, and showed that "Americans understand this war even better than we do." He rejoiced that not least one great nation has a population at peace, is not building up a debt of thousands of millions, or living on credit, and is free from the direful disturbance of finance caused by the peremptory and formidable necessities of war," and in conclusion he declared—"The almighty heart is still stronger in the United States than the almighty dollar."

Hon. R. McBride Now in London

British Columbia Premier on Unexplained Mission

LONDON, April 16.—Sir Richard McBride, Premier of British Columbia, who arrived in London unexpectedly at the beginning of the week, has not been well since reaching the Metropolis. His trip was evidently undertaken at short notice, as he is unaccompanied, and his name did not appear on the passenger list of the Lusitania. The Gazette gathers that no purely provincial business called the Premier to England, but that he is in touch with the War Office and the Admiralty, as well as the Foreign Office Department. It is only four months since his previous visit, on which occasion he acted on behalf of the Dominion Government in connection with defence matters.

The new building in the west end for the British Columbia agency is only half finished, progress in its construction being slow owing to the material being held up by trans-portation difficulties.

Hon. J. H. Turner, agent-general for British Columbia, is not in good health.

Car Wrecks An Ambulance

Doctor and Driver Narrowly Escape Death While Going to Aid Dying Man

MONTREAL, April 16.—A General Hospital Ambulance was smashed to splinters and Dr. Alexander Sproule and the driver, Fred Burns, narrowly escaped death last evening when a car crashed into the speeding vehicle at the corner of Papineau avenue and Dorchester street at 5.30 o'clock. The ambulance was hurrying to the Canadian Vickers Company's plant at Maisonneuve where James McDermott, 55 years of age, of 609 St. Catherine street east was dying from a fractured skull sustained when he was run down by a street car.

A second ambulance was called out from the General Hospital and Dr. Sproule and the driver were removed to the institution. Both were suffering from painful cuts and contusions. Meanwhile an ambulance from the Notre Dame Hospital had removed McDermott who died an hour after admission to the Hospital.

Not What He Expected

Former Argonaut Football Star Writes from Front

BROCKVILLE, Ont., April 16.—Maj. Russell Britton, the former Argonaut football star, enlister with the first Canadian contingent and, writing from somewhere in France, gives an interesting account of his experiences. "The real thing, as is generally the case is nothing like what I expected," he says. "The battery I am attached to has been in this place since November and frost two or three rounds per day, according to the targets that present themselves and they have not lost a single man in the whole time although they have been heavily shelled on several occasions."

Major Britton thinks the war will last for a long time, basing his assumption on the fact that his battery has not moved a foot in a month, nor have the infantry in the trenches.

The end of the war prophets are pretty well agreed on August for the close of hostilities. It will close one year of the cruelest period in the world's history.

The only elevating thing about the elevated structure in this district is the fact that it is a few feet above the ground.

The King's Stratagem

The young noble gazed at him in surprise, half smiles, half incredulous. But when Henry, in low, rapid tones, had expounded his plan, the young man's face underwent a change. Hope and life sprang into it. The blood flew to his cheeks. His whole bearing softened. In a moment he was on his knee, mumbling the king's hand, his eyes full of joy and gratitude. After that the two talked long, the murmur of their voices broken more than once by the ripple of low laughter. When they at length separated, and Henry, his face hidden by the folds of his cloak, had stolen away to his lodgings, where, no doubt, more than one watcher was awaiting him with a mind full of anxious fears, the vicomte threw open his window and looked out on the night. The moon had set, but the stars still shone peacefully in the dark canopy above. He remembered on a sudden, his throat choking with silent repressed emotion, that he was looking toward his home—the stiff gray pile among the beech woods of Navarre which had been in his family since the days of St. Louis, and which he had so lightly risked. And he regained a vee in his heart that of all Henry's servants he would henceforth be the most faithful.

Meanwhile the Captain of Creance was enjoying the sweets of coming triumph. He did not lose out in the night, it is true, but pacing up and down the lists he planned and calculated, considering how he might make the most of his success. He was still comparatively young. He had years of strength before him. He would rise. He would not easily be satisfied. The times were troubled, opportunities many, fools many; bold men with brains and hands few.

At the same time he knew that he could be sure of nothing until Lavigny was actually his, and he spent the next few days in considerable suspense. But no hitch occurred. The viscount sent the necessary communications to him; and men in his own pay informed him of dispositions ordered by the governor of Lusigny which left him in no doubt that the lover intended to pay his debt.

It was, therefore, with a heart already gay with anticipation that the Captain rode out of Creance two hours before midnight on an evening eight days later. The night was dark, but he knew the road well. He had with him a powerful force composed in part of thirty of his own garrison, bold, hardy fellows, and in part of six score horsemen, lent him by the governor of Montauban. As the viscount had undertaken to withdraw, under some pretence or other, one-half of his command, and to have one of the gates opened by a trusty hand, the Captain fretted along in considerable spirits, and stopped to scan with approval the dark line of his troopers as they plodded past him, the jingle of their swords and corselets ringing sweet music in his ears. He looked for an easy victory; but it was not any slight misadventure that would rob him of his prey. As his company wound on by the riverside, their accustomed security lulled them as they passed into the black shadow of the olive grove which stands a mile to the east of Lusigny, he felt little doubt of the success of his enterprise.

Treachery apart, that is; and of treachery there was no sign. The troopers had entered the lighted road the last clump of trees before a figure

Municipal Bonds are Paid out of Taxes.

Taxes are a First Lien on Property.

Municipal bonds are therefore a prior lien to first mortgages. If a municipality should be so foolish as to refuse to pay its debenture interest or principal, the debenture could be put in the power under such conditions, to levy and collect by enforcement proceedings a special tax rate sufficient to pay the bonds.

Municipal Bonds which normally sold to yield the investor from 5 per cent to 6 per cent we are now offering to yield from 6 per cent to 7½ per cent.

detached itself from one of the largest trunks, and advanced to their leader's rein. The captain saw with surprise that it was the viscount himself. For a second he thought something had gone wrong, but the young noble's first words reassured him. "It is all right". M. de Lanlieon whispered, as the captain bent down to him. "I have kept my word, and I think that there will be no resistances. The planks for crossing the moat lie opposite the gate. Knock three at the latter, and it will be opened. There are not fifty armed men in the place."

"Good" the captain answered, in the same cautious tone. "But you—"

"I am believed to be elsewhere, and must be gone. I have far to ride to-night. Farewell."

"Till we meet again", the captain answered; and with that his ally glided away and was lost in the darkness. A cautious word set the troop again in motion, and a very few minutes saw them standing on the edge of the moat, the outline of the gateway tower looming above them, a shade darker than the wrack of clouds which overhead raced silently across the sky. A moment of suspense while one another shivered—for there is that in a night attack which touches the nerves of the stoutest—and the planks were found, and at quietly as possible laid across the moat. This was so successfully done that it evoked no challenge, and the captain crossing quickly with some picked men stood almost in the twinkling of an eye under the shadow of the gateway. Still no sound was heard save he hurried breathing of those at his elbow or the stealthy tread of soft-shod feet. Carefully he knocked three times and waited. The third rap had scarcely sounded, however, before the gate rolled silently open, and he sprang in, followed by his men.

So far so good. A glance at the empty street and the porter's pale face told him at once that the vicomte had kept his word. But he was too old a soldier to take anything for granted, and forming up his men as quickly as they entered, he allowed no one to advance until all were inside, and then, his trumpet sounding a wild note of defiance, his force sprang forward in two compact bodies, and in a moment the town was theirs, and Lusigny in the hands of the enemy.

As the vicomte had promised, there was no resistance. In the small keep a score of men did indeed run to arms, but only to lay them down without striking a blow when they became aware of the force opposed to them. Their leader, sullenly acquiescing, gave up his sword and the keys of the town to the victorious captain, who, as he set his horse in the middle of the market-place, giving his orders and sending off riders with the news, already saw himself in fancy governor of a province and Knight of the Holy Ghost.

As the rod light of the torches fell on steel caps and polished hauberks, on the serried ranks of pikemen, and the circle of white-faced townsmen, the picturesque old square looked doubly picturesque. Every five minutes, with a flutter of sizes on the rough pavement and a shower of sparks, a horseman sprang away to tell the news at Montauban or Cayhors, and every time that this occurred, the captain, astride on his charger, felt a new sense of power and triumph.

Suddenly the low murmur of voices was broken by a new sound, the burst of cheers and loud, rejoicing cries arriving. There was something in the noise which made the captain prick his ears, and secured for the moment a speedy passage through the crowd. Even at the last the man did not spare his horse, but spurring to the captain's side, then sank there with sprang to the ground. His face was pale, his eyes were bloodshot. His right arm was bound up in blood stained cloths. With an oath of amazement, the captain recognized the officer whom he had left in charge of Creance and thundered out, "What is it?"

"They have got Creance!" the man gasped, reeling as he spoke. "They have got Creance!"

"What" the captain shrieked, his face purple with rage.

"The little man of Bearn! He assaulted it five hundred strong an hour after you left and had the gate down before we could fire a dozen shots. We did what we could, but we were but one to seven. I swear, captain, we did all we could: Look at this!"

Almost black in the face, the captain swore another frightful oath. It was not only that he saw governorship and honors vanish like will-o'-wisps, but that he was even more quickly that he had made himself the laughing-stock of a kingdom! And he had. To this day among the stories which the southern French love to tell of the prowess and astuteness of the great Henry, there is none more frequently told, or more frequently laughed over, than that of the famous exchange of Creance for Lusigny.

ZAM-BUK UNANIMOUSLY ENDORSED

A prominent Woman's Journal recently asked its lady readers to give an opinion, based on personal experience of several widely-known Canadian products. The publishers received over 12,000 replies to the following effect.—"In connection with our competition, we have received in the neighborhood of 12,000 letters. We do not know of one instance where the proportion of satisfied users of any product was so great as proved to be the case in regard to Zam-Buk.

Herein lies the proof of the superiority of Zam-Buk—the proof of excellence! No amount of advertising, no concentration on our part could create such unbounded confidence in Zam-Buk as these Canadian housewives have expressed. Only the plain straightforward test of Zam-Buk in the home could do this.

Zam-Buk is entirely different to all other ointments. Most ointments contain coarse animal fats. In some cases these fats clog up the pores of the skin and hurt its action. Zam-Buk is purely herbal.

The ingredients have no antiseptic properties, cannot cause the pain, and in fact cause pain when used. Zam-Buk, on the other hand, is antiseptic. As soon as applied to a wound or sore it kills the germs, thus banishing all risk of blood poison, and ends pain. Zam-Buk, unlike many ointments, contains no poisonous coloring matter, or harsh mineral.

Zam-Buk is superior to all other ointments, because it is purely herbal and is healing, soothing and antiseptic.

If you suffer from any skin disease, injury, or chronic sore, remember the 12,000 women who say Zam-Buk has here proved Zam-Buk. Do not waste time and money experimenting with inferior remedies—try Zam-Buk first! All druggists and stores sell Zam-Buk, or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, will send you a free trial box on receipt of this article, name of paper, and 1c stamp to pay return postage.

THE RURAL TELEPHONE

There can be no doubt that a good telephone development in the rural community surrounding a town is of great benefit to both town and country. The Chesley "Enterprise" of April 1st last expresses its satisfaction with the telephone development in the district tributary to Chesley in the following terms:

"Chesley may well be proud of its rural telephone connection. There are to-day approximately three hundred such phones which are owned and maintained by farmers. The lines connect direct with the switchboard of the Bell Company, the farmers paying that company a small annual fee for service. In this way the farmer obtains intercommunication not only with his neighbor on the same line, but with all phone holders comprising the Chesley Exchange. Long distance connections are also available when desired. When this development, commenced in 1908, when the Orr & Sjolnhoff line and the North Grant Association were organized the first month has taken place since 1911 when no less than thirteen local systems have been formed.

"The splendid showing has been brought about by co-operating with the Bell company and illustrates what may be accomplished in other sections where the farmer's phone is lacking if the farmers will go about it in the right way. Until recently the Chesley farmer lines imposed an extra toll of 10c. on each Long Distance connection. Recognizing if a Paisley 'phone holder talked to a farmer on the Chesley line he was charged 35c. of which 15c. accrued to the Bell Company and 20c to the Chesley line whereas on a similar call reversed, the farmer on the Chesley line only paid 15c. the Bell regular long distance rate. This meant that the same was not charged for the service. Recently ways and the Railway Boards insists that there should be no discrimination. The Bell company charged the same to its own subscribers as to the farmers' lines on all long distance business, so we think the Chesley farmers have adopted a wise course in abolishing this extra charge, thereby making the rate the same to all subscribers at Chesley exchange, whether they are Bell or connected on one of the many local lines."

No Conscription Likely for Britain

Well Over Two Million Have Volunteered, Government Is Silent

London, April 17.—It is impossible even for members of Parliament to find out how many soldiers Great Britain has in training. They have put the question in the House of Commons, answering it, saying that the information would be so valuable to the enemy that it must remain secret.

Meanwhile the friends of conscription, which include Lord Northcliffe's papers, are speaking of the need for a census of the population, and of the necessity for that board of recruiting, and in the daily papers are such appeals as that appearing today from a recruiting committee for Tooting, which says:

"As all efforts are made to obtain the enlistment of the many thousands of young, eligible single men in this town and district fail to meet with success, the Government should start without delay some compulsory system."

To the Government still continuing its reserve and newspaper advocates of conscription it does not show the slightest disposition to do, and apparently is satisfied with the present progress, which, as Chancellor of the Exchequer Lloyd George has said, has produced the largest volunteer army the world ever saw.

The government affirms with knowledge of the situation, is the authority for the statement that the British soldiers so far put into the field, the Canadians, the New Zealand, Australian and Indian units—regulars, territorials, volunteers, and all—probably amount to two and a half million men. As the British, when the war started, told the French they would send but 100,000 men to help them, this seems a large army. Whether it is accurate or is deemed satisfactory by the Government cannot be said, though it is significant that the advocates of conscription seem utterly unable to move the authorities toward any form of compulsory service.

THE ORDER OF ST. JOHN

Every large town in England seat its quota of St. John Ambulance men for service in the military and naval hospitals.

This is an ancient order, which owes its origin to the year 1050, when a few wealthy merchants obtained sanction to found a hospital within the walls of Jerusalem, the object being to succor the poor sick pilgrims who made their pilgrimage to the Holy City. Many hospitals were founded by the Order, and after the Holy Wars w- find them established at Malta in 1575, which hospital still stands. Eventually the banner of the Order was planted in England at Clerkenwell—at that time a small village near London—where the Order still has its headquarters at St. John's Gate.

They were not long to enjoy their privileges in England, for in 1540 Henry VIII. decreed the abolition of all religious orders and monasteries. The Order of St. John shared their fate, to be restored again when Philip and Mary came to the throne. Again the Order was dissolved by Queen Elizabeth. Then, in the year 1827, came a great demand for the revival of the Order—contemporaneous to Peace —and King George IV. became interested, and appointed a Grand Prior of the Order, and since that date it has gone steadily on, and its ambulance department today is one of the greatest humanitarian movements of the age.

Passed Resolutions

The following resolution was passed at the Monthly Meeting of the Quinte Chapter, I.O.D.E. on Wednesday, April 14th

At a meeting of the Quinte Chapter, Imperial Order of the Daughters of the Empire, it was Resolved:—

THAT WHEREAS a Peace Propaganda ostensibly emanating from certain neutral countries is now being industriously circulated and addressed to the Woman of the World calling for united effort on their part to stop the war.

AND WHEREAS, while we recognize the great value of peaceand the terrible misfortunes of war, we also believe that peace with honor is even a greater degradation than all the horrors of war.

AND WHEREAS, believing as we sincerely do, that the Empire and Allied Forces have been compelled to resort to armed resistance to defeat the unholy attempt to make honor, liberty and justice subservient to an insatiable greed for power.

BE IT RESOLVED that this Chapter hereby expresses its unanimous opinion and hope that the Women of the World and more especially of Canada will refuse to give any assistance or countenance to any Peace Propaganda or stopping of the war until such time as the Empire and Allied Forces are able to dictate and procure such terms as will insure for us and future generations a due and proper recognition of the rights of the weak, the necessities of truth, the honor of nations, and the liberty of all subjects, and that we give every aid and encouragement to any power until such result is achieved.

BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED that a copy of this Resolution be signed by the Regent and Secretary and be forwarded to Mrs. H. L. Parke, Secretary, National Chapter, 216 Bloor St. E., Toronto.

AN EXCELLENT REMEDY FOR LITTLE ONES

Mrs. Sidney Dalby, Audley, Ont., writes: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets for the past twelve months and have found them an excellent medicine for my little girl." Thousands of other mothers say the same thing—once a mother has used the Tablets she would use nothing else. They are pleasant to take; the result is sure, and above all they are guaranteed by a government analyst to be absolutely free from injurious drugs. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

BASKETBALL SEMI-FINALS

In what was practically the semi-finals of the Sunday School Baseball League, Junior section, St. Andrews defeated John by a score of 15-13. John St. claim that they should be allowed another basket (2 points), which was scored by their team after the referee had blown a foul in favor of their team. This matter will be given consideration. Baptists defeated St. Michael's by the score of 16-3, in a close checking game, and are now in position to win out in the league.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS

Coal mining rights in the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, the Northwest Territories and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections, or legal subdivisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked out by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5 which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

CHILD DROWNED IN MADAWASKA

AENPRIOR, April 16.—The first drowning accident of the season occurred here on Wednesday afternoon when Cecelia Loranger, a girl of five summers, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Loranger, Chaude street, just her life in Madawaska River.

The child was sitting on a large rock on the bank of the river, just behind the Loranger home, and was playing at some childish game, when suddenly she toppled into the water; no person saw her fall except a little brother and he at once ran home and gave the alarm.

The child drifted into the current and quickly floated down stream as far as the mill bridge; there the body was recovered after being in the water about forty minutes. Dr. Simpson and Sweeney worked over the little form, but to no avail.

WANTS COFFINS TO MAKE A SENSATION

LONDON, Ont., April 16.—Thomas Carr, who says he hails from Toronto, created some excitement this morning by endeavoring to buy several coffins.

He had the cash with which to make the purchases, but as he would not give the undertakers any definite information as to what he wanted to do with them, they refused to sell. Finally he confided to one of that the coffins were necessary for a blood curdling sensation which was about to occur.

This statement caused Ryan to be turned over to the police with the result that Magistrate Judd remanded him for a week so that he may be examined as to his sanity.

Brother of Winnipeg Man Decorated For Conspicuously Gallant Deed

How a young brother of a Winnipeg man, Mr. R. L. Foster, of the McLaren Hotel, prevailed, saved a position for his regiment by gallantry, carrying an important message in the face of the enemy's fire, to be rewarded with the Distinguished Conduct Medal, was told in the columns of an English exchange. The item read:

"An instance of an 18-year-girl-and-lad securing high honor is that of Drummer Arthur W. Foster, sons of Staff-Sergt. A. W. H. Foster, an old army man, who has now gone back to the service and is doing duty in the Army School of Cookery at Aldershot. The boy has been awarded the Distinguished Conduct Medal by His Majesty the King for conspicuous bravery in the field. He, with two companions (a color-sergeant and a private), displayed great coolness and gallantry in bringing up supports and ammunition in a perilous passages under a deadly hail of fire during a very stiff battle. It is stated in a private letter which has reached home that the lad practically saved the position by getting through with a certain message when all others had failed. Young Foster enlisted as a drummer in the 1st Battalion of the South Wales Borderers at Chatham in January, 1913. He is only 13 years of age, and has taken to his profession with great enthusiasm, making himself extremely popular with his companions and much respected by the officers, who think a great deal of him."

Furnishing a Dreadnought

The 16-inch gun of a Dreadnought is 50 feet long, and it set upon end would be higher than many a country church tower. The cost of each gun is about $50,000, while each time it is fired $500 vanishes into the air.

As a protection against the guns of the enemy, a Dreadnought is covered with armor costing $600 per ton, and as something like 4,800 tons are used in covering the vessel this amounts to an expenditure of close upon $2,000,000.

Boilers and machinery at $1,612,000, motor and steam launches at $40,000, torpedo-tubes at $15,000 each and torpedoes at $3,500 each; and $250,000 for searchlights and electrical fittings are other items in the bill which go to make a Dreadnought the costliest vessel afloat.

THIS ANARCHIST A MILLIONAIRE

(A True Detective Story).

Scotland Yard differs on many subjects amongst itself, but it is agreed upon one point, and that is that the most dangerous, slippery, and remarkable "rookery" to deal with was George Ferdinand Springmuhl von Wiesenfeld.

They nicknamed him the Anarchist millionaire, partly because he devoted a considerable proportion of the money he acquired by a life of crime to furthering the anarchist cause, and also because many of his chosen associates, both men and women, were revolutionary Anarchists of a pronounced type.

He came of a good family, and was well-to-do, well educated, having graduated with high honors in science, medicine, and literature at one of the principal German universities. But he was a born criminal, and a degenerate, a throw-back to the ancient savage.

A little matter of forgery and attempted murder made his native land too hot to hold him, and he fled to England. This was in 1880, and it did not take him long to blossom forth into a professional blackmailer and swindler of a peculiarly odious type.

Her Ten Taken Alive

Once he found himself in the clutches of the law, and received a well-merited sentence at the Old Bailey of twelve months' imprisonment with hard labor. His temper was not improved by this one taste of oakum picking, and he vowed that he would never do another "stretch" (year's imprisonment), no matter what it cost. After this he always went armed.

His specialty about this time was bogus companies and mines, and he did remarkably well out of it from his point of view. From one concern alone he netted $200,000. Another yielded him $250,000 or more. He opened more than one hundred different banking accounts in as many different names, and he kept an album in which he entered his different aliases side by side with a proper signature. This album is now preserved as a curiosity at Scotland Yard.

As has been intimated, he swore that he would never be taken alive, and although as a result of his colossal frauds half the detectives in Europe were presently searching for him, it looked as if he would beat them all. His cunning was almost superhuman, and he took no chances. He employed a small army of private detectives to shadow the Scotland Yard detectives who were trying to shadow him. He rented a fine house—in an assumed name, of course—near Wembley Park, and spent thousands on people in London in forming subterranean passages leading to secret exits, through which he could escape, if need be, when hard pressed.

Scotland Yard heard of the existence of this den, and raided it, but the bird had flown. Next week he was heard of at another place near London, where he was engaged in printing and handing out counterfeit bills of a kind about which the less said the better.

Secret Chambers and Dark Tunnels

This house also was raided, but once more the wanted man had disappeared. The detectives found, however, evidence of his many skilled crimes. But the shape of six of the newest and most expensive kinds of linotype machines, together with many thousands of objectionable books, all ready printed. These were destroyed on a magistrate's order.

The search for the master criminal was continued, and at last he was located in a large mansion at Sandbridgeshire, known as "Eldenfield." This house, which stood in its own grounds, had been chosen for its seclusion, like the one at Wembley Park, and, like it, too, it had been fitted with an elaborate system of sliding panels, secret chambers, and underground passages.

All this was known to the Yard, and it was known, too, that an armed and desperate man lurked within. Consequently, it was determined to send the very best men available to enter the house and effect the actual arrest, while other plain-clothes officers distributed to watch the various exits in the grounds outside.

Five officers told off for the dangerous part of the job were Chief Inspector Arrow (afterwards appointed Chief of the Barcelona Police), Detective-Sergeant Sweeny, and Sergeant-Inspector (afterwards Inspector) Badcock.

These were experienced men, and they laid their plans well. One went up to the door disguised as a tradesman's assistant, and knocked. The other two were hiding in the shrubbery near by.

At the knock the door was opened ever so little, and before it could be closed again the three detectives were inside. Instantly a shrill whistle was sounded from within, and when the house was searched the anarchist millionaire was apparently nowhere within it.

There were plenty of servants about, of both sexes, but they one and all professed to know nothing. The detectives searched high and low for nearly two hours, but their search was in vain. Yet that the wanted man was somewhere in the house there was certain. Every exit was being watched by their colleagues, outside, and these had made no sign.

Searching the Lion in His Den

At length, just when they were on the verge of despair, a secret panel was discovered, and this, on being forced open, revealed a passage just large enough to admit one person. It was pitch dark within, but out of the darkness came the sound of suppressed breathing.

Here, then, was their quarry. But which one? The detectives were going to risk almost certain death by searching him in his own den now he was at bay?

The question in reality admitted but of one answer. It is an unwritten law of Scotland Yard that the post of danger shall be given to the junior, for

FIGHTING IN FORESTS

Trees Help to Win Battles—Bodies of Troops Easily Concealed in Woods

Commanders in Europe take full advantage of the wooded state of the country over which the war is taking place, and forests play an important part in various strategical moves. Pierre Agine, in the 2nd contingent of frequent occurrence, as such positions are a decided advantage to the army having possession of them. They offer a serious obstacle to the advance of the enemy, for troops cannot march neither can artillery be rapidly transported through dense woods. While roads are available can also be simply blocked by a few fallen trees. The latter tactics are especially effective for covering up retreats.

Many batteries are also accepted in woods, away from the prying eyes of aerial scouts. The guns are placed in clearings and they send out shells in an upward direction. An army possessing a wood is perfectly happy a position as if they were safely ensconced in a steel fort. They can conceal their movements, and an approaching enemy, and, being practically invisible, they are safe from serious counter-attack. The only difficulty in the way of dislodging an army from a wood is to fire it, and burn the soldiers out. This is seldom done, however, as a hostile army covets the wood for its own purposes, and is not likely to destroy these forti-fications of Nature.

Trees are also useful in providing wood for fuel and constructional purposes. Modern armies are provided with huge workshops where rough wood can be sawn and cut into planks, and huts can thus be constructed and wood for entrenches provided.

Futile Teuton Rage

The German motto, "God punish England," can be translated as "Get Germany in the form of a rubber stamp for use on the backs of letters," newspapers, etc. Thus the perpetrator of this execration is hunted on collection boxes, on the walls of cafes, and amid patriotic decorations.

CARDINAL FACTS

This is Canada's war.

What will the harvest be?

Increase of knowledge means increase of production.

The first essential for the highest yield is good seed.

Not only grain growers, but breeders and all producers are making history at this juncture.

All grain intended for seed should be cleaned and graded, in order to retain only the strong kernels.

Farmers who have separate houses for their laborers have no difficulty in securing help.

If labor is scarce now, it will not be more plentiful in another year, so it is wise to encourage present help.

Austria has decreed that every acre must be utilized for production. Waste land is the worst form of extravagance.

Canada is many times larger in area than Belgium, but in population there is not a great deal of difference, that is, considering Belgium before the war. Britain is the protector of small states. The greater the area and variety of area, the more protection is needed when emergency arises.

Japanese Soldiers in Canadian Regiment

Teiji Nishioka of the 9th Canadian Mounted Rifles is one of the very few Japanese in Canada who have been allowed to enlist. He is working as a bell-boy in the Empress Hotel at Swift Current, Sask., and left for the 2nd contingent, but was turned down on account of his height, as he could boast but 5 feet 2 inches, and the standard called for 5 feet 7 inches. However, he bided his time till the call came, and, applying as much freedom as the standard being reduced "Peter" on he is called, was accepted. He has an uncle who is a captain in the Japanese regular army.

FIGHTING THE GERMS

Japanese Led the Way in Battle Against Disease Among Soldiers

"What we and our gallant allies have to fight against is germs, as much as Germans and Austrians," said a member of the Army Medical Department to a correspondent, "In practically every war disease has been more fatal than bullets, and the victorious general is he who is most successful in guarding against it. In six months in the Crimean War the allied forces lost 50,000 men from disease as against 2,000 from bullets. In that war whole regiments were wiped out by sickness without even seeing the firing line.

"There were 80,000 fatalities in the American Civil War of 1861-65. Three-quarters of the deaths were due to disease. In this respect, too, the United States fared hardly in the war with Spain, no fewer than fourteen soldiers dying from disease for every one killed in action, while in the Russo-Turkish War the toll from pestilence alone totalled over 80,000. In the Boer War we lost 5,821 men from typhoid, diarrhoeal disease, rheumatism, and malaria, while more than 20,156 had to be sent home as invalids. Yet in actual fighting we had only 2,364 killed, while some 900 died from wounds.

"As a matter of fact, the Japanese were the first to show the way how to grapple with disease on the battle field. In their war with Russia they placed in the field and in their navy 1,200,000 men. Their losses were as follows: Killed in battle, 47,152; died of wounds, 11,424; and deaths from disease, 27,592. These splendid results are a record in modern warfare. The usual fatality in war is one from bullets to four from disease. The Japs lost three from bullets to one from disease.

"These are the reasons why our British soldiers are inoculated against typhoid, while every precaution is taken to see that the men drink only water. We have plenty of good, wholesome food and warm clothing. We learned this valuable lesson from the Japs, and so the battlefield in South Africa we also did the Russians in their struggle with Japan."

IT'S THE NAVY THAT GOES IT

It is one of the commonplaces of this war that the operations of the navy are silent and invisible. Litti tmaginative is he, however, required to realize the contrast in the conditions at the five greatest ports of Europe—Rotterdam, Antwerp, Dover, Calais, but three-fourths German in its service, is languishing as a fraction its ordinary trade. Antwerp is merely cut off from its overseas trade, and any slight ripple on the Scheldt arises from the navigation small vessels and barges plying between it to Germany cotton and other goods "lifted" by the enemy from the warehouses in the Belgian port. The magnificent port of Hamburg affords but a pallatial prison for its own liner that were at its quays when war broke out, whilst a few vessels have dart furtively across the Baltic to the Elbe from Sweden and Denmark with such parcels of merchandise as can elude the vigilance on the part of the allies of the prohibition of neutrals. But the trade of London and Liverpool—by far the greatest in volume flows in and out with exactitude, subject as much freedom of security as in peace time, and the only problems are to find space an labor for the goods that pile up. And we know is coming in the immediate future.—Westminster Gazette.

ITALY CAN MOBILIZE A FINE ARMY HER NAVY IS ALSO FORMIDABLE

Has a Total Land War Strength of 3,400,000—Dreadnaughts Ready.

Bersaglieri Regiment Regarded as One of World's Best Corps.

ITALY'S total army war strength is roughly estimated at 3,400,000 men, but of these over 2,000,000 comprise what is known as the territorial militia, which is practically untrained. There are twelve army corps, each district corps Rome having two infantry divisions. Rome has three. Recently the corps on the Austrian frontier has been greatly strengthened; and the others since the beginning of hostilities in Europe have been mobilizing to their full war strength.

The organization of Italy's permanent army includes ninety-six regiments of line infantry, twelve regiments of Bersaglieri and eight Alpine regiments, in all 363 battalions. There are twenty-nine regiments of field artillery and thirty-six of fortress artillery. The army also has a regiment of horse artillery, ten regiments of mountain artillery, ten regiments of mixed artillery, two of fortress artillery and six regiments of engineers. A large battalion of aviators has been organized and 1,000 officers are for use in war.

Italy also has a fairly large navy. It comprises twenty-one battleships, five armored cruisers, thirteen protected cruisers, seventy-seven torpedo boats, about twenty-eight submarine boat destroyers and about twenty submarines. Incidentally Italy was the first European country to begin the construction of battleships of the Dreadnought type.

The newest Italian Dreadnoughts, the Andrea Doria and Caio Duilio, have completed their speed and artillery trials.

It is likely that they will be put in commission by May 1. The completion of these two vessels will increase the number of Italy's Dreadnoughts to eight. The first vessel of the class in the Italian navy was the Dante Alighieri, completed in January, 1913. Four super-Dreadnoughts, carrying fifteen-inch guns each, are projected.

ARE SISTER SHIPS.

The Andrea Doria and Caio Duilio are sister ships, begun respectively in March and April, 1912, and launched in the spring of 1913. Their general specifications are identical with those of the Conte di Cavour, Leonardo da Vinci and Giulio Cesare, which were laid down in 1910 and are now in commission. The length of these ships on the water line is 575.5 feet. They have a displacement of 22,340 tons and an indicated speed of twenty-three knots. They are driven by Parsons turbines. The armament comprises a complete belt of armor ter inches thick amidships, tapering to 4.7 inches thick at the ends, with heavily armoured turrets, barbettes and conning tower and an armored deck. Each of the new vessels carries thirteen 13-inch guns, twenty-six 5-inch and eighteen three-inch guns and four submerged tubes.

The three ships begun in 1910 have eighteen 4.7-inch guns instead of the eight-inch guns on the older vessels. The new vessels are intended to have a complement of 1,000 officers and men each.

The following pre-mobilization announcement was published in Rome:

"The first and second categories of the ten classes from 1886 to 1895 are to be assigned to the field army troops; the third category of the ten classes, 1876 to 1885, and the categories of the ten classes from 1876 to 1895, are to be assigned to the mobile and territorial militia."

Thus all able-bodied men between the ages of twenty and forty are to be enlisted. Four classes—those of 1892, 1893, 1894, 1895—are now with the colors. The three classes recently trained and sent home are liable to immediate mobilization.

All Italians are liable to military service for nineteen years from the age of twenty. Two years are spent with the colors, six "on congo," four in the mobile militia and seven in the territorial militia. In case of general mobilization the peace strength of 15,127 officers and 299,448 men is increased to a total of 2,423,150.

The categories of each year's recruits are regulated by family conditions specified by law. Those belonging to the first category pass only one year with the colors, but must pay about $200 to $300 annually thereafter for exemption. This privilege extends in case of a call for general mobilization such as is now imminent in Italy.

PICTURESQUE ALPINE TROOPS.

When the armies of Italy are hurled into the great European conflict some of the most interesting and picturesque actors of the world's war stage will take up their parts. The Alpini will be upon the Bersaglieri, with their plumes of cocks' feathers, and the Alpine troops who watch up perpendicular cliffs with more ease than they walk on level ground, and these are the royal carabineer and the Royal Piedmont regiment of cavalry, both holding celebrated positions among all the fighting forces of the world.

Favorites among them all are the Bersaglieri, called "the most picturesque of the corps d'elite of the armies of the world." The Bersaglieri consist of twelve regiments, each of three battalions, with one reserve company. They are the finest infantrymen in the world.

CROSE FOOREST MATERIAL.

This corps was created by General Lamarmora, one of the founders of the Italian national army. The general asked the king for the worst soldiers in the service so that he could mold them according to his own plans. His first and chief plan was to work with men naturally keen and resourceful. At the same time he wished that they be thoroughly active physically.

The Bersaglieri have continued to be a national institution. Their traditions of readiness in emergency have not allowed them to die.

No less remarkably trained and no less picturesque are the Alpine troops. The mountains are their home. Whole regiments have been drilled in all the difficulties of scaling above the clouds or on the slippery edge of cliffs, where an avalanches are supposed to travel. In the manoeuvres are to be seen long files of men, small, looking like flies on the wall of some terrible precipice, dragging inch by inch some big field gun by means of cables and pulleys.

The whole idea of such training is that each man shall be made necessary to meet an enemy equally daring and skilful among the dangerous Alpine solitudes, perhaps that they may be ready to meet the Carnic and Rhetian Alps on the border between Italy and Austria may not be the mountains on the mountaineers with the ordinary aspects of warfare.

Cost of Bombardment.

According to a writer in The War Budget, published recently, it would cost the Queen Elizabeth, Britain's new superdreadnought, which is working have among the forts of the Dardanelles, $1,250 per hour if she were to fire all her guns to full capacity for one hour. The Lion, the flagship of Admiral Beatty, used her guns during the Heligoland battle, every time she emptied one of her 13.5 guns at the Blucher.

Dernburg Has Made a Bad Mess of His Mission to States

BERNHARD DERNBURG, late of Greenwald, Berlin, and now of some inconspicuous place in the United States, has had rather an unhappy role in the present war. True, he is better off than most of his compatriots on the firing line, but his career in the past seven months has not been one of rosy success. He was sent to the United States to supplement the pro-Germanic propaganda of Count von Bernstorff, Ambassador from Germany to the United States. Bernstorff, as official envoy of the German empire, had a series of diplomatic disasters, in one of which he roused the people of the United States against him by thumbing against the Monroe Doctrine and in several other cases his tact was caught telling falsehoods. His last adventure was to declare that the Dresden was sunk in Chilean waters, and since his assertion was disproved he has subsided.

Dernburg started off with a lecture, which he made certain statements in which Prof. David Starr Jordan declared must be corrected. He began his lecturing and his pro-German publicity work with which he has reached an American university where he was billed to deliver a lecture. He explained at the time the German viewpoint and referring to the treaty guaranteeing Belgium's neutrality remarked:

"As the original treaty is in French I shall have to translate it for you."

A student rose and called out, "May I ask, Dr. Dernburg, what guarantees Belgium has that Germany would keep that promise?"

Dr. Dernburg has been high in the imperial councils. He is now fifty years of age, and has risen through a series of important positions culminating in the Secretaryship of State for the Colonies. Before this he has been the Kaiser's unofficial diplomatic agent to the United States.

A New Mine.

The British navy has developed a new type of mine which, according to The Scotsman, marks a new era in this branch of warfare. The German and French floating mines have not presented such a very difficult problem, because it has been comparatively easy to avoid them by a torpedo tube or incontinently thrown overboard. If desired, it can be set to rest on the sea floor until the minute desired for exploding by which it will come up, not to the surface, but to the proper depth at which to meet the machine drawn of a ship.

As soon as the mine, floating free, reaches a depth where it is safe to stop a series of movements, which put into operation the "sweep" gear, and this promptly kicks the mine up to the proper level, and then stops until again it explodes. It is not a mine easily caught in sweeping operations, for it progresses by jerks and in a series of slow "leaps," which have been found, as it cannot leap beyond its fixed limit of buoyancy,

The Kaiser's Train.

The headquarters of the German war staff, also the Kaiser, in its head, is a specially-constructed train, kept on a certain open line. The train, which is the Emperor's own Daily Post's correspondent, contains dining saloon, and sleeping cars, office cars, whole thing is fitted up as the last word in luxury.

IN THE BIG CITY

Mother's Advice Not to Be Foolish Was Strictly Lived Up To.

By H. M. EGBERT.

It was Lucy Bentwich's first position in the big city. She had come there from the little Ohio town in which she was born, taking with her a hundred dollars, the accumulated savings from a year's salary as teacher in the village school. But she was ambitious to do better than she had done. She was a conscientious, clever girl, and an expert stenographer.

"Goodby, dear," said her father, kissing her. "I'd like to keep you here, but I guess the farm ain't for a girl like you. Don't forget to write to me if you want any money."

Her mother added, more—shrewd advice, though she was but a country woman. Still, human nature is the same everywhere, in country or city.

"I know you'll always be good, Lucy," she said, "but don't ever be foolish. That's where the danger lies —just plain foolishness that gets one underfoot."

And now, with only half the money gone, she had secured a position in the law office of Broderick Brabscombe, the young lawyer who was sought after by clients. At the age of five and thirty he had already established himself as a leader at the bar. And he was as honest as the day —Lucy discovered that very early in her work with him.

He called her into his private office the third week. "Miss Bentwich," he said, "I want you to be my private secretary." Miss Bentwich is engaged to be married. The salary will be thirty dollars a week—please don't start. It isn't too much for you."

Their work threw them constantly together, both inside the office and out. On one occasion Miss Bentwich received a telephone message to hurry to court with a bundle of papers which her employer had accidentally left behind him. Two o'clock found them free—and famished.

"What do you say to a little lunch with me?" he asked.

That was one of the things that girls must not do, Lucy knew. But Mr. Brabscombe seemed different. He sides, he was not a married man—of that she felt sure, from sundry communications which she had taken over the telephone for him concerning his housekeeper and other items incidental to a bachelor's career.

"All right," she said, and blushed, as he took her to the finest restaurant in town. Many a client, seated at the other table, looked admiringly at the woman in the well-fitting gown, and wondered who she was. It paid Brabscombe to be seen with her, had she only suspected it. But she thought of nothing except that the dinner was excellent, and her employer's manner charming, and that she was very happy.

However, prudence dictated that she should be rather more reserved with him the following day. Mr. Brabscombe noticed this, but said nothing. Gradually her manner thawed. They were becoming fast friends. Neither of them suspected that this friendship was ripening into intimacy.

It was a little event that opened Lucy's eyes, though it might have been a big one. Mr. Brabscombe had been defending a fellow lawyer against whom a dissatisfied employe had brought a charge of a serious nature. His client was acquitted. On the following morning Lucy, entering the office, heard voices raised in loud altercation, then an oath and a threat.

She ran into her employer's room. The fellow whose charge had failed held Brabscombe by the throat, with his right hand he was striving to depress the muzzle of a revolver into line with Brabscombe's body. Brabscombe held his assailant's hand, but he was so match for him in strength. Inch by inch the weapon was falling into position. Lucy Bentwich screamed and flung herself upon him. That gave Brabscombe his opportunity to disarm the man, and a moment later a policeman, whom the clerks had summoned, came running into the room. Then Lucy collapsed into Brabscombe's arms.

She must have fainted, for had she been conscious she would never have permitted such a thing—never! And

FOOD VALUE OF NUTS GREATER THAN MEAT

Many Tasty Dishes Made From Them at Very Small Expense—Indigestibility a Fallacy

Although many are trying to eliminate so much meat from menus on account of its soaring cost, the person who performs hard labor must have in its place something which contains the chief constituents of meat, protein and fats, or the body will not respond to the demands made upon it because of lessened vitality, from lack of food elements needed. Scientific analysis has proved that nuts contain more food value to the pound than almost any other food product known. Ten cents worth of peanuts, for example, at 7 cents a pound, will furnish more than twice the protein and six times more energy than could be obtained by the same outlay for a porterhouse steak at 30 cents a pound.

One reason for the tardy appreciation of the nut's true value of nuts is their reputation for indigestibility. The discomfort from eating them is often due to insufficient mastication and to the fact that they are usually eaten when not needed, as after a hearty meal or late at night, whereas, being so concentrated, they should constitute an integral part of the menu, rather than supplement an already abundant meal. They should be used in connection with more bulky carbohydrate foods, such as vegetables, fruits, bread, crackers, etc., too concentrated nutriment is often the cause of digestive disturbance, for a certain bulkiness is essential to normal assimilation.

How to Make Nut Scrapple

A dish of nut scrapple is very appetizing. To make it, take two cupfuls of cornmeal, one of hominy, and a tablespoonful of salt, and cook in a double boiler, with just enough boiling water until it is of the consistency for frying. While still hot add two cupfuls of nut meats which have been put through the chopper; pour into buttered pan and use like ethe scrapple. Peanut omelet is a delicious way to serve nuts. Make a cream sauce with one tablespoonful of butter, two tablespoonfuls of flour, and three-quarters of a cupful of milk; poured in slowly. Take from the fire, season add three quarters of a cupful of ground peanuts, and pour the mixture on the lightly beaten yolks of three eggs. Fold in the stiffly beaten whites, pour in a hot baking dish and bake for twenty minutes.

Nut hash is another good breakfast dish. Chop fine cold boiled potatoes and any other vegetable which is on hand, and put into a buttered frying pan, heat quickly and thoroughly, salt to taste, and just before removing from the fire stir in lightly a large spoonful of peanut meal for each person to be served. Chop cooked meat at home, procure raw nuts, shell them, and put in the oven just long enough to loosen the brown skin, rub these off and put the nuts through the grinder adjusted to make meal rather than an oily mixture. This put in glass jars and kept in a cool place will be good for weeks. It may, too, be used as thickening for soups or gravy, or may be added in small quantities to breakfast muffins and griddlecakes. Potato soup, cream of pea, corn or asparagus and bean soup may be made after the ordinary recipes, omitting the butter and flour and adding four tablespoonfuls of peanut meat.

A Nut Turkey is Economical

A nut turkey is made by mixing one quart of sifted dry breadcrumbs with one pint of chopped English walnuts —any other kind of nuts will do—and one cupful of pine nuts, simply washed and dried, and adding a level teaspoonful of sage, two of salt, a tablespoonful of chopped parsley, two raw eggs, not beaten, and sufficient water to bind the mass together. Then form into the shape of a turkey, with pieces of macaroni to form the legs bones. Brush with a little butter and bake an hour in a slow oven, and baste with drawn butter sauce. As dinner roast made of nuts and cheese contains the elements of meat. Cook two tablespoonfuls of chopped onion in a tablespoonful of butter and a little water until it is tender, then mix with it one cupful each of grated cheese, chopped English walnuts, and bread crumbs, salt and pepper to taste, and the juice of half a lemon; moisten with water, using that in which the onion was cooked; put into a shallow baking dish and brown in the oven.

Avoid Rust on Iron

A simple method of making iron work proof against rust is to coat it until it is almost red hot, and then brush it over with linseed oil. This makes a varnish which, unlike oil or any paint or enamel, does not chip off.

SUFFRAGE LEADER DESPISES GERMANY

MRS. E. PANKHURST

"Prussian militarism, if it should triumph, would be the most terrible catastrophe that could happen to the women of the world," declared Mrs. Pankhurst in an interview. "It would mean the return of women to utter slavery—the renewal of the medieval conception of womankind. The military-mad type of German regards his wife as chattel; he calls her 'his houfrau'; she is woman!

"The women of England would rather face the Krupp cannon than submit to the soul-crushing dictates of the Kaiser! It finally necessary to can stand shoulder to shoulder with the men of England, who are, after all, our comrades—for the soul of the English woman is now too unfettered, too free, ever to allow the yoke of the woman-contemptuous military Germans to choke it again into the dumbness of slavery!"

Carpets on Pavements

At one time the only dyes used in the Persian carpet industry came from indigo, madder, and vine leaves. From these were evolved many delicate shades impervious to the action of sunlight. With aniline dyes the colors fade much more rapidly. In Persia you may see new carpets spread on the floors of bazaars, so that many feet may tread on them. By such hard wear—provided the colors are fast—the genuine article improves in appearance, acquiring an attractive gloss. A Persian carpet of the best kind has a marvellous number of stitches, and a beautiful of pure silk may cost hundreds of dollars.

FAKING WAR PICTURES

German Public Sees Only What the Government Allows It to See

So far as regards the war and all its lelsid issues, the moving picture is Germany is practically a branch of the government. In the latest office at Berlin there is a high official who devotes his entire attention and that of a large staff to supplying the moving-picture needs of the nation. Cinema photographers form a distinct battalion of the armies in east and west as machine guns. There is no such thing as individual pictures obtained by private operators at their own expense. Every war film and every film dealing with topical occurrences of any kind, even of a fictional character, is made by the government, and supplied at nominal rates, or given away free, to the cinema houses all over the country. Nothing is thrown on the screen in Germany unless it bears the official stamp showing that it comes from the home office.

An American newspaper photographer, who was arrested in Belgium and sent to Berlin, asked permission to go to the front as a moving picture operator. His request was refused, but he was handed 8,000-feet of film depicting war scenes for use in America. Being a somewhat unscrupulous man, he then calmly demanded that the government make a special series of pictures for him, portraying him as the victim of a British naval shell, while dining in a hotel in Ostend. Such a scene, he said, would add to the interest in the lectures with which he intended to accompany the presentation of the films. So he was taken to a cinema studio outside Berlin and the incident he had suggested was "faked up" in most realistic fashion, even to the extent of providing a young and pretty "heroine" for the drama of which he was the hero. The climax of the film shows the photographer desperately wounded, in the arms of his fair companion.

Having myself seen these pictures, says a correspondent of the London Chronicle in Germany, I can testify as to the absolute truth of the above story. It is the most striking illustration I could give of the reliability of the German government's moving picture propaganda.

KITCHENER'S FAVORITE

Sir Leslie Rundle, Grim Like His Chief, But Likes Society

A well known soldier once said, "If Kitchener ever has to send for anybody in a hurry it will be Rundle," and these words proved true when "K. of K." instructed Sir Leslie Rundle, the Governor of Malta, to return to England to take command of the Fifth British Army. No one was surprised, for the War Secretary Commander-in-Chief had long been an admirer of the military genius of the soldier who was his righthand man in the Soudan. Sir Leslie, like his brothers-in-law, Sir Francis Wingate and Sir Archibald Hunter, spent many years of his career under the guidance of Kitchener. Possibly this is why he has much of the Kitchener manner.

Sir Leslie Rundle has had nearly forty years of soldiering. Although his ancestors, who date from the Elizabethan period, were mostly soldiers—his father was a naval captain and his mother a sailor's daughter—the commander of the Fifth Army made up his mind to be a soldier almost before he left the nursery.

He was trained at the Royal Military Academy at Woolwich, and later was drafted into the Royal Artillery. He fought in the Zulu War, the Boer War of 1881, and the Soudan, took campaigns in Egypt, and was Adjutant-General under Kitchener during the Khartoum Expedition. In the last South African War Sir Leslie commanded a division, and it is interesting to note that in this campaign Sir Archibald Hunter contributed to Sir Leslie Rundle in the race for promotion, after a rivalry of many years. Rundle and Archibald Hunter became brevet majors, brevet lieutenant-colonels, brevet colonels, and major-generals each on the same day as the other.

Although in military circles Sir Leslie has earned a reputation as a stern, unsentimental campaigner, he is a popular society "lion," and in the past he has been the delight of many a country house party, keeping everyone amused by his practical jokes and endless fun.

Fighting With Water

When the Belgians opened the sluice-gates and let the sea into the basin of the Yser River to stop the German troops in their desperate attempt to advance along the coast from Ostend to Calais, they placed an obstacle in the way of the invading army that was apparently decisive in turning the issue to the advantage of the allies. This means of defence is not new. It has been used repeatedly by the people of Holland for stopping or destroying an invader, and in one case—that of the siege of Leyden, in 1574—the cutting of the dyke resulted not only in the relief of that city, but in the drowning of thousands of the invading Spanish army.

Frank Chance's "Dorts"

"To any man who wants to become a better ball player, I want to say DON'T—

"Get the swelled head.

"Quit trying until the last man is out.

"Eat crow handed.

"Slide head first.

"Forget that baseball, like everything else that is worth doing at all, is worth doing well."

FORTUNES OFFERED FOR LEADERS' HEADS

Kaiser Revived Old Customs and a Private French Citizen Returned the Compliment

According to the newspapers, the German Emperor offered a reward recently of five thousand dollars to any soldier who succeeds in killing the commander of a British armored train. This is a handsome sum, but, whether he knows it or not, the Kaiser himself is the subject of a bigger reward. The intense loathing with which he and his inhuman methods are regarded throughout France prompted a patriotic Frenchman to offer $25,000 to any soldier who puts the finishing touch to his career.

During the South African campaign the Boers entertained the most illiberal hatred towards the late Cecil Rhodes. They were reported to have offered a reward of $25,000, with three hundred acres of land and a full stock of cattle and fittings, to any burgher who would take the head of the Cape Colonist and lay it at the feet of President Kruger at Pretoria.

Only less acceptable to Oom Paul would have been the heads of Dr. Jameson and Sir John Willoughby of raid fame. Any Boer who had had the good fortune to annex them would have received the fervent blessing of his President, plus a fat reward in more substantial form.

Wanted Kruger's Ears

There was a price, too, upon Krug er's own head, and upon his ears as well. For the former a certain enterprising showman made an offer of $2,500, although it was never carried off.

As for his ears, a fairly high price was put upon them by a Lancashire man.

Having in his service a reservist who was called up, this St. Helens tradesman promised him a reward of $250 if he brought back with him the ears of Oom Paul.

For the capture of the notorious German Bandit, Captain Schiel, who was wounded and taken prisoner at the battle of Mendelsagne, the British Government once offered a reward of $4,000.

This unscrupulous scoundrel throughout the Zulu War acted as Cetewayo's military adviser, and in that capacity displayed the bitterest hatred and most questionable tactics towards the British forces. Consequently, after the battle of Ulundi, the reward mentioned was offered for his capture.

Prices Put by the Press

In the course of the war between the United States and Spain, a New York newspaper offered a reward of several thousand dollars to any of its war correspondents or other enterprising people in the war in Cuba, who succeeded in killing the Spanish General Weyler.

The offer was made because this officer was reported to have treated the Cubans with Swedish cruelty, harrowing descriptions of which, with illustrations to match, were published in the pages of the paper in question.

That this was not the first time that a newspaper put a price on the heads of prominent enemies of its country. The same thing was done by Paris journals when the former Franco German War was raging. In their case Prussia, Bismarck, and Moltke being the subjects of large money rewards offered in this way.

REGIMENTAL BADGES

Famous Corps Proud of Special Marks of Distinction

In the stories of the origin of the regimental badges and crests which decorate the uniforms and helmets of famous corps can be found many soul-stirring episodes of Britain's military glory. The official badge of the Duke of Cornwall's Light infantry is similar to that of a number of other line regiments—namely, the united red and white rose. But they also have a special badge made up of a bugle and six strings, a turreted archway, and two red feathers. The former commemorates the defence of Lucknow, while the two feathers recall an incident in the history of the 46th (South Devonshire) Regiment of Foot and the 2nd Battalion of the present regiment. In the American War of Independance, when the 46th harassed the Americans so effectively that they swore that they would give no quarter to this unit." So to prevent mistakes the 46th dyed their feathers red, and the distinction has been retained by them and by no other regiment.

A distinctive feature, too, of the badge of the Royal Sussex is the white plume, which, with the Maltese Cross, forms the collar badge of the regiment. This badge was the reward of the prowess of the predecessors of the 1st Battalion, the 35th, who at Quebec took the plume from the Royal Roussillon French Grenadiers.

The 14th Hussars carry the Prussian Eagle as a badge, which they were accorded the doubtful privilege of wearing in 1798 by the Duke of York, second son of George III., then Commander-in-Chief of the British army, in honor of his wife, a daughter of King Frederick William II. of Prussia.

The Brigade of Guards are fortunate in possessing company badges, which are borne in relation on the regimental color of each battalion. The Grenadiers have thirty of these badges, including "a stock of a shell, putting forth a green shoot," "a silver saucon within a golden fetterlock," "the sun in splendor," "ties and in the clouds," and "the white angel, bound with golden collar and chain." The Coldstreamers and the Scots each have two dozen company badges, those of the former including "a spot-ted leopard," "a centaur," "a dun cow," "a white boar with golden bridle," and an "escarbuncle," while the baby of the brigade, the Irish Guards, has eight of these special marks.

Italy is making a name for herself these days. Fully prepared for war, she has succeeded, so far, in keeping out of it.

Stand 60 Years of Experience and Progress

THIRTEEN years before Confederation John Redpath turned out "Ye Olde Sugar Loafe"—the first sugar refined in Canada.

In 1880, thirty-five years ago, the Redpath Refinery brought out Canada's first Granulated Sugar, known ever since as the best.

Again in 1913, the Redpath Refinery introduced the third great improvement in Canada's sugar supply—the Redpath 2 and 5-lb. Cartons.

DURING all these years of leadership, the Redpath aim has been QUALITY—the quality on which the national preference for Redpath Sugar now rests so solidly.

Such quality is the result, not of modern machinery alone, but of experience, modern methods, and a fixed determination to produce nothing unworthy of the name Redpath—to maintain in every pound of our product the reputation of "Canada's Standard Sugar". 120

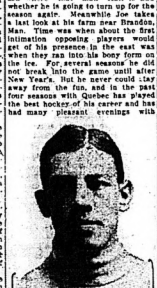
STRENUOUS PLAYER IS "BAD JOE" HALL

But the Speedy Farmer-Hockeyist is Mis-called—He is Hard Checker—Graduated in Rough School

"You might as well hang a dog as give it a bad name," is the old saw which some newspapers and some alleged students of hockey are trying always to apply to Joe Hall, the famous defence player of the Quebec N.H.A. team. Joe Hall is the proud possessor of the unique title "The Bad Man of Hockey." But he has gone along for years with the name. He is still playing a strenuous effective article of game and drawing his money regularly.

Each December the fans begin to ask where their man Hall is and whether he is going to turn up for the season again. Meanwhile Joe takes a last look at his farm near Brandon, Man. Time was when about the first intimation reporters got that Joe had got of his presence in the east was when they ran into his bony form on the ice. For several seasons he did not break into the game until after New Year's. But he never could stay away from the fun, and in the past season played with Quebec for part of the best hockey of his career and has had many pleasant evenings with



JOE HALL

Newsy Lalonde and whoever else might happen along.

Senior hockey is likely to have Hall for some years yet. He may have been playing ten years but he is now thirty and he has a reputation for taking care of himself all year 'round.

Joe began ten years ago when he was a youth, playing rover for the Brandon Hockey Club of the Manitoba League. He was an amateur then. Nine years ago he went to the Winnipegs and was on their team for two years, while they struggled to stay in the Rat Portage team, holders of the Stanley Cup. After that Hall had national League, where with Pitre and Lesueur, he was one of the Canadiens, and the famous Hod Stuart, he played in the fierce contests which hockey always produced in the cooper country.

Out of this hard school Joe Hall came to Quebec. Here he realised his ambition to be on a team that could win the Stanley Cup. Quebec came out on top twice, in 1911 and again in 1912. Joe was recognized as one of the most effective players in hockey. Nervousness is the trait which characterized his work. He checked the men and kept them from getting through, which is one of the greatest assets in him. When he rushed he went for all that was in him and that shot was wicked. He did everything too hard the critics said.

But what made him his reputation was his ability to "call" a game. He consulted with the referee to play his respects to referees. He came to feel that the referees were heeding the clamor of critics and were paying him more than one-twelfth of their attention. This did not make him more gentle or polite and most people have forgotten all about Hall's great ability and his gameness.

Quebec fans have stood by the lanky defence man. They know that when Quebec needs a goal or two badly and chances are slim it is likely to be Hall who makes the rush that puts the team back in the running. They also admire his frank way when he says, "I do not pretend to be an angel. I get them hard, but there are others who do worse and why should I be the goat?"

The famous Hall-Lalonde duel of the 1912-14 season did not disgust the Ancient City. The fans knew that Joe would never quit or kneel about getting hurt. When the contestants, the league officials and the public had got tired Quebec expected Joe to get right back to good hard hockey playing, which is exactly what he did.

This year Joseph Hall, Esq., of Brandon, Man., and Quebec is unique as ever. His reputation with the public is as hard man as ever was. On the ice his ability is as much respected. The officials still send him to the penalty box to the tune of his protestations that he got his first for some measly little arguing of a forward. On the street Hall's friends—and they include Newsy Lalonde—are apt to say "a good man" is a name that does not count with the hockey people.

Origin of Field Guns

Of all the world's great battles Crecy possesses a unique interest. Here for the first time we hear of field ordnance. They were small cannons made of iron bars, hoop-bound with iron hoops, and the missiles were of stone, scarcely larger than cricket balls. Doubtless this rude artillery made far more noise than it effected damage. It was the longbow and the broadsword that won the battle, but nevertheless gunpowder was henceforth to play an ever-increasing part in the strife of nations.

ABDUL SEES A CHANCE.

"Red Sultan" Is Looking Towards the Throne of Turkey.

An interesting phase of the war news has been the talked of rehabilitation of Abdul Hamid, the deposed Sultan of Turkey. Before news came that Abdul was prepared to take advantage of a revolution to reseize his throne the western public had almost forgotten the Red Sultan, and only wondered casually what had become of him. Abdul, with all his faults, knew his business well enough to keep on good terms with Great Britain. Time and again the British officials helped him out of a bad fix, either politically or financially. The German influence working through the Young Turk party finally took advantage of the Sultan's misdeeds to bring him to abdication. Djavid hanged V. Abdul's brother, who had been virtually appointed heir of his life, was set up as a puppet on the throne and the Young Turks worked the new machinery for their own profit—or, as it has turned out, to Germany's profit. Abdul was deposed in 1909, and if a revolution should occur might easily be made Sultan again.

EX-SULTAN ABDUL-UL-HAMID.

HISTORY OF SOISSONS

French Town Sacked and Pillaged Times Without Number.

In the history of warfare conducted in France there is no town which bears such an unenviable record as that of Soissons, which, in times of peace, has a pleasant location on one bank of the River Aisne, surrounded by wooded hills. At one time there was no more popular place of pilgrimage, when its abbeys were the richest in the land with the best liked of their contents at their head, and when the abbots of St. Medard, the most important of all French abbeys during the first two dynasties, collected money, and were lords of almost innumerable villages, farms and manors.

Soissons was the field of the missionary labors of St. Crispin and St. Crispinian, patrons of the shoemaking craft, who brought Christianity to the town in the third century. They suffered severely at the hands of Rictiovarus, the Governor, under whose orders they were stretched on the rack and after the application of several other tortures were thrown into the Aisne, a millstone having first been tied around the neck of each. They were able to swim, however, and managed to reach the opposite bank.

Soissons has been the scene of many vicissitudes and defeats, has been sacked times without number, and enjoys an unenviable notoriety for the great number of sieges it has undergone. In 1814 the Germans entered it after a bombardment of four days.

ATROCITIES IN POLAND

Polish Newspaper Published in Milwaukee Tells of German Brutality

"Poland's Chain," a daily newspaper published partly in English and partly in Polish at Milwaukee, Wis., printed a number of letters illustrative of German brutality in Poland. Among others these are typical:

"Count Thomas Potocki, of Sochaczew (near Warsaw), was taken before a German court-martial, sentenced to death and shot—because he protested against the robberies and deliberate burning and devastation committed by the German soldiery."

"In Cleplchowy, the Germans took everything away from the peasants. When leaving the palace in Cleplchowy the officers deliberately chopped to pieces all furniture and destroyed all the pictures.

"In Januszewo they robbed the palace and the peasants of everything that they could carry off.

"A detachment of German soldiers arrived in the village of Gory (near Kalisz) at night-time. When the nightwatchman asked them what they wanted, they shot him down. Then they shot and wounded several other people and burned down the palace.

"In all invaded villages everything was taken away from the peasants. Whenever anyone protested, he was shot down.

"In Tomaszow the scoundrelling officer had fill the kerosene can from a Jewish dealer. The Jew came to the officer, who was then standing on the bridge and asked him for a money order for the oil taken. In reply, the officer threw the Jew into the river. The officers appropriated for themselves all they could take in the private homes. For instance, in Silber's house they took even such things as a silk quilt and a pillow, in addition to other things. They maltreated the populace.

"As a result of these and hundreds of other abuses and brutalities, seven hundred Polish reservists in the German army near Kalisz deserted to the Russian lines. The Germans burned down several four miles away Kalisz. L. M. Kohn, a prominent Jewish merchant, was arrested and tortured, and finally killed."

BLUCHER WAS FAILURE

Authentic Story of How Germans Were Fooled Into Building Cruiser

Many stories have been told of the ill-fated cruiser Blucher, Germany's reply to the Dreadnought. But this, from the Navy and Army, is probably the true version: When the Dreadnought was laid down at Portsmouth, there were three other British ships of the same type laid down up north, only they were the first of the battle cruisers, the Invincible, Inflexible and Indomitable. The estimate for the year gave the shipbuilding program as one battleship, three armored cruisers, and the only notice taken was that it was not enough for our requirements. The armored cruisers were generally accepted as being a repetition of the "Shannon" class, and the battleship as another "Lord Nelson."

Then suddenly rumors were spread about the latter. It was going to be quite different from any other battleship; no one was allowed to go anywhere near the building slip, while building operations were pushed forward at phenomenal speed. An air of mystery surrounded the whole thing, till at last the attention of the whole world became concentrated upon it. That Germany made very desperate efforts to penetrate the veil is well known; that she failed is pretty well proved by the fact that her own battleship program was held to abeyance till the features of the British ship became known.

Not so her cruiser program, and the Blucher was the resultant armored cruiser, which was a great advance on the British Shannons, because it really embodied the all-big-gun ship idea, carrying twelve 8.2-inch, with a 26-knot speed, as against the four 9.2-inch, and ten 7.5-inch of the "Shannons" with their 23-knot speed. That Germany thought she had stolen a march on the British is certain, and her writers were jubilant. Meanwhile, the whole world talked "Dreadnought," and the three armored cruisers building up north were entirely forgotten. When these particulars at last became known, it was discovered that they carried eight 12-inch guns and had a speed of 28 knots, and as Germany had been bluffed into spending a million-and-a-quarter on a ship of no use, and which is now at the bottom.

If only one shilling's worth of food were saved weekly by every home in the British Isles food to the value of twenty-six millions sterling would be saved in the year.

Something should be done to bridge the gap between the close of flapjack season and the opening of the peach season.

THE DESTROYERS

As the name implies, torpedo boat destroyers were originally built to combat the smaller torpedo boat which had become such a serious menace to the battleships and the large cruisers that scarcelnights and rapid fire guns could not be relied upon for protection. Gradually, however, the duties of the destroyer were extended until they have absorbed all that was formerly done by the torpedo boat and much besides.

The mere fact that a modern destroyer is three or four times as large as one of the earlier boats renders it of much more seaworthy and capable of carrying on much more fuel that the radius of action of torpedo boat craft has been enormously increased, and they have become more and more a factor in an enemy's fleet.

The duties of a modern flotilla may be tabulated in this way:

First—Scouting. This comprises locating and reporting the position of the enemy and keeping in touch with him as long as may on necessary.

Second—Protection of one's own fleet from light attacks of the enemy's destroyers. This includes not only preventing and reporting the position of the hostile torpedo craft, but, if necessary, attacking them with your guns and sinking or driving them away before they can force home an attack against battleships.

Third—Attacking the battleship of the enemy with your torpedoes. This is, of course, the paramount duty of every vessel in the flotilla.

Fourth—In addition to the above "regular" duties, destroyers are frequently used in what might be called "gunboat work"—patrolling the enemy's coast, running up his rivers where the big ships cannot go, overtaking and capturing his merchant vessels and firing on troops and field batteries ashore.

SEVENTY THOUSAND TAKEN IN CARPATHIAN FIGHTS

Official Russian Summary of the Operations in the Carpathians Since April 5 Records Notable Advance Into Hungary

PETROGRAD, April 19.—(Special.)—In an official review of the campaign in the Russian Headquarters Staff, issued here last night, it is stated that the fighting since April 5 has been waged with the object of consolidating the victories won in the Carpathians.

Summing up the situation, the report says:

"On the whole Carpathian front, between March 19 and April 12, the enemy have suffered enormous losses and have left in our hands in prisoners alone at least 70,000 men, including about 900 officers. Further we have captured 30 guns and 200 machine guns.

Sixteen Attacks by Enemy.

On April 16 the armies in the Carpathians were concentrated in the direction of Rostok. The enemy, despite the enormous losses suffered during the course of that day no less than sixteen attacks in great strength. These attacks, all of which were absolutely barren of result were made against the heights we have occupied farther to the east of Telepotch.

"Our troops during the night of April 16-17, after a desperate fight, stormed and captured a height to the southeast of the village of Foden, where we took many prisoners. Three counter-attacks delivered by the enemy against this height were repulsed.

"At the beginning of March, in the principal attack on the Carpathians, we held only the region of the Dukla Pass, where our lines formed an exterior angle. All other passes, of Lupkow and farther east, were in the hands of the enemy.

"In view of this situation, our armies were assigned the further task of developing (before the season of bad roads, due to melting snow, began) our position in the Carpathians which dominated the outlets into the Hungarian plains.

"About the period indicated, the great Austrian forces which had been concentrated for the purpose of relieving Przemysl were in a position between Lupkow and Uzok Passes. It was for this sector that our grand attack was planned. Our troops had to carry out a frontal attack under very difficult conditions of terrain. To facilitate their attack, therefore, an auxiliary attack was decided upon on a front in the direction of Hartfeld, on the Lupkow.

"This secondary attack was opened March 18, and was completely developed. On March 22 and 23 our troops had already begun their principal attack in the direction of Baligrod, enveloping the enemy positions from west of Lupkow Pass, and, on the east, near the source of the San.

Enemy's Desperate Defence

"The enemy opposed a most desperate resistance to our offensive. They had brought up every available man on the front from the direction of Hartfeld as far as Uszok Pass, including even German troops and numbers of cavalrymen fighting on foot. The enemy's effectives on this front exceeded 200 battalions (an Austrian or German battalion numbers 1,000 men). Moreover, our troops had to overcome great natural difficulties at every step.

"Nevertheless, by April 5—that is, eighteen days after the opening of our offensive—the bravery of our troops enabled us to complete the task assigned, and we had seized the principal chain of the Carpathians on a front between Beghuzy and Volosate, of 110 versts (about 75 miles).

"The subsequent fighting has consolidated Russian successes previously won.

French Trenches Animated Scenes

Col. Carrick Says There Is Not Much Hardship Now at Front

OTTAWA, April 19.—(Special.)—An interesting cablegram was received on Saturday by one of the senior officers in the Headquarters Staff here from Col. Carrick, M.P., one of the Canadian "Eyewitnesses" in France. The cablegram is dated April 17, and runs as follows: "France (via London).—With General Turner and Colonels Garnet Hughes, Meighen and Lockie, I spent yesterday and last night in the French trenches with the French soldiers in Belgium. The trenches were only fifty yards from the enemy's, and an incessant rifle fire continued all night, quite frequently hitting the top of the parapets. With flares, rockets, rifle and artillery fire, accompanied occasionally by musical strains from bagpipes, the front at times presents quite an animated scene. The trenches and dugouts are in good shape, and with fine weather there is not now much hardship in trench life. In fact, some of our men enjoy immensely trench life and experiences."

The General Turner mentioned is Brigadier-General Turner, V.C., of Quebec. Colonel Garnet Hughes is the son of General Hughes and with the Highland Brigade. Colonel Meighen is Col. Frank Meighen of Montreal, and Col. Lockie is from Vancouver.

German Bunkum From Berlin

Alleges German Successes and the British and French Failures—Describes Allies' Reports as Inventions

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, April 19.—(Official statement)—To the south of Ypres the British were yesterday ejected from minor German positions still occupied by them in this locality. The British attacks along the railroad between Ypres and Comines broke down with very heavy loss to them.

Near Gelmuster Lieut. Garros, the famous French aviator, has been made prisoner. French attacks against our positions at Combres and in the Vosges failed.

French and British reports concerning victories on the western front are all inventions, as is sufficiently proved by regular reports from German headquarters.

On West Front Artillery and Cavalry Being Transferred to Poland and Galicia

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, April 19.—An impression prevails in official quarters in Rome that the German general staff has abandoned plans for a general offensive on the French front and has decided simply to maintain the defensive.

The Geneva Tribune has a despatch from Vienna stating that the council of war has decided that Austrian artillery and Hungarian cavalry now on the west front will be transferred to Poland and Galicia.

KING TAKES ACTION IN SHIP SINKING

MONTREAL, April 18—As a result of the sinking of the Canadian steamship Montgomery in the Beaujeu channel St. Lawrence river, on the morning of September 16, 1914, with the loss of fourteen lives, action has been begun by His Majesty the King against the steamship Lingan for $400,000 damages.

The plaintiff alleges that the Lingan crossed over into the Montmagny's water and caused the fatal collision that no officer was on duty on the Lingan at the time of the accident, 4:15 a.m., and that there was not a sufficient watch.

The case will come before Mr. Justice Dunlop, of the exchequer court, on May 18.

Armenia Fears Massacre of Christians

TABRIZ, Persia, April 18.—Engagements between Armenians and Kurds are frequent in the vicinity of Van, in Turkish Armenia, according to reliable information reaching Tabriz, and a general massacre of Christians is feared in the province of Hakkiari. The Armenians of Van are hurriedly trying to raise volunteers in Azerbaijan province, Persia, to help them against the Turks and the Kurds.

After several stubborn engagements between Russians and Turks north of Dilman, in Persia, the Turks retreated to the south of Dilman. From the district of the Chorsh River it is reported that after an unsuccessful defence of Khopa, the Turks retreated beyond Archava, where they have occupied fortified heights, from which they are making sorties.

There is said to be growing hostility between the Turks and the Kurds, the former deprecating the inhumanity of the latter. In cases where Turks and Kurds are serving together, this dissatisfaction has at times approached the mutinous stage. Turkish soldiers and even the younger of the Turkish officers are protesting against the countenancing by higher Turkish officers of the outrages committed by the Kurds. There are several instances of Turkish soldiers having lynched Kurds guilty of unusual atrocities.

Warm weather is almost here. Swat the fly and his breeding place before it arrives.

ALLIED AIRMEN DRIVE GERMANS TO EARTH

British, French and Belgian Airmen Each Brought Down His Man—Freiburg Again Raided by French Dirigible Balloon —Aviator Ground Bombard

PARIS, April 18.—Allied aviators are rendering the air as unsafe for German aeroplanes as the British fleet has rendered the sea unsafe for the German navy. British, French and Belgian airmen each brought their prey down to earth last week, and a French dirigible balloon made an atmospheric raid on Freiburg, in Brisgau, and bombarded the railway station and aviation sheds in that German city.

The following is the French official statement on aerial operations:

"A Belgian aeroplane brought down a German aeroplane near Dixmude, the same region one of our small squadrons successfully bombarded an aviation ground.

"One of our dirigibles bombarded the station and aviation sheds at Freiburg, in Breisgau.

"One of our aeroplanes, after a brilliant pursuit, brought down a German aeroplane, which fell within the enemy's lines in Belgium between Langemarck and Passchendaele."

CONDUCT OF CANADIANS DESERVE HIGHEST PRAISE

General Headquarters of the British Army in France, April 19—"The Canadians may have been full of boyish spirit when they landed in England, but they have been men in the trenches," said a Staff officer of the British army, commenting on the report that the Canadians have been lacking in discipline. "They've buckled down, like British soldiers should, and their conduct has been not only without reproach, but deserving of the highest praise."

This is the first official statement of a Staff officer in the field relative to a much-discussed question.

British Superior in Markmanship

104 Soldiers of the First Contingent, Some Wounded Arrive at Halifax

HALIFAX, April 19.—(Special.)—One hundred and four soldiers of the first Canadian contingent, of all ages, eight of whom have been in the trenches and wounded, returned here by the steamer Missanabie. Those who were on the firing line say the Germans have some expert shots, but on the whole the marksmanship of the British is superior.

Seven of them belonged to the Princess Patricia's Regiment. One is Private Laurie of Toronto, who lost the sight of one eye as the result of a fragment of a shell striking him. Private W. E. Watts of Hamilton, who was in the trenches three months, is invalided. Privates Ring and Henry of Toronto, Private Davis of Edmonton and Private G. H. Cunningham of Toronto, who suffered from rheumatism and frostbites, are among those who returned. Private G. Morrison of Niagara Falls was wounded in the leg two months ago, but is recovering. Some of the other soldiers have returned on account of illness, and some are undesirables.

LONGS FOR A PAIR OF CANADIAN BOOTS

Colonel From the West Says They are Better Than British Boots

OTTAWA, April 19.— Special— Writing to an officer of the headquarters staff here a distinguished colonel from British Columbia at present in France has the following to say of Canadian boots: "I see a lot in the papers here in praise of the British boots. I would like you to line and tell you that far and away the great majority of our men would rather have the Canadian boot in wet and mud than the boot they issued us before leaving England. Few of them are waterproof, the heels come off the first opportunity, and any march knocks out a great lot of men with sore feet. It is really pitiable and a most serious thing. We all wish we had Canadian boots. If we could get the Canadian boots restored at Salisbury, we would do so at once."

Of city garden plows the most popular appears to be the one husband power forward drive.

Norway Accepts British Control

COPENHAGEN, April 18.—The Berlaner Tageblatt states that an agreement has been reached between Norway and Britain whereby, Norwegian ships will sail practically under British control in order to save time going to Kirkwall and other British harbors.

Norway, according to the Tageblatt, has further accepted British control of Norwegian boats coming to Norwegian ports from America.

The Tageblatt adds: "It appears that similar control is executed by Russia over Norwegian ships sailing for foreign ports. Norway has accepted this position, which is tantamount to giving up part of her sovereignty."

WILL BARGAIN ONLY AT CANNON'S MOUTH

Ridiculous For Germany to Put Forward Her Future Attitude Toward Belgium as the Basis for Bargaining

LONDON, April 19.—(Special.)—There is no likelihood of Great Britain making any reply to or considering the suggestions of Dr. Dernburg as to what Germany would consider in the way of peace terms. It only needs reference to the speeches of Premier Asquith and Sir Edward Grey to demonstrate what England's attitude would be if such suggestions as those of Dr. Dernburg were officially put forward by Germany.

Premier Asquith and Sir Edward Grey have reiterated the determination of England and the allies to drive Germany out of Belgium and to restore Belgium entirely to its rightful position. With such a determination primarily dominating England it can be definitely and insistently stated that it is ridiculous for Germany to put forward her future attitude towards Belgium as the basis for bargaining. The English viewpoint is that the only bargaining England will have with Germany in regard to Belgium is at the cannon's mouth and will continue so until the last of the invaders are driven from the country. To free Belgium is a promise regarded as sacred by England.

NO TROUBLE FROM NEW LIQUOR ACT

Law is Being Observed by Shopkeepers Throughout the Province

The liquor legislation pertaining to the closing of shops at 7 o'clock has according to reports from all over the Province, caused scarce a ripple of trouble. In some cases where it was not possible to have the notices in receipt before Saturday there was delay in bringing the act into force, but beyond that and in cases where closing did not commence until Friday night instead of Thursday, through lack of knowledge, there has been no infraction regarding the shops.

A case, however, is reported from Englehart, which brings under notice another section of the act, the increased penalty imposed on offenders. The information laid by Provincial Inspector Beckett has succeeded in unearthing a case of selling liquor without a license. The minimum fine for such an offence is $300.

The above is clipped from the news columns of the Toronto Globe of the 17th inst. Readers of the Globe will further presume to know whether the Globe's news items censor was when the above eulogy of the working of the new liquor law was allowed space in the issue, after the protest condemnation by that journal of the new law when first introduced.

HEART INTEREST STORIES FROM TRENCH AND FIELD OF BATTLE

Shells Fail to Disturb the French Villagers—The Fighting at Suez.

Alfred Capps Tells How the Censor Works—The Welsh Anthem at Front.

BY mail and in despatches from old work newspapers there have arrived in Canada human interest stories of the great war in Europe. Some of the latest and best are here given:

Major O. S. Watkins, of the Canadian contingent, in a letter received from him from a point in North France, says: "In the village from which I write, a shell burst, killing nine soldiers and the village priest. Most of the inhabitants have returned to the town, and are going about their ordinary tasks as if war was far from them, apparently quite less of the enemy, which, as the crow flies, is not more than a mile or so away, and not greatly disturbed even when shells burst in the main square of this little town.

"In the nearest available village to the firing line will be found the field ambulance and such companies as are held in reserve. It is from this point that the wagons are sent out at night with rations, and it is from this point that the ambulance wagons fly to and from between the "regimental aid posts," bringing in their suffering loads of sick and wounded men. Shrapnel in comparative safety, but always within sound of rifle fire and machine guns in the trenches. Over us from time to time shriek the shells from our own big guns, winging their way to spread destruction and death in the enemy's lines. In our midst occasionally the Germans burst their shrapnel or their "coal boxes."

A MIRACULOUS ESCAPE.

"I am now permitted to state that the artillery attached to the East Lancashire division of territorials was sharply engaged on the Suez Canal during the fighting of Feb. 3 and Feb. 4," writes an English correspondent. "The behaviour of the men under fire and the skill with which the guns in this force were considered worthy of very high praise.

"An officer controlling the fire of one of the territorial batteries in these engagements displayed conspicuous gallantry. In order to get the ranges with the greatest possible accuracy he climbed a date palm [illegible] and remained there an hour while the position was bombarded with shrapnel. When the fire became too hot he took up a new position in another palm tree and remained there till the close of the battle.

"One territorial gunner had a remarkable escape. A shrapnel bullet passed down the barrel of the gun he was serving and flattened itself against a part of the breech mechanism without doing any damage either to man or gun."

HOBSON'S CHOICE."

Alfred Capps, correspondent of The Figaro, in a lecture on "The Press During the War," gave the following account of the typical dialogue between the censor and a writer over the telephone:

"About midnight the censor said:

"It would be very nice of you, monsieur, to suppress these few lines. I ask you as a personal favor."

The editor then demanded to know what would happen "if I refuse."

"Then I shall be obliged, as your censor, "it shall be obliged, to my deepest mortification, to interrupt your publications."

M. Capus also told an anecdote of a war correspondent of The Figaro in 1870 who asked a certain general to be allowed to approach the operations so as to obtain a better view. The general refused the request, whereupon the correspondent retorted, "Then I shall not mention your battle in my paper."

A TICKLISH MOMENT.

It is Lieut. Harman, of the Royal Field Artillery, who tells us how the guns of his battery were saved during a critical moment. The Germans had surrounded the battery, but the artillerymen held them off for six hours, retiring slowly as they did so. Unfortunately they got into a very tight corner at last, where, with the deep banks, they were fired on, ambushed at a range of about twenty yards.

The lane was far too steep and narrow to turn round, but the gunners with their rifles drove the Germans back. The battery, however, seemed to be caught in a trap, but the men determined to save the guns. They built barricades, and then they dug out reconnoitred the German position. It was during that reconnaissance that a body of British troops were discovered, and these came hurried to the relief of the beleaguered artillery.

"HEN WLAD FY NHADAU!"

An English soldier writing from the trenches near Dixmude says:

"It was a miserable night. A heavy rain had filled the trenches. Suddenly out of the darkness can a voice, it was a Welsh soldier, singing "Hen Wlad Fy Nhadau," sung in a fine tenor voice. It was the cheeriest sound I ever heard. At the end a round of applause came down the trenches. But imagine our surprise to hear clapping and calls for more in good English from the German trenches! Thereupon the Welshman gave 'Minden Green.'

"Meantime we realized that not a shot had been fired from either side during the song. We had foretaken all about war. So a bargain was struck with the Germans that if the Welshman would give us another song neither would fire a shot at the other until daylight.

"The third song sung was 'Hen Wlad Fy Nhadau.' It was perhaps the first time the Welsh national anthem was ever heard in this district of Picardy morass."

WHO DRANK 800 BOTTLES.

In a letter Lieut. Eric Pepler of the 3rd company Canadian Field Engineers describes in humorous fashion the trouble he had in making an elderly dame sober enough to state their horses in one of her barns. Eventually he had to order the men to clear the place out and commandeer the place. He stated that he has been separated from Lindsay in living and that Major Lindsay is laid up in England.

"Where we're living is called the 'Petite Chateau' and it is very comfortably fitted up." He continues: "The German artillery captain lived here when they marched through before, and, incidentally, he and his polish drank 800 bottles of champagne from the wine cellars of this chateau. Being somewhat temperate, grieves me very much, as I spent a good part of this morning trying to get this information out of the owner's cloth. It was hard to find the cloth, as the maids said that I would not eat that she used her last the other day when King George passed through."

Girl Honored by Czar.

It is semi-officially confirmed that the Czar has conferred the Cross of St. George upon Miss Edith Cavell, executed Tichiness for conspicuous bravery. The girl was wounded three times while fighting in the trenches as an ordinary soldier. Tichiness was a schoolgirl at Kiefl when the war broke out.

Funeral of Private Nicholls

Comrades of Deceased Recruit and Citizens Paid Last Respects

The Peterboro Review on Saturday had the following account of the military funeral of the late Private Harold Nicholls, a member of the 39th Battalion, who died in this city:

With a great solemnity the funeral of the late Pte. Harold Nicholls, the Peterborough volunteer with the 39th Battalion of the Third Overseas Contingent, who passed away by the Belleville General Hospital on Thursday morning with spinal meningitis, was held this afternoon from his late home at 2 Anson street, to the Armouries and thence to Little Lake Cemetery. Peterborough has given many of its men for the cause of the Empire, some are taking their turn in the trenches, others are being the trenches, and many more are training, preparatory to leaving for the front. Up till the death of Private Nicholls, not one of the nine enlisted in Peterborough had been called upon to give up his life. The fact that he was the first Peterborough man to die for the cause, coupled with the fact that he was an only boy, and his death had torn the heart of his fond parents, caused thousands citizens to be present at the funeral this afternoon to pay their last tribute to a fellow citizen who had given his life for Britain's honor and to show their deep sympathy for the afflicted family in the hour of their great trouble. The service at the Armouries was largely attended, and as the cortege slowly proceeded to the cemetery, both sides of the street were a mass of sorrowing citizens, all feeling for the first time one of the sad results of the war.

The funeral was under the auspices of the Salvation Army, and the adjutant, J. A. McElhiney, conducted a short service at the house before the body was borne to the armouries. At the armouries the casket was covered by a large Union Jack and the accoutrement of the deceased. The family and relatives of the deceased took positions at the side of the coffin; behind them stood the representatives of Court Stanley, A. O. F., and then the thousands of citizens and the 57th Battalion. Ladies crowded both galleries, while volunteers from various units dotted the gathering. The opening hymn, "O God, Our Help in Ages Past," was sung, accompanied by the 57th Regt. Band, and then prayer was offered up by the adjutant. Following this, verses of scripture were read.

Mayor Buller, on behalf of the city, spoke a few words of sympathy to the family of the deceased, remarking what a great honor it was to die for such a cause. His Worship stated that Pte. Nichols' was the first death of all the men who had been enlisted from Peterborough, and in their bereavement his family have the deepest sympathy of all the city.

The Temple Male Choir then sang "Heavenly Mansions," which was followed by an address by Adjutant McElhinney. His words were of tender sympathy to the heartbroken parents and sisters of the deceased, and he remarked how their's was indeed a sad bereavement, but they should thank God that they know where their boy will rest. Many in the far-off trenches are fighting, and their friends will never know where their bodies lie. In this case, the family have the comfort of having their boy rest close by.

Adjutant McElhiney remarked how Pte. Nichols, although not falling in active service, fell before the greatest enemy of armies—disease. It is true that there will be a face missing in the home, a chair will be vacant, but there will one day come the great family where there is no death, no tears, or no separation from loved ones.

Few indeed were they who stood with eyes not dimmed with tears, as the hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," was sung. During the hymn many walked slowly out with head bowed and smothering a sob. At the conclusion of benediction by Adjutant McElhiney, the cortege was formed and proceeded to the cemetery. A firing squad under Sergt.-Major Dunkerley led with arms reversed. Then followed the 57th Regt. Band with drums muffled, playing the Dead March. After the band came the hearse bearing the body, and then the chief mourners.

Beside the hearse walked six pallbearers, all members of the 39th Battalion. The chief mourners were followed by the men of the 8th C. M. R., the 26th Battery and 39th Battalion who are home on leave. After the volunteers came the 57th Regiment, representatives of the fire department, the police department, and of Court Stanley, A. O. F. Many citizens, followed the cortege to the grave. The ceremony at the grave included a scripture reading, committal, prayer and benediction, and the firing of a salute.

LAWYER AND SOLDIER PASS AWAY

Universal regret was expressed today when it became known that Mr. Peter Mel. Forin, barrister and a military officer of this city, had passed away. Recently Mrs. Forin, mother of the deceased died, and whilst in attendance at the funeral Mr. Forin contracted a cold, which developed pneumonia, resulting in death. For some days his life has been despaired of, deceased was a son of the late Mr. John Forin of this city, and was born here, where he had resided all his life. After graduating from the High School Mr. Forin studied for the legal profession and was successful in passing his examination as a barrister, etc. For some years he had been engaged in the legal profession in this city. In addition to his legal profession he ceased took an active interest in military matters, and at the time of his demise was captain of the 39th Battery of this city, and was engaged in securing outfitters for the battery. Mr. Forin was in religion a Presbyterian, being connected with John street Presbyterian church, and an elder. He had always taken an active interest in church work. Deceased was also an active member of the Liberal party, being one of the officers of the Association. He was unmarried. Mr. Forin was a man well known in the city and vicinity and highly respected by all who knew him. His demise will be mourned with much regret by a host of friends.

The deceased, who was only 6 years of age, was educated at Toronto University, of which he was B. A., and also at Queen's University where he studied science. His brother, Dr. Alex Forin of Edmonton has been in constant attendance upon him during the last week, and his sister, Mrs. David Maclean, and her husband, Rev. D. Maclean, of Toronto, and Miss Maclean of Brockville, have been at the family residence during his illness. Judge Forin of British Columbia, arrived this morning.

WOMAN DECAPITATED BY A GERMAN BOMB

AMIENS, France, April 18.—Seven persons were killed and eight were wounded by bombs dropped by two German aeroplanes which flew over this city yesterday, one in the morning and one in the evening. The cathedral apparently was the target of the missiles, but it was not damaged.

The first aircraft appeared at 6:45 a.m., and dropped five bombs. The explosions of the projectiles were said to hour women and two men while seven other persons were wounded, including two soldiers guarding the railroad station. The property damage was trivial.

The second aeroplane appeared over the city at 5 p.m. One of the bombs dropped from it demolished a house, decapitating a woman seated in the parlor and injuring another woman.

German Shells On Swiss Town

DELEMONT, Switzerland, April 18 —German shells fell on Swiss territory for the third time since the outbreak of the war, says the newspaper Democrate. The Germans were trying to destroy a French observation post at Pierrefontaine, but the gunners aim was bad and the projectiles over shot their target, dropping around the town of Delemont. An investigation was made the following day by Swiss authorities who took fragments of shells to Pierrefray for examination by an expert.

A Legal Query.

Tired of the long winded oratory of the attorney for the defense, the judge interrupted him.

"Mr. Sharks," he said, "may I ask you a question?"

"Certainly, your honor. What is the question?"

"Language," said the judge, "was ever told, is given to conceal thought or words to that effect. Inasmuch as you don't seem to have any thought to conceal, I would like to know why you are talking?"

The Town of Bushire.

Residents of a miserable seaport on the Persian gulf called their town Bushire (Booshire). It has narrow, dirty, ill paved streets. The city is visited by earthquakes and simoons and stints the children of wholesome air and fresh water. It appears, however, to have enjoyed high repute among the ancient Elamites, who have left buried about under moldering heaps bricks with cuneiform inscriptions. In summer the citizens of Bushire live in a heat that is almost unbearable.

The First Victim.

Chief Justice Doherty used to relate an experience which befell him during a visit to a country house in Ireland. His friend, the host, sent a car to the railway station to bring him to the house. He had not gone far when the horse became restless and finally upset the car into a ditch. The judge asked the driver how long the animal had been in harness.

"Off an hour, sor."

"I mean how long since he was first put in harness?"

"Sure, I've told you—half an hour, sor," answered the driver. "An' the crather said if he could get safe he'd buy him."—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

Life Amid Deathlike Stillness.

In the rainless interior of Australia there is a "silence of the grave." This deathlike silence has a peculiarly depressing effect. If two are camped and one of them goes to a distant township to get provisions while the other remains behind to look after the camp, the man who is to remain says to his friend in feeble, gold fields language: "Now, Bill, don't be long away. You know what kind of a place this is to live in by yourself," or words to that effect. If his mate is away for two or three days the silence gets on the man's nerves and in the end he shouts to make a noise. And often he is afraid of the sound of his own voice.—Exchange.

Called His Papa Down.

Little Willy is a bright boy and a saucy boy. His apt answers have often turned away wrath and often tormented it upon him strongly. The other day his father was reprimanding him for some misdeed, and Willy was answering very saucily. The father became very angry and, seizing the youngster by the collar, said: "See here, young man, you must not talk like that to me. I never gave my father impudence when I was a boy." Willy was not fazed at all. With a cherubic smile he looked into papa's eyes and said, "But, papa, maybe your father didn't need it."—Ex. Willy escaped punishment, while papa retired to another room.

A Test of Friendship.

Just before Artemus Ward's death Robertson poured out some medicine from a bottle and handed it to Jack and said, "My dear Tom, I won't take any more of that horrible stuff."

Robertson urged him to swallow the mixture, saying, "Do, now—there's a dear fellow—for my sake. You know I would do anything for you."

"Would you?" said Ward feebly, grasping his friend's hand for the last time.

"I would indeed," said Robertson.

"Then you take it."

Ward passed away a few hours afterward.—"Recollections of the Bancrofts."

Swiss Glaciers.

As the Matterhorn is the grandest object to be seen in Switzerland, so also are the glaciers above Zermatt the most magnificent. The lowland seen at Chamouix the glaciers are frozen rivers and cataracts. From the Gorner Grat the glaciers are not seen at all, but leagues of rocky beach, over which the snows breakers are beating. The Aletsch and the Rhone glaciers are grand frozen torrents of immense volume, and the ice fields of the Mont Blanc range are of vast extent, but it is from the Gorner Grat, where the spectator is surrounded by frozen peaks, out of which the snow peaks rise, like islands, that the imagination is overpowered by stupendous glacial effects.

BE KIND TODAY.

Less spent on the dead and more spent on the living would bring about many happy results. Hearts are breaking, loved ones wait, and tears flow all because of the withholding of kind words unspoken and letters never sent. Behold the sad similes of others, their remorse, and profit by the same before it is too late. Today, now, speak the loving word, and write the message, write the letter you put off day by day, and don't wait until you forget it or until bitter memories haunt you.

FIGHTING THE GERMS

Japanese Led the Way In Battle Against Disease Among Soldiers

"What we and our gallant allies have to fight against is germs, as much as Germans and Austrians," said a member of the Army Medical Department to a correspondent. "In practically every war disease has been more fatal than bullets, and the victorious general is he who is most successful in guarding against it. In six months in the Crimean War the allied forces lost 50,000 men from disease as against 2,500 from bullets. In that war whole regiments were wiped out by sickness without even seeing the firing line.

"There were 500,000 fatalities in the American Civil War of 1861-65. Three-quarters of the deaths were due to disease. In this respect, too, the United States fared badly in the war with Spain, no fewer than fourteen soldiers dying from disease for every one killed in action, while in the Russ-Japanese War the relative fatal demics alone totalled over 80,000. In the Boer War we lost 5,821 men from typhoid, diarrhoeal disease, rheumatism, and malaria, while no fewer than 29,116 had to be sent home as invalids. Yet in actual fighting we had only 7,956 killed, while some 856 died from wounds.

"As a matter of fact, the Japanese were the first to show the world how to grapple with disease on the battlefield. In their war with Russia they placed in the field and in their navy 1,200,000 men. Their losses were as follows: Killed in battle, 47,152; died of wounds, 11,425; and deaths from disease, 21,802. These splendid results are a record in modern warfare. The usual fatality in war is one from bullets to four from disease. The Japs lost three from bullets to one from disease.

"These are the reasons why every British soldier going to the front is inoculated against typhoid fever, while every precaution is taken to see that the men drink only pure water, have plenty of good, wholesome food, and warm clothing. We learned many valuable lessons from our experience on the battlefield in South Africa, and so did the Russians in their struggle with Japan."

Surprise on Pavements

At one time the only dyes used in the Persian carpet industry came from indigo, madder, and vine leaves. From these were evolved many delicate shades imperious to the action of sunlight. With aniline dyes the colors fade much more rapidly. In Persia you may see new rugs spread on the floors of bazaars, so that many feet may tread on them. By such hard wear—provided the colors are fast—the genuine article improves in appearance, acquiring an attractive gloss. A Persian carpet of the best kind has a marvellous number of stitches, and a beautiful piece of pure silk may cost hundreds of dollars.

VIOLATING THE TRUCE.

The Liberal party in the country are awaiting with feverish anxiety the announcement of a general election. At one time they were clamouring for an early appeal to the people, on the ground that the Conservatives had snatched a chance victory through a misapprehension on the part of the voters of the real issues at stake. But now a different tale is told. They seem to have misgivings as to whether after all they would be returned if the election came now; and the statement made in the House of Commons by the Hon. Mr. Rogers, to the effect that on all the one heard of demands for an early election, caused a flutter in the Liberal dovecotes. "There is no necessity or demand for a general election" is now the burden of their song. They seem to be oblivious of the fact that the longer the Borden Government remain in power the stronger does their position become, and that the longer the election is postponed the more crushing will be the defeat of the Liberal party. On the other hand, the Conservatives are quite ready for an election whenever the Premier consider that the opportune moment has arrived. "Three is be armed that both his quarrel just," and the Conservative party, relying upon the strength and justice of their cause, will go to the country with a confident and buoyant heart. There cannot be a shadow of doubt that the Opposition have lowered their prestige by their recent action in Parliament. At the outbreak of the war was a tacit understanding between the leaders of the two parties that there should be a truce in party politics. Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his supporters started well, but when the time came for the Government to expound their scheme of raising increased revenue, to meet the exigencies of war, the Liberal party believed they saw a chance of damaging the Government, and throwing the truce to the winds they took up a determined party stand in opposition to the Government proposals. The alleged compact was deliberately broken, and party rancour was aroused. The actual cause of the new taxes (which should have been uppermost in their minds) was forgotten, and many and futile efforts were made to impugn the Government's policy. Their grandstand orations were all the more contemptible because no alternative proposals were made. In adopting this unpatriotic attitude the Liberals have only manifested their own reputation. Confident in the knowledge of having kept up Canada's end, in the great crisis which affects the whole Empire, and in having passed beneficial legislation, the Government can go to the country with a strong heart and clean hands.

"BUSINESS AS USUAL."

There are welcome signs that the black cloud, which has hung like a pall over Canada as well as Great Britain since the war began, is lifting, and that commercial prospects are brightening. Presiding at the Grand Trunk annual meeting, Chairman Spitters pointed out that the requirements of the Mother Country and the Allies were bringing renewed activity to Canada, and there were many signs that much of the money spent on munitions would find its way to Canada. The Dominion has taken its share of the burden imposed by the war, and has cheerfully given of its best. No reward was looked for, as whatever Canada has done was only in the way of part-payment of the indebtedness the Dominion owes the Motherland. It is now the less satisfactory, however, to know that a great part of the money expended will come back in the form of hard cash. Orders amounting to millions of dollars have been received by manufacturers, and millions more will be received in the future.

Another ray of hope is to be found in regard to the out-going navigation from Kingston, which has just commenced. It is reported that local shipping men are optimistic as to the outcome of the trading this summer, and the season is expected to be a good one. To look farther ahead, it is satisfactory to notice that agricultural prospects in the Northwest are of the brightest. According to Prof. S. A. Bedford, Deputy Minister of Agriculture, the seeding operations throughout the provinces are being carried out under the very best conditions. More than four million acres of land were prepared for crop last fall in Manitoba alone.

This is an increase of 1,250,000 acres of fall ploughing over that of the year before. Aided by the early and favorable spring the Professor considers that the farmers have bright prospects of a good season. It is a long lane that has no turning; but it seems that Canadian traders have at last turned the corner of depression and have struck the road which leads to prosperity. May they travel the fully five up to the motto adopted by the Empire since the war began—"Business as Usual."

CURRENT COMMENT

The influence of the voluble Prof. Munsterberg at Havard may be guessed from the fact that the press says that university this year is intensely anti-German.

Perhaps it is not a matter for much regret that the supply of German drugs has been cut off. The world would get along very well if the supply of drugs were permanently and greatly diminished.

Hamilton Herald: "In view of the wanton destruction of the Dutch supply ship Katwyk by a German submarine the people of Holland have evidently begun the process of screwing up their British courage."

Hamilton Spectator: "Because Hon. Frank Oliver is alleged to have left office a comparatively poor man, is slim proof that he did not utilize his position for traffic in public lands. There are many other speculators today who are not so by choice.

Lieut.-Col. John I. McLaren and James Chisholm are stated to be probable candidates to be nominated for Hamilton Liberals at the next election. The former, being an active service would not be able to take a personal part in the election.

The Socialists of Germany have declared against the festal observance of May Day this year, owing to the "peculiar circumstances" existing. What decision is not surprising. Europe's celebration of May Day will be red enough and noisy enough without the Red party's customary assistance.

Giving rates to the soldiers is declared by one hostile western critic to be the same thing as giving the Borden Government a new lease of life. It would seem that even the strange bondages that the soldiers think they have been well cared for by the men at Ottawa.

Montreal this summer is to spend nearly $2,000,000 on permanent pavements, and it is estimated that this will give employment to some 25,000 men. If the money is expended wisely and without waste the city will benefit greatly, as well as the workers into whose pockets a goodly part of it will go.

Hamilton Herald: "The decision of the British government not to place cotton on the contraband list is intended as a friendly concession to the United States. But it is very doubtful if it will be very valuable to the American cotton interests. Not many cargoes of American cotton will reach Germany through the nine-eleven waters of the North Sea."

Why should the praises of Mrs. Pankhurst be sounded because she talks in favor of British recruiting? Is it Mrs. Pankhurst is to talk at all, could anything less be expected of her? She is no more deserving of praise for her patriotic attitude than are thousands of decent, respectable women who never wielded a hatchet or broke a neighbour's window.

Hamilton Spectator: "Should Mexico be victims of famine, it would be hard to work up practical sympathy on their behalf. With their climate and a soil that requires but the barest tilling to produce abundant results, if they were fighting among themselves to working, they should be compelled to suffer the inevitable consequence.

Hamilton Herald: "The appointment of a high-class non-partisan commission to spend the money which parliament has voted for the war should mean the elimination of party patron age from this department of public expenditure. It is to be hoped that the results will be so satisfactory as to create a strong public sentiment in favor of doing away with the patron age evil in all the departments—a sentiment so strong and urgent that the government will not be able to ignore it.

NOT POLITICAL MATTER

Ontario Bi-Lingual Advocates Issue Manifesto

MONTREAL, April 17.—The wish of Mr. Paul Emile Lamarche that the Ontario school agitation shall intrude in to Dominion politics is not to be gratified. Hon. Thomas Chandler, the newly chosen president of the Ontario Education Association, and Mr. A. Gernon the secretary, have issued a manifesto declaring that the Ontario school agitation is not a political question, but a contest for principle. "There is no room for the political party's interest or the detriment of another, consequently it is the wish of all to keep this question outside of political discussions and political issues," says the manifesto. "The cause & of too holy a nature to be sacrificed on the hustings. We do not ask any party whatever to take our cause under its protection. On the contrary, we ask all men of good will Conservatives as well as Liberals, Protestants as well as English Scotch and Irish Catholics, and also Protestants to abstain from making the question a political one during the coming Federal elections. We have never carried our case before the Canadian Parliament and we have no confidence in the spirit of bad faith. No one has any need of a special mandate from the electorate to defend so just a cause and to work for the integral maintenance of the Confederation. The French-Canadians of Ontario therefore ask all French-Canadian electors to vote in the same not to permit any candidates soliciting their votes to drag this question into the political arena. The entire French-Canadians of Ontario particularly ask their compatriots, candidates as well as electors to give a good example in this respect to-day, for it is known that no party is authorized by us to take on cause under its political patronage, are new papers will render us a great service in making known these facts We ask them to grant us this favor."

Soldiers Welcome Smokes and Papers

TORONTO, April 18.—Writing home to his mother in St. Catharines, Harry Sullivan, with the 10th Field Battery of the 2nd, says: "It is swell weather now, nice and dry. We have been in the trenches quite a while now, and have had a bit. I expect you're getting nice weather in dear little old St Kitts. The boys often talk of home and wonder what time we do, only it's pretty hard to get a watch while marching, and besides we don't have time to bother. I wish you would send us some tobacco and some papers; a smoke and a read now and then is about all the pleasure we have."

WHIP PRISONERS ON SLIGHT PROVOCATION

GENEVA, April 17.—George Reboux, a dentist of this city, has been a German prisoner for five months. In a letter to a friend here he says he was taken into custody in France and held in the Nieder Zwehren camp. Set at liberty recently he has just returned home, and reports that there were 20,000 British, French and Russian prisoners at Nieder Zwehren. He says the food is fairly good, but that the sanitary conditions are deplorable. The British received the best treatment. Some of the camp guards are armed with heavy whips with which they strike the prisoners for slight offences.

A LAKE ONTARIO TRAGEDY

WATERTOWN, N.Y., April 18.—The headless body of a woman was found on the shore of Lake Ontario at Sackets Harbor last night. One foot and one hand were also missing. The body showed signs of having been somewhat burned. An investigation is in progress by the authorities.

LEADERS IN THE WAR.

Strict Censorship Has Hindered Knowledge of Generals.

One of the remarkable results of the strict censorship has been the anonymity of the lesser generals of the war, who undoubtedly have come into prominence during the past four months on the greatest battlefields of all history. It is true that Gen. Sir John French has become, and the number of British commanders who have assisted him in Northern France and in Belgium, but it was only in his tribute to Gen. Smith-Dorrien for his retreat from Mons, the commendation has been of the nature of praise rather than peculiarly distributive.

The only German name that has been brought to the fore has been that of Von Hindenburg, on whom has devolved the difficult and important task of resisting the Russian onslaught in the east. Von Mitk has disappeared from the headlines, and the world does not know whether his advance on Paris and his subsequent retreat to the Aisne have gained him a place among the immortals or not. Little more has been heard of Von Bulow and Von Kluem. The Crown Prince of Bavaria and the Duke of Wurtemburg have been the only ones mentioned, but there has been a constant suspicion that these royal names are used in lieu of those more closely identified with German strategy.

In the early days of the war Gen. Paul Pau was regarded so frequently that his ubiquity, according to war correspondents, was equal to that of the German Crown Prince. But Pau disappeared several weeks ago from the French despatches and in his place the recent French communique mentioned a number of generals who are out inveiling any with undying fame. The most prominent of Gen. Joffre's assistants is Gen. Foch. But to the ordinary reader there is but one French name that stands out, that of Joffre, upon whom has rested the responsibility of the generalship strategy of the allied forces fighting the Kaiser's army.

The Grand Duke Nicholas emerges in bold relief from the many Russian generals engaged. It is said he was the first ordinary man could not name one of the active Russian generals engaged who have fought so valiantly in Galicia.

SOCIETY WAR NURSES.

They Are Not as Valuable as Correspondents Assert.

A great deal of fuss is being made in the "yellow" press over the exploits in the hospitals of society women, and especially American peeresses in the hospitals of Europe. One despatch from Europe says that the Hungarian Countess Szechenyi, who was Miss Gladys Vanderbilt of New York, has been awarded the Golden Order of Austria for heroic work among the wounded Austrian soldiers in Galicia.

A Dr. McDonald, who is just home from Budapest, gives a slightly different version. He says that one of the several wealthy countesses of yellow correspondents is probably doing more real truth. He describes the fearful conditions of disease and filth in the army hospitals of Budapest and considers that

"Three Hungarian countesses, Szechenyi, Sigrary and Zechi, all American girls, came to the hospitals at Budapest and volunteered their services. They were dressed in silks and had maids with them. I told them that did not know what they were up against, and the authorities sent them away.

"In Budapest alone there 70,000 wounded soldiers, 20,000 of whom are maimed for life."

Dr. McDonald in August went to the front near Przemysl as third unit of the American Red Cross.

Biographies of Pigeons.

Having received orders from the German military governor-general of Alsace to keep a close watch on carrier pigeons, a zealous German commandant at Colmar, in Upper Alsace, ordered the civil authorities to provide him with a record of all the pigeons in that district.

The burgomaster, with a sense of humor, complied not only with the letter of his order, but he provided each with a biography, which was covered with accident and health reports. The mayor of Colmar is a letter of the German imperial family and the leading army officers.

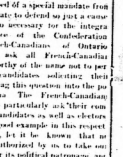
This particular commune is noted for the number of its pigeons, and the commandant was soon snowed under with reports of the religiously chronicled the condition and movements of the birds. He declined, however, to recall the order.

Statisticians announce that the population of the United States is two hundred an even 100,000,000. Those who doubt it are invited to begin the process of counting noses.

ABDUL SEES A CHANCE.

"Red Sultan" Is Looking Towards the Throne of Turkey.

An interesting phase of the war news has been the talked of rehabilitation of Abdul Hamid, the deposed Sultan of Turkey. Before news came that Abdul was preparing to take advantage of a revolution to regain his throne the western public had almost forgotten the Red Sultan, and only wondered casually what had become of him. Abdul, with all his faults,



EX-SULTAN ABDUL-UL-HAMID.

knew his business well enough to keep on good terms with Great Britain. Time and again the British officials helped him out of a bad fix, either political or financial, but the German influence working through the Young Turk party finally took advantage of the Sultan's misdeeds to bring about his downfall. He hammed V., Abdul's brother, who had been virtually a prisoner most of his life, was set up as a puppet on the throne and the Young Turks worked on new assembly to give their own profit—or, as it has turned out, to Germany's profit. Abdul was retroned in 1909, and if a revolution should occur might easily be made Sultan again.

THE THRILL OF BATTLE.

Largely Absent During the Months in the Trenches.

It will be a long time before this winter in the trenches wears off monotonen. Life underground has been one normal existence of thousands of soldiers over hundreds of miles of burrowed country.

Now, so far as experiencing the thrills of life in the trenches, you can get that at home. One correspondent writes of the battle of the Aisne, says: Any reader can get the thrill of battle by going into any enterprising suburban community where the village fathers are spending the taxpayer's money in building an elaborate trunk sewer, and by crawling into the labyrinth of trenches until he gets tired.

Occasionall, you climb a few steps and into the air and you duck your head gingerly out of the trench for a moment in yourself that you were really an integral part of the battle of the Aisne. Sure enough, the Aisne was there all right, but nothing about the "roar of battle." The correspondent walked through for hours and hours trying to locate the roar of battle, but without success. The battle of the Aisne sounded like a lark and same 24th day at home.

In two hours the average German shell go whistling overhead toward the French lines. There is not even even more spendthrift of ammunition and fired at a rate of one every ten minutes on the average. At rather longer intervals the French turned loose a machine gun, apparently just to let the Germans know that they had gun, while an occasional rifle shot was also heard.

In view of the "thrill of battle," the correspondent pushed on through the mud to the firing line and saw several German soldiers. Most of them were smoking cigars. More soldiers were found playing little cards on the sides of the trenches and with which they seemed to be infinitely honeycombed. Here were many of the comforts of home, including lamps, chairs, tables, even mattresses and other furnishings. Some of the soldiers were busy writing letters, others writing little notes, or making some needed mending; one was being shaved.

Void of Bombardment.

According to a writer in The War Budget, published recently, it would appear that the Queen Elizabeth, Britain's new superdreadnought, which is having been delivered at the mouth of the Dardanelles, $1,250,000, if she were to fire all her guns to full capacity for one hour. The Lion, the flagship of Admiral Beatty, uses up about $375 worth of cordite and shell every time she emptied one of her 13.5 guns at the Bluchar.

Would Wipe Out Canada's Senate

Mayor Church, of Toronto, Says Body Is Foe of Municipalities

Thomas L. Church, K.C., mayor of Toronto, has decided that the lords temporal of the Canadian Parliament must go, and must not stand on the order of their going. His Worship, who arrived at the Ritz-Carlton yesterday with several officials from the queen city, stated that the Senate is nothing but the creature of the banks and the sworn enemy of all municipal bodies, upon his natural desire as an ardent adjunct of the Union of Canadian Municipalities, to put the Upper House out of business with as little delay as possible.

Mayor Church, who was accompanied by Alderman Alfred Maguire, Controller John O'Neil, D. Chisholm, property commissioner and W. N. Pearce, city architect had a double mission in Montreal, to make a bow to His Worship and his associates wished to inspect the Bordeaux Jail, which cost $1,000,000. They were accompanied by the Back River by Hon. Messrs Tellercon and Mercier of the provincial cabinet. Speaking of the visit this evening, Mayor Church said that the Montreal Jail was evidently the last world in such institutions, as it had been a revelation to them. Dr. Lafleur, the high sheriff, had treated the Toronto visitors so handsomely that when he came to Toronto he will be given the freedom of the city, and, added Mayor Church jocularly, elected the honorary member of the Black Chapel of the Orange Association of British North America."

The visit this evening till Worship Toronto had Controllers Airey, Cote and McDonald as his guests for dinner at the Carlton. During the day the visitors paid their respects to Mayor Martin.

Controller O'Neill stated that visits between civic Montreal and official Toronto should be more frequent, for if they were closer, both would benefit. The Toronto party had been royally and would long remember the kindness of everyone met with, from Mayor Medéric Martin to the humblest magnificence down to the humblest trawler at the Montreal Jail.

The address to the controller left last night for Toronto, but Mayor Church will remain over another day to consult with Mr. W. D. Lighthall, K.C., with a view of having the annual meeting of the Canadian Union of Municipalities postponed till after the war. The meeting is called for Victoria, B.C., on July 20th, but Mayor Church believes that a postponement would better meet the wishes of the members.

Out to Kill Vincent Astor

19-Year-Old Youth Trapped by the C. P. Police in Effort to Extort $500

NEW YORK, April 17.—Accused of threatening to kill Vincent Astor if he should refuse a demand for $500, John Marsella, a youth of 19, was arrested at the Grand Central terminal today on complaint of Mr. Astor's business agent, William A. Dobbyn.

Marsella was taken to police headquarters where it was said he admitted having sent two letters to the young millionaire making death threats and demands for money. He admitted, according to the police, that if he had not been arrested he would have attempted to carry out his threat. In addition to a charge of attempted extortion, a charge of violating the Sullivan Law, forbidding the carrying of concealed weapons, was made against him by the police.

According to Mr. Dobbyn, one of the two letters was received on March 27, and the other on Thursday of this week. The first letter contained the demand for $500, and stated that unless it was forthcoming the young millionaire would be killed. A skull and crossbones adorned the head of the missive, which was signed "Black Hand." No attention was paid to the communication until the second letter was received, when Mr. Dobbyn notified the police and plans were made to trap the man.

Captain Tunney and Detective Barbats were assigned to the case and they followed Mr. Dobbyn to the Grand Central station where the prisoner

Marsella, in response to a pre-arranged signal, approached Dobbyn and asked if he had the $500 and if so to turn it over to him quick. Mr. Dobbyn put his hand to his forehead, a signal agreed upon with the police officers and they closed in and arrested Marsella after a short struggle, in which the man tried to draw a loaded revolver.

Dominion Steel Order

Ottawa Estimates Revenue From Total Business at $3,000,000

OTTAWA April 16.—A report on the Shell Committee appointed by the Minister of Militia last fall to supervise the manufacture of shells and explosives used in war munitions has been made to this Government. The head of the committee is Mr. Joseph Tarte and the chief technical adviser as Mr. David Carnegie, who has had large experience of this kind in Great Britain.

The report reviews the committee's work in securing orders for the manufacture of shells in Canada, aggregating up to the present time it is understood, some $6,000,000 and embracing factories in all parts of Canada. At the present time arrangements are being made at a number of western points to start the manufacture of shells in factories there. The committee reports that all the material being used in the manufacture of shells is, with the exception of copper, being mined and smelted in Canada. These materials include the shell cases, brass cartridge cases, primers, cordite powder and fuses. Thousands of men who would otherwise be out of work are now employed in the various manufacturing processes.

Nearly 200 examiners and district inspectors have been appointed under the direction of the chief inspector of arms and ammunition, to see that the work is being properly done in each factory. Uniform prices are paid and arrangements have been made to supply the shell assembling manufacturers with all the component parts of a shell free of charge. All kinds of shells up to the 18-pounder shrapnel shells are being manufactured.

The committee is now working on investigations in connection with the supply in Canada for the War Office of propellants and high explosives, and also the possibility of filling orders from the Russian Government for rifles and ammunition. In addition to the manufacture of several tons of cordite and powder in connection with the Government contracts for shells, the Minister of Militia has been instrumental in initiating a new industry in Canada viz., the utilization of the by-products from the coke ovens of the Dominion Iron and Steel Company at Sydney, N. S., for the manufacture of the high explosive, trini-tro-toluene. The report alone from the contract placed with this company will be nearly $2,000,000.

The report concludes with the statement that the quality and finish of the shells made in the Dominion are equal to if not better than the British shells.

USING SHOVEL SHIELDS

OTTAWA, April 17.—That 800 shovels of the type invented by Miss Ena McAdam, of the Militia Department, and purchased for the Canadian overseas forces have been in use at the front in France and have given every satisfaction is the news received at Ottawa. These shovels, which are provided with an aperture in the centre large enough to permit of a rifle barrel being passed through, are being used instead of sandbags by the Canadian soldiers and have been found to furnish a splendid means of protection. So far none have been perforated by rifle bullets.

An order for two millions of the shovels has, it is learned, been given in Canada by the Russian Government and will be distributed here.

There is a least this to say for the gold-fish. It doesn't try to sing.

War Review of the Week

THE most important phase of the war for the past week, if not for the past week, is still the Russian advance through the Carpathians. At the end of last week the first stage of the passage which will live as one of the great events in history was complete. The Russians had occupied the main range of the mountains for a distance of ninety miles, and were advancing in several columns down the river valleys that lead into the great Hungarian plains. The control of the most important pass—the Uzsok—is not yet complete. Sunday's official communique issued in Petrograd said that "after forcing their way through snow more than seven feet deep our troops at several points approached within four miles of the Uzsok Valley." The peril to the Russian army is not to be found in the Austrian armies which confront it. Its passes but in the Austro-German force which has been operating in Eastern Galicia for the past two months, and which is still hammering away year Stry1 at the left flank of the of the advancing Muscovites. This thrust at the Russian flank, if successful, might uncover the line of communications and render an advance through the passes extremely dangerous.

It is apparent that in this region of eastern Galicia some great battles must soon be fought similar to the first. The Austrians compels the enemy to retreat in the fear of being cut off from supplies and ammunition through the capture of the railways on the Hungarian plain. To the west of the Uzsok all goes well with the Russians. In the region of Mezo-Laborcz they captures an important height yesterday, as a result of which they are able to say that "the enemy has been driven back along the whole extent of the principal chain of the Carpathians in the region of our defiles." Remembering the cautious form it which the Russian official report is issued, this can unquestionably be taken to mean that everywhere along the line of the Stry the battle of the Carpathians has been won. The enemy's forces are now occupy an unbroken front of nearly 200 miles of Carpathian soil, and the plain across which they will advance toward Budapest is only twenty miles away.

On the western front the chief activity of importance has been the French drive from Verdun. In the direction of Metz. Two columns operating between the Meuse and the Moselle rivers have forced their way to the German line and have captured Les Eparges, a strong position which overlooks the Woevre plain. This whole area is the most difficult in the German line. Ever since the German defeat at the Marne the Kaiser's troops have hung on like grim death to their positions at St. Mihiel and Chauvoncourt which control the entrance to the Meuse valley, the road that leads diagonally across Belgium. The French attacking on either side from the west and southeast have all but isolated St. Mihiel, and an other hard drive may break off the German outpost, opening a channel into the German lines by way of the Meuse.

There has been very sharp fighting in the Argonne. The French on Saturday night demolished one of the enemy's blockhouses, took over 200 yards of trenches, and held all their gains despite two counter-attacks. They were equally fortunate near St. Mihiel, in the wood of Ailly, but farther to the east in the wood of Montmare the Germans worked back some trenches they lost on the previous day. It is probably to the struggle in this region Berlin refers when it says that the French left 1,200 dead upon the field and still occupy in the hands of the successful Germans.

There seems to be very little doing on the front in Belgium and northern France. The expected German attack there in force has not been made, and there are no signs of it. The Belgians along the Yser are being stirred up a bit, but there seems to be no attempt to break through. It is recognized that very large British forces are now concentrated in this region behind the firing line, and what might have been possible a month or two ago is now among the things unattainable. The French aviators have been busy in Belgium. No less than 155 bombs were dropped on the naval station and foundry on the canal at Bruges, where it is believed German submarines are being assembled.

The Dardanelles bombardment is awaiting the arrival of land forces which are rapidly nearing their objective. In the meantime the allied fleet is shelling the forts on the straits to prevent the Turks from repairing them.

There are still insistent stories from Norway of a sea fight off Bergen on W.-Iesday night, April 8. Searchlights were seen and heavy cannonading heard. The theory is that a squadron of German cruisers, intended to be used as commerce raiders, tried to get out into the Atlantic. One Norse captain says he counted 14 German cruisers in the North Sea. The authorities believe that the ships were engaged in target practice, and that this gave rise to the rumor of a naval battle.

The Prinz Eitel, the German commerce raider, has been interned at Newport News and now the Kronprinz Wilhelm, the last of the pirates in port seeking supplies. It is very improbable that she will even try to escape the cordon of British warships outside the Hampton Roads.

The publication by the Pullman Company of the salaries paid its porters seems to explain fully why it does not encourage liberal tipping by passengers.

CIGARETTES WANTED.

Supply in Canadian Trenches Not Enough, Says Sergt. Rothery.

A letter has been received by A. C. Fissel, manager of the Equitable Life in Port Arthur, from Sergt. Frank Rothery of the first Canadian contingent. The letter is dated March 19 and passed through the hands of the censor, who was very kind in this instance, however, as there are no strictures. Perhaps Sergt. Rothery's appeal for tobacco for the boys softened his heart.

The letter follows in part:

Well, here we are now among all the trouble and we have already done two turns of four days each. We are due in again on Sunday and to tell you the truth our boys prefer trenches to the rest billets.

Everything is arranged beautifully here. Such a system. Every man has his share and then the next man takes the job on. For instance, take the food and the ammunition supplies. They come so far up country by train and the Army Service Corps takes it further up in their motor lorries. They deliver it to brigade stores. Regimental transports (horse drawn) take hold of it, and after issuing it to the various companies it is again loaded and brought up to within a mile of the trenches.

From that point it is taken on hand-carts to battalion headquarters, about five hundred yards back of the trenches, and again it passes into other hands and is carried right into the trenches by the ration party. Of course, all supplies come from the trenches at night and the ration time never varies more than fifteen minutes.

We get good food and lots of it. The only thing that there is any kick about is the tobacco supply. We get one issue of four packets per week and we can't buy any in this part of the country. This doesn't keep the boys going in smokes, and I think that the Canadian people would be doing a good thing if they sent a supply of cigarettes for the Canadian troops. I am not asking for myself, as I get a good supply from my folks in England. Cigarettes are a luxury and things that the boys would appreciate. I don't want to go against any philanthropists who wish to help I wish you would pass along the word.

Tommy's Jokes.

Tommy dearly loves his joke, even when embarking on an enterprise from which he may never return. A Paris correspondent of The London News Chronicle has recorded some of some British volunteers off at Gare St. Lazare. "There were all sorts among them," he says, "clerks and factory hands, undergraduates, adventurers from the sea coast, men who have left comfortable houses and will miss their daily baths, men who will find barrack life luxurious. The volunteers were full of fun. Many carriages had 'Pleasure train to Berlin,' 'Kaiser William's birthday party,' and terrible pleasantries chalked on them."

French Set to Music.

British soldiers have learning French rapidly, both speaking grasp as well as at the front they are given regular lessons in asking in French for what they are most likely to need. One of the favorite ways of teaching them is to set to catchy music

Torpedoes Which Follow Ships.

It is said that the belligerent nations are much interested in the recent invention by a young engineer of a torpedo which, according to its maker, is more effective than any other ever used. By means of a magnetic electrical device, which is affected by any great mass of metal, the torpedo guides itself, and when once affected in such a way that it will steer in that direction. The invention is this device that if the missile be discharged at a ship at a range of two or three or even five miles that ship is doomed. The torpedoe has two arms of nickel silver attached on either side, projecting at right-angles. At the ends of these arms are wire magnetic coils, about four inches in diameter. Upon these magnetic coils alongs the access of the torpedo. A slug-frequency current passes through them, and the presences of any great mass of metal charges the self-induction which effects the electrical relays, and these in turn operate the motor controlling the rudder, so the torpedo will follow its target, and will steer for it, no matter how often the ships may change its course, or position.

"Little Corporal of France."

"Hands up!" With these words Guglave Chatain, of the 82nd Regiment of the Line, who is fifteen and not yet fifteen years of age, has been promoted corporal, bared, with rifle in shoulder, upon seven Germans, who were striking in a little village near Poniency. Being more or less fatigued, they failed to notice that the little corporal was unsupported. As soon afterwards Chatain's comrades of the 82nd saw seven creatifalen Germans walk into their lines, followed by the youthful captor, who held his rifle ready for any emergency. Soon after, Chatain was wounded, and it was in the hospital that the colonel came to him and promoted him corporal, saying, "You are the second Little Corporal of France. The army is very proud of you!"

THE BODY BIRDS OF COURT

Eighty-eight when he died. That is a great age," I said.

"Yes, indeed. But he was a very clever man, was Robert Evans, Court, and brewed good beer", my companion answered. "Fine home-brewed was known, I am certain, for more than ten miles. You will have heard of his body-birds, perhaps?"

"His body-birds!" I exclaimed.

"Yes, to be sure. Robert Evans Court's body-birds!" And he looked at me, quick to suspect that his English was deficient. He had learned in part from books; and hence the curious mixture I presently noted of Welsh idioms and formal English phrases. It was in his light trap in which I was being helped on my journey, and his genial chat which was lightening that journey; which lay through a part of Carnarvonshire usually traversed only by wool merchants and cattle dealers—a country of upland farms swept by the sea breezes, where English is not spoken even now by one person in a hundred, and even at inns and postoffices you get only "Dim Saesneach" for your answer, "Do you not say", he went on, "body-birds in English? Oh, but to be sure it is in the Bible"" with a sudden recovery of his self-esteem.

"To be sure!" I replied hurriedly. "Of course it is! But as to Mr. Robert Evans, cannot you tell me the story?"

"I'll be bound there is no man in North or South Wales, or Carnarvonshire, that could tell it better, for Gwen Madoc, of whom you shall hear presently, was aunt to me. You see Robert Evans' young friend settled h'mself in his seat and prepared to go slowly up the long, steep hill of Rhiw which rose before us—"Robert Evans lived in old Court, called Court, for near the set, very windy and lonesome. He was a warm man. He had Court from his father, and he had mortgages, and as many as four lawsuits. But he was unlucky in his family. He had years back but the one—he helped on the farm, or at times fished for there is a cove at Court, and good boats. Of these sons only one was married—a Sodelwomaen from Bristol, I have heard, who had had a hundred before, a merchant captain, and she brought with her to Court a daughter, Peggy, ready-made as we say. Well of those three fine men, there was—not one left in a year. They were out fishing in a boat together, and Evan—that was the married one—was steering as they came into the cove one day when a tide running very high with a south wind. He steered a little to one side—and many think it was done upon my honor—and pah! in an hour their bodies were thrown up on Robert Evans' land like bits of seaweed.

But that was not all. Evan's wife was on the beach at the time, so near that she could have thrown a stone into the boat. They do say that between she was pining away at Court—it was 1642 and lone-some and cold, to Uc-sixteen, and she had been used to live in the towns. But, however she never held up her head after Evan was drowned. She took to her bed and died in the short month. And then of all at Court, there were left only Robert Evans and the child Peggy."

"How old was she then?" I asked. He had paused, and was looking thoughtfully before, as a man who would seem, to make the situation quite clear to himself.

"She was twelve; and the old man eighty and more. She was in no way related to him, you will remember, but he had her stop, and let her want for nothing that did not money—and He was very careful of money, as was right. It was that made him the man he was. But there were some who would have given money to be rid of her. Year in and year out they never let the old man rest but that he should ask for a service at least—though her father had been the captain of a big ship; and if Robert Evans had been a stiff man of his years, they would have had their will."

"But why—"

By a gesture he stopped the words on my lips as they rose mysteriously out of the silence about us a sound of wings, a chorus of shrill cries. Five hundred white forms swept overhead, and fell a white cluster about something in a distant field. They were sea gulls. "Just those same!" he said proudly, jerking his whip in their direction—"body-birds. When the new that Robert Evans' son was drowned got about, there was a pretty uprising in Carnarvonshire. There seemed to be Evanses where there had never been Evanses before. As many as twenty walked in the funeral, and you may be sure that afterward they did not leave the old man to himself. The Llewellyn Evanses were foremost. They had had a lawsuit with Court, but made it up now. Besides there were Mr. and Mrs. Evan Bevan, and the three Evanses of Bank, and Gwen Evans, and the Davieses of Sarn, and many more, who were all forward to visit Court and be friendly with old Gwen Madoc, Robert's housekeeper. 'I am told they could look black at one another, but in this they were all in one tale, the foreign child should be sent away; and at times one and another would give her a rough word."

"She must have had a bad time!" I observed.

"You may say that. But she stayed, and it was wonderful how strong and handsome she grew up, where her mother had just pined away for the sea; and I have heard that people who live inland about here come to think of nothing of the land—it is certain that they are good at a bargain—while the fishermen who are with a great space before them are finer men, I have heard, in their minds as well as their bodies; ins Peggy back grew up like them, free and open and upstanding, though she lived inland. When she was in front she would run down to the sea where the salt spray washed away her tears and the wind blew her hair, that was of the color of sea weed, into a tangle. She was never so happy as when she was climbing the rocks among the sea gulls, or sitting with her books at the cove where the farm people would not go for fear of hearing the church bell that bring bad luck. Books! Oh, yes indeed! next to the sea she was fon' of books. There were many volumes I have been told, that were her own father's; then Robert Evans, though he was a Wesleyan, went to church because there was no Wesleyan chapel the Calvinistic Methodists being in strength about here and the minister lent her many English books and he befriended her. And I have heard that once, when the Llewllyn Evanses had been about the girl, he spoke to them so that they were afraid to drive down Rhiw hill that night, but led the horses; and I think it may be true, for they were docile pets. Still, he was a good man, and I know that many Calvinists walked in his funeral."

"Requiescat in pace", said I.

"Eh! Well, I don't know how that may me", he replied, "but you must understand that all this time the Llewellyn Evanses, and the Llewellyn of Nant, and the others would be over at Court once or twice a week, so that the child should not feel herself left. Robert Evans' body-birds; and when they were there Peggy McNeil would be having an ill time, since even the old man would be bent to her in more so as he grew older. But, however, there was a better time coming, as it seemed at first, the beginning of which was through Peter Jones, lobster pots. He was a great friend to Robert Evans. She would go out with him to take up his pots—half a mile in two or three times a week. So it happened one day, when they had pushed off from the beach, and Peggy was steering, that old Rees stopped rowing on a sudden.

"Why don't you go on, Peter?" said Peggy.

"Bide a bit', said old Rees.

"What have you forgotten?' said she, looking about in the bottom of the boat. For she knew what he used very well.

"Nought,' said he. But all the same he began to put the boat about in a stupid fashion, afraid of offending her, and yet loath to lose a shilling. And so, when Peggy looked up, what should she see but a number of ships—whom Rees had perceived, you will understand,—stepping into the boat. And Peter Jones, standing on the shore, under heavy rifle-fire, to the assistance of a number of wounded. People at home do not realize the materials of which 'Tommy' is made.'

"Of course the young gentleman thought no harm, but said gaily, 'Thank you! I am just in time.' And what should he do, but go all and sit down on the seat by her, and began to talk to Rees about the weather and the pots. And presently he said to her, 'I suppose you are used to steering, my girl?'

"Yes,' said Peggy, but very grave and quick-like, so that he had not determined that she was old Rees' daughter he would have taken notice of it. But she was wearing a short frock that she used for the fishing, and was wet with getting into the boat, moreover.

Sir Thos. Lipton Saw Terrible Misery in Plague-Swept Servia

SIR THOMAS LIPTON, who has just returned to England after taking out to Serbia a British Red Cross and Order of St. John expedition, gives the following description of the conditions in Serbia: "I was given the opportunity by the Serbian Government of traveling throughout Serbia. No Briton could help being thrilled by seeing with his own eyes the magnificent fight the Serbians are making against their powerful opponents; no one could help being appalled at the terrible epidemic of typhus that is torturing the life out of this little nation. How many thousands of cases there are I cannot say, because exact and accurate figures are unascertainable. Mrs. Hankin Hardy, who has charge of an old prison turned into a hospital at Kragojevatz, told me that one day after day men in the delirium of typhus were brought in on wagons to her door and were laid there to die because there was no room for them inside. Multiply this by 1,000 cases, and you have Serbia as it is to-day.

"The country has been attacked by disease as, I think, no country has ever been attacked before. It is a plague such as the world has rarely known and all the benevolence of humanity will be required to deal with it. I visited the hospitals from north to south, and everywhere I found them full of typhus cases. In some hospitals they had neither blankets nor mattresses; in others the mattresses were put sideways, and three or four patients were lying on one mattress. Dr. Ryan, the chief of the American Red Cross Mission in Serbia, who has 2,900 patients under his care, told me that unless something is done immediately to stop the disease many more half the population of Serbia will be wiped out. The most urgent needs are tents, wooden huts, sanitary materials, clothing, bedding, bedding drugs and medical stores, field kitchens, but above all doctors and nurses.

"A great deal of good work has been done at Lady Paget's hospital at Nish, but the epidemic threatens to overwhelm every isolated effort. What I have seen convinces me that the efforts of the Red Cross, splendid as they are, must prove inadequate. The whole of the resources of humanity must be organized to fight this epidemic in such a way that full force can be brought to bear upon the entire stricken districts, and that even the Serbian people can realize even more terrible that annihilation is the enemy."

Sir Thomas Lipton says that the British Red Cross are willing largely to extend their work in Serbia if the necessary funds can be obtained.

When Sir Thomas was in Belgrade he visited a certain hospital and came upon a lady who was attending to what had been page boy to an Austrian officer. When the Austrians hurriedly evacuated Serbia, the officer abandoned the boy. The lad speaks eight languages, including Serbian and German. Sir Thomas took him back to England with him.

Heroes Unsung.

"I have just read," writes Sergt. W. Fisher, 20th Hussars, "a long list of honors awarded the D. C. M. All honor and good luck to them! Yet how many brave fellows are left who deserve to be honored the same. I was in the field four months, at Mons, the Marne, the Aisne, La Cateau, Ypres, and the fight for Calais, and during that time I saw many men expose themselves to save others. My own officer was shot—was brought in two o' his men who had been wounded; a sergeant stopped, when pursued by Germans, to assist to safety a comrade badly hurt; and two of our machine-gunners were, under heavy rifle-fire, to the assistance of a wounded officer. People at home do not realize the material of which 'Tommy' is made.'

FORTUNES OFFERED FOR LEADERS' HEADS

According to the newspapers, the German Emperor offered a reward equal to five thousand dollars to any soldier who succeeds in killing the commander of a British armored train. This is a handsome sum, but, whether he knows it or not, the Kaiser himself is the subject of a bigger reward, the intense hatred with which he and his inhuman methods are regarded throughout France prompted a patriotic Frenchman to offer $25,000 to any soldier who puts the finishing touch to his career.

During the South African campaign the Boers entertained the most bitter hatred towards the late Cecil Rhodes. They were reported to have offered a reward of £25,000, with three hundred acres of land and a full stock of cattle and fittings, to any lurgher who would bring the head of the Cape Colossus and lay it at the feet of President Kruger at Pretoria.

Only less acceptable to Oom Paul would have been the heads of Dr. Jameson and Sir John Willoughby, a rabid fame. Any Boer who had had the good fortune to arrest them would once received the fervent blessing of the President, plus a fat reward in a more substantial form.

Wanted Kruger's Ears

There was a price, too, upon Kruger's own head, and upon his ears as well. For the moment a certain enterprising showman made one of the latter, although it was never carried off.

As for his ears, a fairly high price was put upon them by a certain showman. Having in his service a re-markable who was skilled up, with his fleless treachman promised him a reward of £5 if he brought back with him the ears of Oom Paul.

For the capture of the notorious Dreyfus traitor, Captain Esterhazy, who was wounded and taken prisoner at the battle of Sedan, the British Government once offered a reward of £5,000.

This unscrupulous scoundrel throughout the Zulu War acted as Cetewayo's military adviser, and in that capacity displayed the bitterest hatred and most unscrupulous ferocity towards the British forces. Consequently, after the battle of Ginnel, the reward mentioned was offered for his capture.

Prices Put by the Press

In the course of the war between the United States and Spain, a New York newspaper offered a reward of several thousand dollars to any of the war correspondents or other persons engaged in the war in Cuba, who succeeded in bringing to them General Mercier.

Even when was made because this officer was reported to have treated with brutal ferocity and cruelty, harrowing descriptions of which, with illustrations in match, were published in the pages of the paper in question.

But that was not the first time that a newspaper put a price on the heads of prominent enemies of its country. The same thing was done by Paris journals when the former France-German War was raging, the King of Prussia, Bismarck, and Moltke being the subjects of large money rewards offered in this way.

FAKING WAR PICTURES
German Public Sees Only What the Government Allows It to See
So far as regards the war and all its side issues, the moving picture is in a practically a branch of the government. In the home office at Berlin there is a high official who devotes his entire attention and that of a large staff to supplying the moving picture needs of the nation. Cinema photographers form as distinct a unit of the armies in east and west as machine guns. There is no such thing as individual pictures obtained by private operators at their own expense. Every war film and every film dealing with topical occurrences of any kind, even of a fictional character, is made by the government, and supplied at nominal rates, or given away free to the cinema houses all over the country. Nothing is thrown on the screen in Germany unless it bears the official stamp showing that it comes from the home office.
As American newspaper photographer, who was arrested in Belgium and sent to Berlin, asked permission to go to the front as a moving picture operator. His request was refused, but he was handed 8,000 feet of film depicting war scenes for use in America. Being a somewhat unscrupulous youth, he then calmly demanded that the government make a special series of pictures for him, portraying him as the victim of a [illegible] hotel in Ostend. Such a scene, he said, would add to the interest in the lecture with which he intended to accompany the presentation of the films. So he was taken to a cinema studio and, in the role of the [illegible] was "killed" in the most realistic fashion, even to the extent of swallowing a strong and pretty "heroine" for the drama of which he was the hero. The climax of the film shows the photographer desperately wounded in the arms of his fair companion.
Having myself seen these pictures, as a correspondent of the London Chronicle in Germany, I can testify as to the absolute truth of the above story. It is the most striking illustration I could give of the reliability of the German government's moving picture propaganda.

Origin of Field Guns
Of all the world's great battles Crecy possesses a unique interest. The English used only three pieces of field ordnance. They were small cannon made of trees, bored, and bound with iron hoops, and the missiles were of stone, scarcely larger than cricket balls. Doubtless this rude artillery made far more noise than it effected damage. It was the longbow and the broadsword that won the battle, but nevertheless gunpowder was henceforth to play an ever-increasing part in the strife of nations.

Collision Between Bycalist and Auto
Boy Riding Wheel Sustains Injuries—Claim Both in Fault
On Sunday afternoon at about 2 o'clock an accident occurred at the junction of Front and Bridge street west, which might have resulted fatally, but such fortunately was not the case. James Cummin, a lad 14 years, son of Mr. John Cummin, was riding a bicycle, when at the corner of Front and Bridge streets a collision occurred, between an auto driven by Mr. A. Burgoyne of this city and the lad. The result was the boy was struck by the auto, and sustained injuries which were not of a serious nature. The version of the affair is such that it is difficult to give a correct account of same. It is alleged that the boy was speeding up on the bike and it is also alleged that the auto was turned from off Front street to Bridge street upon the wrong side. Whoever is to blame, it there is any fault the smash happened with the result that the boy Cummin sustained certain injuries which will confine him to the house for a few days. His right leg and hip were injured and he also sustained painful bruises about the body. The machine was such that the wind shield of the car was broken and the bicycle was considerably damaged.

Gives British A Character Certificate
Might Shoot and Bayonet Me, But Not One Would Offer Insulting Word
BERLIN, April 17—The newspapers of Berlin reproduce today a noteworthy speech delivered by Admiral von Hintze, German Minister to China, before the German Club in Shanghai.
"You and I, who have lived so long abroad, have learned to know, respect and like a great many Englishmen", said Admiral von Hintze, "and if we observe the latest campaign of lies against us we are forced to ask ourselves from whom they really emanate. If we go through the list of our acquaintances we will find not a single one whom we could believe capable of deriving from the narrow path of truth, even if he adhered to the principles of 'right or wrong, my country,' or 'everything is fair in war.'
"I am willing to assert to my numerous British friends that they might shoot or bayonet me, but that the name of them would I expect a scurrilous or insulting word."

TO HOLD PRISONERS AT CANADIAN PORTS
SEATTLE, Wash., April 16.—American steamship companies operating between Seattle and San Francisco were notified by the British Admiralty today that all German, Austrian or Turkish passengers or members of the crews would be removed from any vessel calling at a Canadian port and held as prisoners of war.

GREEKS IN CANADA MAY GO TO FRONT

PARIS, April 19.—(Special)—The Athens correspondent of the Petit Journal states that M. Venizelos, former Premier of Greece, told him that he would remain on the island of Samos for a fortnight, after which he would leave for America. M. Venizelos said that he would not return to Greece even if his party were successful in the coming elections, as he considered it certain to be.

The former Premier, continues the correspondent, said that he considered as an insult the recent denial by the King of Greece of certain statements which M. Venizelos had made, and that he would remain unreconciled until he received satisfaction.

Another version of the former Premier's visit to America is that he intends to raise a corps of 50,000 Greeks to fight in Asia Minor.

BANK MANAGER VICTIM OF BRUTAL ASSAULT

Two Men Are Now Under Arrest at Scotland

BRANTFORD, Ont., April 19.—(Special.)—W. W. Gourlay, Manager of the Crown Bank at Scotland, was the victim of a brutal assault about 11 o'clock Friday night. G. G. Lee and James McGinnis are under arrest on suspicion of being his assailants. Mr. Gourlay was on his way home when he was set upon by two men who knocked him down and beat him into insensibility. He was so badly used up that he will be confined to his bed for several days. County Constable Kerr drove to Scotland Saturday to investigate the case and the arrests followed. One of the men is said to have threatened the bank manager. There was no attempt at robbery although Mr. Gourlay had considerable money on him.

Apparently a man never gets to be so old that he ceases to be surprised when women's fashions change.

HURRY AND CUNNING.

Hurry and cunning are the two oppressions of dispatch and skill, but neither of them ever learns his master's trade.—Charles Colton.

French Knots.

To make French knots, knot the thread and bring it up through the material; then take an ordinary short backstitch and before drawing the needle entirely out of the material wind the thread two or three times around the needle (according to size of knot desired), and, holding the coils down with the left thumb, draw the needle through. Then insert the needle over the edge of coils in the same hole, making the stitch secure. Carry the thread on the wrong side of the material on the next knot without cutting.

Suppose.

Suppose the week days just as good mechanics to draw from the box the silent lawyer as the powerful, then there would not be one case go to trial where now ten are tried, there would not be one case tried where now hundreds are brought, and for every case that is now bluffed out and that does not get into court nor reach a settlement of any kind, there would be a very strong probability of a fair and amicable settlement.—E. S. Gray in Journal of the American Institute of Criminal Law.

Downward Revision.

After shaking hands at the ferry dock the other day one colored man inquired of another, "Did you attend de Widow Jones a few months ago?"

"Dat's me—I did," was the answer, "but I've lost her."

"Why, how's dat?"

"Well, de fust week she called me honey, de next week she called me honey and called me old Hitchards, the third week she cum for me wid a flatiron, an' I'se kinder got a hunch she don't like me."—Argonaut.

Naming the Mississippi.

The Mississippi river had more than a dozen native names, different designations being given at different points in its course. The Algonquins called it the Meche Sebe, other tribes termed it Chucagua, Mito, Tamaliseo, Tapala Ji and other names. The Algonquin name was finally adopted by the whites for the whole river. The meaning is "father of waters," or "the whole river." Twenty-seven spellings are noted in the writings of early explorers.—Minneapolis Journal.

Old Peppermint Remedies.

Peppermint drops have long been the unfailing comforter of old ladies—and others—but in recent times we seem to have got past needing some of the medicinal qualities for which peppermint oil was held in high esteem in bygone centuries. Gerarde in his Herbale (1633) advises the use of it either "poured into the eares with honeyed water" or "taken inwardly" as a certain specific "against scolopendres, beare-worms, sea-serpents, scorpions and the bittings of mad dogs!"—London Chronicle.

BRITISH ADVANCE THREE MILES PIERCE GERMAN LINES AT YPRES ONWARD MOVEMENT STARTED

Sappers Blow Top of Hill at Kemmel Entirely Away and Take Enemy Completely by Surprise in Biggest Action Since Last Autumn—German Loss Already Greater Than at Neuve Chapelle

NORTH OF FRANCE, April 20.—(Special.)—In point of view of territory recovered, this latest success of the British army, south of Ypres is the biggest advance that has been made since autumn, for we have advanced five kilometres (a kilometre is 5-8 of a mile) and have obtained a possession of the greatest tactical value after a period of inaction or rather apparent inaction since our preparations have been rapidly maturing all the time.

Telling Blow Delivered

We have delivered another telling blow upon the German lines between Kemmel and Wulverghem. The attack opened Sunday morning, when our miners, whose admirable sapping has been a feature of the campaign, sprung a series of mines of exceptional strength. I am told that part of a hill was entirely blown away and several hundred Germans were so utterly destroyed that there remained nothing but human debris. The Village of Kemmel is famous in Flanders for its mountain, a hill some 500 feet high, but the only one in the country.

There was sharp fighting here on the 7th and 8th of this month, when the Germans almost effected a surprise on our lines, and after temporarily occupying some of our trenches were eventually driven back with heavy slaughter.

Important Step in Advance

This most recent phase is, however, of quite another character, two kilometres being added at this point, and with the hill of Kemmel now in our hands it marks an important step in the great task of wiping round the German right. The fighting, I hear was quite as fierce as at Neuve Chapelle. Our advance swept on to a point where there were no trenches and our men were exposed to heavy fire while digging themselves in. It was a case of breaking through the German lines of trenches to a point considerably behind them. Our artillery, following up the work of the sappers played havoc with the German trenches, and as at Neuve Chapelle, our infantry fell up on the foe, utterly demoralized.

The Advance in Progress

The action is still in progress and our advance has been unchecked. Eight hundred German prisoners have already come in and everything points to the enemy's losses being greater even than those at Neuve Chapelle.

At all points we have given the German a disagreeable taste of our metal. Their attitude is one of depression. Their aeroplanes are busy with the bombardment of open towns, but they are carefully chased away from proximity of our fighting lines by the vigilance of our airmen, which accounts for the fact that we are enabled to make our preparations for the attack without news or at best with only scanty news of our movements leaking out.

MOST IMPORTANT OF WAR

NORTHERN FRANCE, April 20.—News has just reached here of one of the most important engagements of the war in the neighborhood of Ypres. The first ambulance train conveying our wounded arrived here one hour ago. My information came from a source which places the following facts beyond doubt. Our sappers succeeded in mining the only hill in that vicinity. The blowing up of the hill yesterday morning was the signal for the opening of a battle extending over some miles of front. The havoc wrought among hundreds of German troops occupying the hill had the most terrifying effect on the German lines both right and left, and our concentrated charge, in which our artillery played a most important part, had succeeded up to last night in driving the Germans with terrible loss fully three miles back from their first line of trenches.

French Attacks all Failures, While the Germans Continue to Advance

BERLIN, April 20.—A German headquarters report issued this morning says: German sapping attacks in the Champagne country yesterday made progress, while a French attack in the Argonne district, north of Le Four de Paris failed. French attacks near Flirey broke down. We stormed and reoccupied the village of Embermenil. In the Vosges the French attack on Schilleker heights failed, while the German advance on Hartmans Weilerkopf gained about one hundred yards.

Charge Against Raymond Swoboda is Withdrawn—Still Awaits Trial as Spy

French Occupy Another Town

PARIS, April 20.—(Special)—The advance of French columns continued along both banks of the Fecht River in Alsace, on German soil, today, and forced the Germans hastily to evacuate Esselbruck above Metzeral, and to abandon a large amount of war material. The battle is expected to develop in this section of the front in the near future.

The Germans have not acquiesced with good grace in the French occupation of Les Eparges and continue to launch attacks in an attempt to regain lost territory. A fresh attack on this position was completely routed early this morning.

A sort of drawn battle between German and French infantry was fought on the Meuse-Moselle west front.

The French artillery had the best of an artillery duel in the Reguieville region today.

TWO NEW AUDITORS APPOINTED BY CITY

City Engineer Evans Makes Report on West Belleville Sewage System—Market Leased to A. S. Large for $2,300—

A Busy Session of City Council

At the Council meeting last evening the business of a rather important nature was transacted. The report of City Engineer Evans as to the appointment east of the sewer system in West Belleville was adopted and notice of same will be published. Two new auditors were appointed, namely: Messrs. F. H. Henry and J. W. Davidson, and the remuneration was fixed at $180 each per annum. Some other matters were attended to during the interesting session.

Those in attendance were Mayor Panter, Aldermen Woolley, McCrady, Wallbridge, Smith, Ducksworth, Earle and McFee.

After reading and confirming the minutes of the last meeting the Council went into committee of the whole on reports, communications, etc., Ald. Smith in the chair.

The accounts recommended to be paid by the various committees were passed and the following recommendations were carried:

That the report of the engineer on the petition ter water on Earle street from North Front street to Coleman street, and on Coleman street from the Pine street 350 feet to the north, be received and filed, and as the revenue that would be derived therefrom would be sufficient to pay the required 10 per cent. that the prayer of the petition be granted.—Carried.

That the offer submitted by the special committee for the publishing and clerical work in connection with the assessment rolls be accepted.—Carried.

A recommendation that the tender of A. S. Large for the lease of the market was adopted, his tender being $2,300.

A recommendation pointing out that H. J. Graham Company be notified not to allow any solid substances to run into a drain leading from their Front street premises.

A petition was presented asking for the building of a gutterlittle walk on that portion of the east side of Cedar street.—Referred to the assessor and city engineer to ascertain if properly signed.

The report of City Engineer Evans re sewer system in West Belleville was presented, being as follows:—

A 20 inch trunk sewer on Coleman street from 100 feet south of the C.N.O.R. bridge to Moira street, estimated cost $12,352.00.

A 10 inch branch sewer on Bridge street from Yeomans street to Coleman street. Estimated cost $1,957.50.

A 10 inch branch sewer on Catherine street from Yeomans street to Coleman street. Estimated cost $1,-967.83.

A 10 inch branch sewer on Moira street from Yeomans street to Coleman street, estimated cost $3,638.00.

That the construction of these sewers be undertaken as a local improvement on the initiative plan under section 20, chapter 193, R.S.O. 1914, of the Local Improvement Act.

That notice of the intention of the Council to construct these sewers be given in the two daily newspapers, also notices mailed or delivered to the owners of all property to be affected thereby as in said section set forth.

That application be made at once to the Provincial Board of Health for their approval of the plans and specifications for construction of said sewers.

That a construction By-law be prepared and tenders called for the construction of said sewers.

That after the space of 1 month from the date of first publication of the notices of the Council to construct said sewer (it not sufficient objection has been made) that the work be proceeded with at once.

That a proper proportion of the extra cost of the Coleman street trunk sewer be charged against all property benefitted thereby, or to be benefitted in the near future.

That the cost of the sewers which front or corner lots shall be chargable and paid as follows: two-thirds by the properties so affected and one-third by the corporation at large.

City Engineer Evans was of the opinion that a 20 inch pipe was sufficient for the trunk sewer on Coleman street. This would do for a population of 20,000. There would be a manhole at every corner.

The recommendation of the committee concurring in the report was adopted.

Mr. F. H. Henry and J. W. Davidson were appointed auditors at a salary of $180 each, that being the amount of their tenders for the work.

An account of $2 was passed to J. Bateman.

The committee rose and reported. The report was received and adopted.

ENQUIRIES.

Ald. Woodley asked if West Bridge street was going to be cleaned.

Ald. McFee—Not at present. Other streets need to be cleaned.

Ald. Earle asked if it was the intention of the Council to have the seats on the parks painted and also the fountain at Corby's park.

Ald. McFee—They have been painted every year, but this year it was necessary to curtail expenses.

Ald. Earles asked if it was the duty of the Council or the Harbor Commissioners to repair holes in the rip-rapping about Victoria Park.

Mayor Panter said it was the duty of the Harbor Commissioners, and he would attend to the same.

Ald. McFee asked about a lease from the City to the Harbor Commissioners, in relation to the Park. It was, he believed in ex-Mayor Wills' hands.

Mayor Panter—I will see to the matter.

INTRODUCTION OF BYLAWS.

Ald. Wallbridge introduced a bylaw to appoint two auditors for the city. The Council went into the committee of the whole on bylaws, Ald. Earle in the chair.

The banks in the bylaw were filled in with the names of F. H. Henry and J. W. Davidson, and the remuneration was fixed at $180 each.

The bylaw was passed through its various stages and numbered 1937.

MOTIONS.

Ald. McCurdy moved, seconded by Ald. McCurdy that the Harbor Commissioners be requested to at once repair the rip-rapping around Victoria Park.—Carried.

Ald. McFee moved, seconded by Ald. McCurdy, that the Council express their heartfelt sympathy to Alderman and Mrs. Platt in the loss they have sustained by the death of their daughter, and that a copy of this resolution be sent to Mrs. Platt.

The Mayor said the motion was carried by all the members of the Council. The motion was unanimously carried.

UNFINISHED BUSINESS

Ald. Wallbridge, under this head of business, spoke of the sprinkling of streets which had been done in former years by petition and the expense paid by residents of the streets. He would advocate the streets being oiled instead of watered. The streets would, however, have to be cleaned up first.

Ald. McFee thought it was not advisable to clean any street until we have had a good rain. If citizens upon any street petition for the streets to be oiled it would certainly be cleaned before it is oiled. The oil has a protecting influence on the street, whilst watering them does them injury.

Ald. Wallbridge said a petition could be secured for the oiling of Bridge street, after it had been cleaned.

Ald. McFee—Two applications of oil, if put on properly, would do for the season.

The following motion was then introduced:

Ald. Wallbridge moved, seconded by Ald. Woodley, that this Council wishes to intimate to the ratepayers that it is prepared to accede to a petition for the oiling instead of watering of any streets provided the cost of the same is borne by the residents on the street.—Carried.

Ald. Smith desired to know if there had been any report received of the test of the water taken from the excavation at Zwick's Island.

Mayor Panter.—No.

TANK CLEANED.

Mayor Panter informed the members of the Council that the water tank had been thoroughly cleaned. The citizens would no doubt be pleased to learn this.

A COMPLAINT.

Ald. Smith said there had been complaints made in reference to the Children's playgrounds in east Belleville being the rendezvous at night of parties who were causing trouble. More lights might be placed thereon, or a policeman visit the place nightly.

The matter was left in abeyance for the time being.

Council adjourned.

CAIRO, April 19.—The following official communication was issued yesterday:

"On the fifteenth three aeroplanes made a flight from the canal to El Sirr, some 25 miles south of El Arish (on the Sinai peninsula), dropping bombs, which were effective. From 150 to 200 tents were seen. The distance there was more than 120 miles.

"No other enemy troops were seen this side of El Sirr, though one or two small posts of about 20 men are known to exist.

"On the same date a French cruiser bombarded a camp near El Arish, a seaplane directing the fire. No large number of troops were seen, though enemy guns opened fire both on the cruiser and seaplane. Neither was hit however.

"On the seventeenth a French cruiser, again assisted by a seaplane, bombarded the enemy's camp well to the south of Ghazzeh town, (some forty miles southwest of Jerusalem). Considerable damage was done."

Italy and Austria Now or Never

(Canadian Press Special)

A despatch from Rome to the Pigaro says today is the latest date set for consideration of any proposals Austria might wish to make to Italy. A WARNING TO CROOKEDNESS

Sir Robert Borden and the Grafters

A new chapter in the history of party politics in Canada was written in Parliament last week.

Rising in his seat in the morning Sir Robert Borden, as prime minister of the Dominion and head of the Conservative party, read out of that party in effect, two members of it whose names have been associated with improper army contracts.

Making it clear that their conduct had been of a character he could and would not sanction, the prime minister made a full, frank statement of every matter involved in the investigation continuously prosecuted in the public accounts committee by the government during the past month.

Then, having set his house in order the premier laid down the rule which is to guide the government in the expenditure of every dollar of the last war appropriation of one hundred millions, and announced the appointment of a commission, of Canadian business men to supervise the purchase of all future supplies for the purposes of war.

NEW STANDARD SET

It was a splendid role which the prime minister of Canada played in parliament so promptly. There was a touch of tragedy and much of greatness in it. Seldom has it been given to any public man to transform an unpleasant task into a glorious opportunity as did Sir Robert Borden.

"I have a disagreeable duty to perform," he told the House simply. "It is one of the penalties one must pay for high place in public life. But it is a duty which I must and will discharge." And discharge it he did and in the doing set a new standard in the national affairs of the Dominion, marked a new epoch in public life in this country.

YEAR IN ADVANCE

In making a statement in regard to the report of the public accounts committee at the opening of the house in the morning, Sir Robert Borden said that the committee had considered matters a year in advance of the time when, under ordinary circumstances, these matters would have come under the consideration of the country. He said had been open to the government in connection with the investigation of war contracts, one to rely on technical considerations and declare that such matters should only be investigated in the usual way and at the time appointed by law. The other course, and the one the government had considered it correct to take was to open the door wide to the fullest and freest investigation. The government had decided it was its duty to investigate every case where whether frauds and irregularity had been practised on the people of Canada.

One could understand that if any matters were brought forth, even though they might be only of a trifling character, the mail fault would be their great exaggeration and the exciting thereby to the public mind of suspicions which might not be justified by the actual facts. However, consideration of that kind should not weigh with any government, and had not with this one. The prime minister's direction to members of the government engaged in the work of the public accounts committee had been to permit all inquiry desired by members on the other side of the house or which it was necessary to thoroughly. This had been done.

A DIFFERENT COURSE

This had not, however, said Sir Robert, been the course adopted by the late government in its three years of office. From the time of the refusal of an inquiry into the important matters connected with the Yukon in 1902 till the last refusal to investigate even more important matters of greater moment in connection with the National Transcontinental Railway, there had appeared to be a disposition to restrict inquiry and investigation to their narrowest possible compass. He referred to a resolution moved by Mr. Blain of Peel in 1908 for the right of appeal to the house from any action of the majority of the public accounts committee. This had been refused. Even in the committee itself inquiry had been restricted, as he evidenced by another instance where the refusal of a witness to answer a question and his dismissal, the government had been upheld by the majority in the committee and afterwards by the house itself.

WIDE OPEN INQUIRY

Sir Robert said that in connection with contracts for the purposes of this war he had spoken to the minister of customs in the presence of the minister of militia, who had heartily seconded the proposal, and had stated he wanted the widest possible scope to be given the inquiry and that restitution should be made or prosecution be taken where wrong-doing was found. This had been the course adopted by the minister of customs in the public accounts committee, as had been admitted by Messrs. Carvell and Kyte, Liberal members, themselves.

EARLY IN THE WAR

The prime minister then pointed out that every one of the matters upon which the committee had reported had taken place during the first six weeks of the war, where there was the greatest possible stress and urgency, and it could not be expected that attention could be paid to the safeguarding of the public interest which was undoubtedly given later.

THE POWELL CASE

Sir Robert then turned to the Powell case. A rush order had been given to Powell, a young clerk in the employ of the Carleton Drug Company, in August last. The premier referred to the evidence given by Mr. Shaver before the committee, that he had been informed by Col. Carleton Jones, now General Jones, that the government did not desire to purchase directly from the manufacturers and producers but had decided to employ the services of middlemen. The evidence given by the deputy minister of militia, by the director of contracts and other officers of the militia department, all of whom were reputable men and ineligible appointees of the late government, had been in contradiction of this statement. If General Jones had said anything of the kind then his conduct must be called into question by this government and if not able to deny satisfactorily that he had ever used such language then he was no longer fit to hold his position. In the meantime the prime minister did him the credit to believe that he had never uttered anything of the kind.

Returning to the Powell contract, the prime minister said the transaction undoubtedly presented features of a very unsatisfactory character, something which he admitted at once.

JUST TREATMENT

He did not propose either, to shield anyone, liberal or Conservative, but to mete out just treatment to everyone concerned. Powell had been a very young man, whose salary was $75 per month and whose duties were exacting. He had been enabled to make a profit exactly by means of which in a few weeks he had received a profit of $9,000, equivalent to ten years' salary. A portion of this profit has been through the vigilance of the director of contracts, withheld and a further sum of $6,200 had been retained after a motion by the minister of customs recommended that the whole matter be submitted to the justice department. Any further investigation possible would be made by the Department of Justice.

BINOCULAR PURCHASE

The prime minister then turned to the purchase of binoculars and read the report of the committee to the House stating that a number of such glasses of poor quality had escaped inspection as a result of misrepresentation and inadequate inspection. The cost of the whole matter was that 1st out of 2,175 glasses of inferior quality not worth the money paid for them had been bought.

MR. BIRKETT'S REQUEST

In this connection, however, the prime minister thought it only fair to read a letter which he had received the previous day from Mr. T. M. Birkett, Junior, of Ottawa. He read the letter, which asked fullest investigation at the earliest moment of the writer's transactions with the P. W. Ellis company of Winnipeg, and promised amends if any were necessary. This seemed a fair and manly letter, said the premier, and he wished it understood that the government, while it would see that not a moment's delay occurred in uncovering any fraud practiced on the people, would give every opportunity for investigation to everyone concerned.

FULLEST INQUIRY

"I have only now to announce," continued the prime minister, "to Parliament and the country that we propose to give through the department of justice the fullest and most searching inquiry which can be devised. If men's characters had been improperly impugned they should be cleared; if there had been wrong doing there should be energetic steps to secure restitution and to punish the guilty. Sir Robert said it had been intimated with regard to the purchase of binoculars glasses they had been misrepresented and inadequate inspection. He had spoken of the method of dealing with the charges of misrepresentation. The inspection of the glasses had been entrusted with an official, who had been appointed by the former government. The minister of Militia had seen fit to suspend that official until the matter was cleared up.

HORSE PURCHASES

The prime minister then spoke of the purchase of 3,000 horses for the first contingent. The minister of Militia, he said, had found when he took office a system of purchasing horses under which the price paid by the department included the cost of the horses and also the expenses and remuneration of the buyer. He had decided that the same system should not be should be paid a fixed rate for remuneration and expenses and that the government should know how much each horse cost.

SYSTEM FOLLOWED

This was accomplished by giving a credit to persons in whom the government had confidence and allowed them to purchase. They appointed to pronounce on the soundness and age of the animals purchased, to issue checks to the vendors. Those persons were expected to endorse the checks so that the government would have a complete record of the amount paid in each transaction.

MR. FOSTER'S PART

"It seems," continued the prime minister, "that an honorable member of this house (Mr. A. DeWitt Foster), went to Col. Neale, the chief veterinary officer of the militia department, and urged that horses should be purchased in the Maritime Provinces. Col. Neale replied that the horses were all purchased in the Maritime Provinces. CANADIAN NO KNOWLEDGE

The prime minister declared that Mr. Foster was appointed a purchasing agent without the knowledge of members of the government. That, he said, he said, "certainly would have prevented it. The minister of militia knew nothing of it. He said that certainly would not have allowed a member of this house to act as a purchasing agent."

Mr. Foster was appointed by Col. Neale, and that there should be any misrepresentation that gentleman's actions had any influence in the appointment of purchasing agents, Sir Robert pointed out that the 3,000 agents to whom he had mentioned were Liberals. In justice to Mr. Foster it should be pointed out that the average cost of horses bought by Major Anderson was $225.70, by Messrs Crow and Thurston $186.50, by Messrs Macleod and Thurston $186.60, while the average cost of the animals secured by Mr. Foster had his associates was $170.52.

REGRETTABLE OCCURRENCE

"Apart altogether from any comment upon Col. Neale's action, Mr. Foster had discharged his duties," the Prime Minister asserted, "Col. Neale should not have appointed him and Mr. Foster should never have accepted the appointment." Col. Neale was now at the front and it was impossible to say whether or not he knew that Mr. Foster was a member of parliament. "If he did not," the premier, "it was a violation in saying that he showed no such discretion as an officer should display. I say it was a most unfortunate and regrettable thing that Mr. Foster should have accepted these duties—a most unfortunate and regrettable thing. Having undertaken to discharge the duties as purchasing agent it devolved upon the member of parliament above all others to see that a careful and scrupulous account was kept of every dollar of public money entrusted to him. And I regret to say that Mr. Foster's own evidence convinces me that he did not have regard to that duty in the way in which the government, parliament and the people of this country might have expected. It has been represented to me on Mr. Foster's behalf, that as in other purchases of horses and cattle, the mere production of the animals is a sufficient receipt. But I think that the committee will agree with me that no such procedure can be tolerated in purchases for the government of Canada. No vouchers have been produced and the whole business seems to have been treated in a most casual manner by the persons concerned.

CYNICAL WITNESSES

"I think some of the most cynical passages that were ever uttered in the presence of members of the Public Accounts committee have been uttered upon oath by some of the men who have been brought before that committee during the past month, and by men who did not hesitate to testify that they were defrauding the country, knew they were defrauding the country and rejoiced at the opportunity. (hear, hear) So far as those men are concerned I want to say two things. If the laws of this country permit the courts of justice to enforce restitution against them that restitution will be enforced; if the laws of this country permit the walls of the penitentiary to encircle them they will go there." (applause).

PROPER ACCOUNTING

"The duty of the government is to make the fullest and most determined investigation of the whole matter. The duty of the government is to see that there is a proper accounting for the $12,000. And the duty of the government will not stop there. The horses purchased elsewhere in the provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick seem to have been purchased at a higher rate than those of which I have been speaking. There shall be a thorough inquiry into those transactions."

THE EQUIPMENT TASK

Sir Robert alluded to the magnitude of the task of preparing a force of 25,000 men for the field. The first contingent was ready to go within six weeks after the declaration of war although its departure was delayed by the lack of transportation. In the equipping of that force there was necessarily some haste and some stress. After that stress was over Sir Adam Beck was appointed to purchase horses in Eastern Canada and the minister of Militia had appointed another man to safeguard the interests of the country in the west. Sir Robert felt that in spite of the public clamor and wild accusations the importance of the disclosures that very little had been brought out by six weeks of investigation before the public accounts committee.

THE RESULT OF INQUIRY

After a searching inquiry the net result shown had been that $6,200 had been overpaid to E. E. Powell in connection with his dray contract; that an estimated sum of $2,000 had been lost in the binocular contract; and an equal sum in the purchase of horses, as far has as had been shown in the evidence. This meant $12,000 out of the total war vote expended of $50,000,000 or one fortieth of one per cent., but if allowance were made for the $6,500 already restored the net amount of money improperly expended was found to be one eighteenth of one per cent. only.

THIS "POLITICIAN" FLED

The prime minister said that early in October last he had received from his notice the allegation that a certain agent had been forced to pay $500 as a political contribution in order to obtain an order from the militia department. He had ordered an investigation and as the investigation, he had been found that the person who alleged he had made the payment for political purposes had put the matter's money in his own pocket. A warrant was issued by him but he fled the country.

A PUBLIC WARNING

Sir Robert then issued a warning that if any man in Canada, Conservative or Liberal, compromised the Canada on the government, or was connected in any attempt, especially in connection with the war vote, to do so, he must remember that there were courts of justice in this country and that the power of the government in prosecuting for every man who undertook such a thing. However, said the prime minister, though there were unfortunately men in Canada who sought to make an undue profit in their dealings with the government in the sale of war supplies, there was satisfaction in that it was not a condition confined to Canada alone. He read from the London Times an article in which the writer expressed the suspicion that war votes in the Old Country were finding their way into the pockets of unscrupulous profit seekers.

MR. FOSTER'S CASE

The prime minister then came to a vital part of his remarks. "I have a duty to perform which is not an agreeable character but which must be discharged," he stated, speaking with great care and firmness. "It is one of the penalties one must pay who occupies a prominent position in life. In connection with the two members of Parliament to who I have already alluded it is my duty to say some things. I may say that I sent for Mr. DeWitt Foster and asked him as to his connection with the purchase of horses in Nova Scotia and why he had ever permitted himself to act as purchasing agent."

The premier then gave Mr. Foster's explanation of his action which was in brief, that he had considered the people of his own county of Kings, who had suffered as a result of the failure of the apple market some time before, should be in part compensated if possible by an opportunity to sell their horses to the government as remounts. He had finally accepted the duty of purchasing agents in this connection.

LACK OF VOUCHERS

"As far as Mr. Foster's connection with this matter is concerned," continued Sir Robert, "it should be remembered that he is a young man, inexperienced in business and that it has not been shown that he personally profited. But I am bound to say that his explanation—if it can be called explanation—of his failure to properly supervise the expenditure of government money, must be regarded as far from satisfactory."

MR. GARLAND'S CASE

"As far as the member for Carleton is concerned, Mr. Garland, it has been shown, was the owner of the business conducted by the Carleton Drug Company. He had a young man in his employ, whom he not only permitted, but encouraged to make a contract with the government under which, in a few weeks, he acquired a profit of $9,000. I cannot give my sanction to conduct of that character because it is bound to arouse very grave suspicion and a member of parliament in connection with government contracts, should always keep himself above suspicion.

GRAVE DISAPPROVAL

"I feel I owe it as a duty to the government of which I am the head, to the party of which is Federal affairs I am the leader, and to this House and country, to express my very grave disapproval of the conduct of the gentleman in the matters under investigation by the Public Accounts committee."

SUPERVISING COMMISSION

The prime minister's tone then lightened and the House, which had sympathized with him in the painful portion of his speech through which, with evident feeling he had been laboring had just taken his way, listened with relief to his outline of the measures which the government is prepared to take in future for the proper supervision of the issue of all war contracts. Sir Robert announced that a commission of either one or three of the best business men available in Canada for the purpose would be selected without regard to any consideration at all except those of ripe experience, high character and expert interests, that there would be confined to them the full direction and control of all supplies purchased under the appropriation of $100,000,000.

THE FINAL DUTY

"The people of this country have nobly done their duty in the present crisis and so has parliament," concluded Sir Robert. "It remains for the government so to do its duty in regard to the expenditure of the one hundred millions of war vote that we may be able, at another session of parliament to give an account of our stewardship which shall command not only to parliament, but to the people of this country from the Atlantic to the Pacific."

The Old World Seen by Camera

Interesting Lecture at Holloway St. Church, By Rev. A. R. Sanderson—Attractive Illustrations

Holloway Street Methodist Church last evening was the scene of a very instructive and interesting lecture on "The Old World." Rev. A. R. Sanderson fluently and explicitly explained the accompanying illustrations to the audience which, though not exceptionally large was appreciative.

Mr. Sanderson happened to be in Germany when war was declared, and incidentally had many interesting incidents at his command.

Among the many beautiful scenes of England, Switzerland, Germany and Belgium shown, were Westminster Cologne Cathedral, Antwerp, before and after the seige; moonlight scene of "Eight Bridges," in Paris, St. Paul's Cathedral, London, and a number of German and Swiss Alps, attracted special attention.

Mr. Sanderson gave one incident which occurred when his party was leaving Gerrnany. The Germans and the Germans had their rear guards up with barely 40 rods between them, guarding the frontiers. The Germans saw these cross to Swiss soil and carried them, but as war had not been declared, the English party was not liberated. The Swiss received them with open arms.

The splendid assortment of views, included some illustrations of trench life and modern warfare, and last, but not least were pictures of Queen Alexandra, Queen Mary, King Edward, King Albert of Belgium, the Czar of Russia and others.

At the conclusion, a hearty vote of thanks was given to Mr. Nurse and Mr. Minns for operating the lantern, and also to Mr. Sanderson.

GIRL LIFE IN TUNIS

Sold Into Slavery Usually if, Not Married at Fourteen

Life in the bazaar-lined streets of Tunis is almost indescribable, so wonderful is the wealth of color and so picturesque the throngs that pass and repass the tiny shops without front walls, in which the merchants sit cross-legged, smiling and bargaining. But more interesting than any other feature are the Arab kiddies who occupy the first row in the story teller's circle, crowd around the snake-charmer and in every way evidence the amiable curiosity and adorable faith in humanity typical of children the world over. They are a happy, carefree lot, these handsome, cinnamon-brown youngsters with their black or brown eyes—large and snapping white teeth and dark, heavy hair. If they get a square meal a day nothing else seems to matter.

An Arab girl's careefree life is cut short at a pitiable early age. It is not thought necessary for her to go to school, and unless her family is well-enough off to afford slaves, she must begin, when 8 or 9 years old, to carry water and to learn to grind wheat and knead bread. The grinding is very hard work and only grain enough for one meal is prepared at a time. Arab girls marry at 14 and those who do not marry are nearly always sold as slaves by their parents for sheep, camels or mules. Arab boys, unlike the girls who are absolutely without "book learning" attend school for a few years.

Like the little Arab lads and lassies, who up to a certain time know the joy of living, the children of wealthy Tunisians live a carefree existence. They are beautifully dressed, have slaves to wait upon them, and as they grow older usually become indolent and indifferent, especially the girls.

BELLEVILLE

A movement is on foot to provide a regimental fund for the 39th Battalion by of a sum of not less than $10,000, to cover the cost of purchase of field kitchens, musical instruments and other necessary articles of equipment, not provided by the Government. It has been decided to appeal to the different cities, county townships and other municipal bodies throughout Eastern Ontario, as well as to the generosity of private citizens and societies. The Battalion is now at full strength, numbering over 1000 men of all ranks and has representatives from practically every city, village and municipality in its ranks. Send your subscription to the officer commanding 39th Battalion, Belleville who will gladly acknowledge any amount.

The parents of the late Private Harold Nicholls, who died last week, and was buried on Saturday last at Peterborough, with full military honors, have received a letter from the men of D company, in which they convey the deepest sympathy in their recent loss of a son, who was a general favorite in the company.

Lt.-Col. Smart was the recipient of warm congratulations on his discharge from hospital, where he has been for the last week, and the Battalion hope soon to see him on parade again.

The musical instruments for the band have now arrived, and soon Belleville will hear the enlivening music of a full military brass band. Practice has already commenced, and in a few days the band will be ready for duty.

The men of the Battalion are evidently very voluminous writers, as they are using over 500 sheets of notepaper a day, which is supplied gratis by the Y.M.C.A. Mr. Macqueen, who is in charge of the tent, provided by the Y.M.C.A. is looking well after the interest of the troops. Magazines, papers, etc., are provided for the men free of charge. Application has been made to the militia authorities at Ottawa for a special course for nurses who are going overseas. It is not known yet whether permission will be given for this course.

There are now 62 men enlisted in the renovated depot corps at Tete de Pont barracks, and it was expected by last evening the corps will be recruited to its required strength of 76 men, in a few days they will leave for the coast.

Regimental Sergt.-Maj. Smith, who goes to England with the remount depot, is a member of the Kingston Veterans' Association and is fourth one from the local veterans to volunteer for another campaign overseas. R.S.M. Smith served in South Africa and is a very capable instructor. For some time he has been the caretaker at the Cartwright home, "The Maples."

Again Demo Rumor is busy in military circles in connection with command of the 4th Brigade Second Overseas Force, which is now held by Col. Septimus Denison. It is said that Col. Denison will not go over overseas and that the brigade will be commanded by Colonel John Hughes. Col. John Hughes is a very capable and efficient officer and it is said that if Colonel Denison can't go, Colonel John Hughes will be very acceptable to the whole brigade.

An Enjoyable Afternoon

On Friday, April 16th, in the Assembly Hall of Queen Victoria School, a very enjoyable afternoon was spent under the auspices of Queen Victoria Girls' Canadian Club.

After an appetizing banquet, served by the refreshment committee, the president, Miss Jean Kerr, made a short speech, which showed great ability on her part. The minutes of the last meeting were then read by the secretary, Miss Jean Evans, after which Mrs. Marshall, vice president of the High School committee. We were then favored with a chorus from the primary class which met with great applause. The president then called upon Mr. C. M. Reid, who gave a very interesting address entitled "Bees", which was very much enjoyed by all. After a few words from the principal the meeting closed with the singing of the National Anthem.

The Daylight Saving Proposition

The following is a synopsis of a communication received today by Mayor Panter from the City Clerk of Kingston:—

Mayor of the City of Belleville.

Dear Sir,—Inasmuch as public opinion is growing intensely strong, in favor of "The Daylight Saving Proposition,"

And inasmuch as the Province of Ontario is the principal Province of the Dominion of Canada is should be dealt with regard to this question and lead in it, although some of the western cities are taking the matter up and adopting it, because of its influential standing in the Dominion should set the pace;

And inasmuch as Great Britain is at present passing on such a measure;

Therefore, it is expedient and advisable that the principal cities in Ontario, through the medium of their City Councils, should take the matter up and pass a measure through petitioning the Provincial Legislature to pass a statute entering all the public clocks in Ontario to be advanced one hour, the date to commence, say, from the 1st of May or June and end the 1st of November, which would mean changing the time from Eastern time to Standard time for these months only.

The following resolution in reference to the matter was submitted:

That the Council of the corporation of the city of ——— petition the Local Legislature to pass an Act at its next session by which the working day shall begin an hour earlier and end an hour earlier than at present, this result being brought about by advancing the hands of all clocks one hour from the 1st of May to the 1st of November, and thus securing an additional hour of daylight during the afternoon.

Turkish passengers or members of the crews would be removed from any vessel calling at a Canadian port and held as prisoners of war.

If ex-President Huerta succeeds in getting out of New York with his fortune intact most of us will concede that he is a great diplomat.

War Scenes At St. Andrews Church

Exceedingly Interesting Topic is Admirably Discussed by Rev. C. C. Smith

Rev. C. C. Smith of the Baptist Church gave an address last night on the scenes and current events of the war, in the schoolroom of St. Andrews Church. The address was illustrated by 100 views thrown upon the screen by the new steroptican, recently installed by the church. The pictures represented every phase of the great war, since its outbreak nearly nine months ago. They also showed many of the mechanical details and appliances used in the war, such as motor buses, airships, bomb-dropping submarines, torpedoes, floating mines, dreadnoughts, cruisers, destroyers, super-dreadnoughts, long toms and periscopes. The pictures included the burial scenes of Lord Roberts at Ascot and in St. Paul's Cathedral; the hero of Jenaphes, showing how Lance Corporal Jarvis won the V.C.; Scarboro scenes, showing the havoc wrought in "The Queen of England's watering places," by the Modfrn Hun, and baby killers; photos of the King and Queen, Kitchener, French Joffre, Jellicoe, Beatie, President Poincare, King Albert, Winston Churchill, and the Kaiser were also shown. Many actual war scenes by land and sea and on the firing lines were shown, giving the audience a vivid conception of the hard-ships and sacrifices our brave armies of the Allies are enduring in order to defend our shores and to defeat and crush forever this war-mad spirit of the military party in Germany, who were drunk with the poisonous teachings of Hismark, Nietzsche, Regel, and Bernhardi. Mr. Smith paid a high tribute to the Canadian Contingents on the firing lines, who are at the very forefront in Flanders, and whose devotion to their duty has called forth repeated praise from Lord Kitchener and the generals of the Allies. He referred also to the splendid work of the British fleet in every part of the high seas, and quoted a recent despatch, which declared that it is easy to forget the magnitude of the British fleet's influence because its greatest achievements are as silent as they are crushing. But in all naval history there has been nothing comparable with the ascendancy which the British Fleet has established on the high seas of the world today. The speaker referred also to the frequent letters appearing in our local daily papers from our own Belleville boys, and how these messages link us vitally to them, and to their parents—whose hearts and homes realize—in the vacant chairs and missing faces—the prophecy of old "Yea a sword shall pierce through thine own souls also, that the thoughts of many hearts may be revealed." Reference was made to the splendid showing of the Ghurkas, Sikhs, and other Indian soldiers in the trenches and on the firing lines, and to the fact that the majority of their officers are the products of Christian Missions. Years ago the Indian Empire—in the language of Bishop Heper—called the British Empire to deliver, "Their land is the land of the Morning" and now the British Empire is calling them to help her deliver Belgium and Europe from Prussian chain, and they are responding nobly. During the evening Mrs. Allen and Miss Sharpe rendered solos, with chorus accompaniment. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered the speaker.

Licenses Granted Hotels, Shops and Clubs

A meeting of the License Commissioners for West Hastings was held in this city yesterday afternoon for the purpose of considering the granting of liquor licenses for the city for the ensuing year. The result of the meeting was that licenses were granted to the 14 hotels, three shops and the Belleville Club. The hotels granted license were as follows:

Doctors, International, Kyle House, Albion House, Hastings House, Capital Hotel, City Hotel, Anglo American, Victoria House, Queen's Hotel, Dominion House, Quinte Hotel, Ferry House and Windsor Hotel.

Shop licenses were granted to Messrs. Wallbridge & Clarke, W. Hallen and Mr. Thompson. The Board also decided to grant a license to the Belleville Club.

At a subsequent date the commissioners will meet at Trenton to consider and grant licenses to the applicants in that town.

EDITOR COMMITTED FOR TRIAL FOR LIBEL.

Mr. Thomas Gowans, Editor and Publisher of the Uxbridge Journal, has got himself into trouble, and will have to stand trial for publishing a defamatory libel preferred against him by Major Sam Sharpe, M.P., for North Ontario. The libel complained of was the publication of the following articles:

"The Wall Street Journal prints a story, evidently supplied that journal of six hundred officers flunking after enlisting in the first contingent. Well Diesel is wrong this time. There was only one officer who flunked and run home, and that was the member for North Ontario, and he got as far as Hot Springs, under the Stars and Stripes."

This was published on April 1st, and forms the basis of the first charge. Again on April 8 the following appeared in the Journal, under the caption, "Notes and Comments":

"Why should he run from Valentine? Oh, goodness, he had a pass."

"Major S. Sharpe, reputedly LL.B., says he will run from Valentine's only took the fastest train."

This the Major resented and entered an action for slander, which, after a preliminary hearing by a Magistrate, resulted in the commitment of Gowans for trial at the next assizes. Accused was admitted to bail in a bond for $1,000 on his own bond, and $1,000 bond by a friend. On being committed Gowans told the Magistrate he had nothing to say, and defence offered no objection to a commitment on the second charge, relating to the paragraph published on April 8.

Editors and Publishers must be careful how they accuse Volunteers of being cowards, for such is the deduction to be drawn from the published attack upon the Major.

SIR ROBERT BORDEN'S CONDEMNATION OF GRAFTERS.

In today's issue of The Intelligencer will be found the full text of Sir Robert Borden's closing speech of the Session in which he deals fully with the question of those who took advantage of the war's opportunity in dealing with the Government to fill their own pockets. The gratifying feature in the Premier's position, is that he spared no members of Parliament of his own political supporters who had been grafting, or attempting to graft, but read them unceremoniously out of the party. It is well that Canada has such a Premier.

Every honest man will echo the sentiment of the Toronto News, in which it says: "Sir Robert Borden has torn the strangling hands of "the grafter and the middleman "from the throat of Canada. The "Dominion has waited long for the "appearance of a public man with "the courage to put the welfare of "the country above every other consideration. Now that she has discovered him, she is not likely to "relinquish his task for many years "to come."

The speech is commended to every reader who takes an interest in the proper governing of the country.

CURRENT COMMENT

Th. Roosevelt will alienate some of his female supporters if he continues to write such sharp letters about peace movements.

Austria's proposal to execute army contract grafters is inclined to be drastic, but it will likely prove an effective deterrent.

With his speedometer registering 55 miles, the New York lawyer found dead beside his wrecked auto might actually be classed as a scorcher.

That motion-picture play which is so offensive to negroes caused a small riot in Boston on Saturday. If it comes to Buffalo, it should be carefully scrutinized before being licensed.

The great war may not end so soon as some optimists anticipate, but it is safe to say that long after it is ended the courts of the United States will still be discussing Harry Thaw's mental condition.

There have been several instances lately of Canadians passing out well over the country mark; but, unacceptably, details are lacking as to whether they did or did not use liquor and tobacco.

The Central Federated unions of New York have adopted resolutions calling on President Wilson to summon a congress of neutral nations to end the war. It is easy to do these things by resolutions.

The Grand Duke Nicholas may have been wounded by General Sievers, but, if so, he appears to have left a competent substitute in command of the Russian armies. At least there has been no noticeable change in the skill with which they have been managed.

London Advertiser: "The golden grain will make Canada for many years to come a desirable land to live in. It will aid the courageous fighters to succeed in the present war, and will go far in line with the silver lining Lloyd George spoke of, that will eventually win peace for the British Empire and its allies.

Toronto Telegram: "Toronto cannot be truthfully described as a lightly taxed community when the rates of the last dozen years have doomed the occupants of a small dwelling to pay $4, $5 or $6 per month taxes for the privilege of living in his own house. Toronto's property is burdened with subsidies with schemes that ensured a high tax rate."

New York World: "Less than two years ago a Krupp employee of importance and several officers of the German army were convicted in German courts of giving and receiving bribes in the interest of gun armaments, and it was proved that agents of the Krupps, not only of guns but of guns, had with money treasonably inflicted the war spirit in France."

Toronto Telegram: "Canadians have learned to suffer fools gladly and therefore cannot be affronted by the suggestion that the present unique lucks continuity and that their country is separated from the United States by only a hair line." The Mayor of Atlanta is evidently not a representative American, and probably like one of the fools this country has to suffer."

Hamilton Spectator: "As entirely new era now opens before the liquor business of this province in its relations with the organized public. Even the slightest connection between that business and the word "politics" has become a thing of the past. It will henceforth stand strictly on its own merits. All interested in the cause of social reform will hail the advent of temperance as the greatest single step in the path of their desires that has been taken for many a day.

Allied Warships Take No Chances

Holding up all Outgoing and Incoming Steamers Near Virginia Capes

NORFOLK, Va., April 19.—No longer can the watchful allied warships off the Virginia Capes be charged with being asleep at the post of duty and if another German raider from the high seas attempts to make the haven of Hampton Roads, it will have to be even more cunning in seamanship and endowed with greater luck than the Renegade Wilhelm.

The guarding warships are taking no chances this time and night and day are holding up all outgoing and incoming steamers, except the well-known liners making regular scheduled trips to the dual ports of the roads.

An incoming cleaner commander today reported that they had been halted by these foreign warships when within four or five miles from the Capes and closely scrutinized before being allowed to continue in. It is also stated that all outgoing steamers have been subject to the same close observation. Beach resident report that at night the warships draw in much closer to the shore and keep their searchlights continuously going. Four of these foreign ships are still guarding the Capes and today thousands visited the beach resorts in order to catch glimpses of the ships. Two were said to be visible at times during the day.

It is admitted today that Captain Thierfelder's request for extra provisions regarding the Wilhelm is due to the receipt of letters threatening and warning him that the German raider is in danger of being blown up with a bomb. Some of these letters are vindictive while others seem to be friendly, advising that Captain Thierfelder and his crew be on their guard and warning him that he is surrounded by the spies of the enemy. All approaches to the pier of the Wilhelm are closely guarded by artillery men, while the main gateway is the position of vantage occupied by a machine-gun and its operating squad. The United States naval tug Rocket blocks the entrance to the Elizabeth River and at night two naval launches, one of which is equipped with a small rapid-fire gun, patrol the waters leading to the pier.

HUNS WILL SOON BE SWIMMING THE RHINE

Mr. J. McIntosh, of Kingston, has received a letter from his son, Edward, who is at present in the Royal Welsh Fusiliers Ambulance Motor Transport. The writer says that everything is going right and that soon the Huns will be swimming the Rhine. Continuing, he says:

"We have been rushed by aeroplanes three times in eight days. They have not got a car yet, but killed some civilians and damaged property a little. The German troops now have so often fought against and with, are about the best men outside the Canucks in France.

"The Salonica boys have been and are now under fire and have trimmed the Germans on every occasion. They are chafing under the restraint as they want to dash ahead but wiser heads prevail. Captain George Richardson is doing great work. One of his men described him the other day as having his 'whole heart and soul in the game.' There is no doubt that the Second Contingent, as you can lose a whole can by a good fight these days."

Made in Germany Goods Replaced

OTTAWA, April 19.—An evidence of how the Canadian manufacturer is taking advantage of the war to boost his products into the position held by German made goods is shown at the Customs office where a traveller who last year at this time filled the sample room with goods stamped "Made in Germany" is carrying an equal quantity of home made articles.

This traveller bought with him 25 trunks of samples a year ago. This year he brings only one less. The bulk left at home was used to carry manufactured goods to Austria. The clerks were used to carry toys, novelties and other lines that have made Germany famous. On this trip the commercial man has found himself just as good and he is carrying an equal amount of samples, but they are not made in Germany.

The Canadian manufacturers have duplicated the products of the German industries to such an extent that they have been able to satisfy their customers and keep the trunks of their representatives filled with goods of saleable articles. This is a line in which a big falling off in business might be expected, but to date this has not occurred.

Canadians have not entirely dispensed with luxuries during the war, men who travel for these lines assert. One candy traveller announces a 40 per cent. increase in sales over last year.

Fortify Straits Against Russians

Bosphorous Being Prepared by the Turks to Rppel Land Attacks

LONDON, April 19.—"The Turks are erecting wire entanglements and making other preparations on both sides of the Bosphorus against a land attack in case the Russians renew their assault upon the Bosphorus," says The Daily Mail's Odessa correspondent. "A railway is being pushed along the coast for the purpose of carrying guns from place to place as they are needed."

GILLETT'S LYE EATS DIRT

Defeat Would Mean End of The Empire

Ven. Archdeacon Cody, of Toronto, Shows Different Positions of Great Britain

TORONTO, April 19.—Speaking on the war recently before the Engineers' Club of Toronto, the Ven. Archdeacon Cody pointed out the different Britain's position differed from that of either France or Russia in the European struggle. The latter nations might easily survive defeat at the hands of Germany. France already had done so once on occasion. But with Great Britain it was different. For her defeat would mean the end. It would mean the breaking-up of the Empire. What would be more natural than that Germany, having vanquished Great Britain, should at once turn to Canada, which is a beautiful plum for the greatest overseas colony in the world? What protection could the United States afford against a power able to vanquish. The Monroe doctrine would be mere gossamer than the mental "scrap of paper," Dr. Cody declared with a stirring rallycall to the flag.

Allies' Troops Near Dardanelles

Thirty-Five Thousand Leave Lemnos Island on the Way There

BERLIN, April 19.—A celebgram received here from Athens says that mechanical artillery experts of the Creusot Mutiro, on Lemnos Island, in the Aegean Sea, off the entrance to the Dardanelle straits. All the French troops on the Island, with the exception of some ten battalions, have been sent away on transports. A total of 35,000 French and British troops have been landed at Mudros during Wednesday and Thursday of last week.

It is reported, the Athens despatch says, in conclusion, that the operations against the Dardanelles are about to be resumed.

Deny Pope Makes Peace Suggestions

ROME, April 19.—The Corriere d'Italia, in an article inspired by the Vatican, contradicts the statement in the London Daily Mail sent by a Petrograd correspondent, that peace suggestions of the Pope have come from the Pope at the instance of private persons in Austria-Hungary.

According to the article published in the London paper, the Pope has communicated on sealed wineber, if Austria were willing, Russia would enter into a negotiations with a view to peace. The Corriere d'Italia says:

"No pontifical act would serve as the best foundation for such a statement, which must be rejected."

The Giornale d'Italia says Emperor Francis Joseph and Pope Benedict XV. have always been on the best of terms through special courtesy, the contents of which are kept strictly secret.

UNCLE SAM SMILES AND GATHERS GOLD

Concern Felt at Gold Leaving the Old Continent for the New

ROME, April 19.—The Giornale d'Italia in a review of the financial situation of Europe expresses anxiety at the exodus of gold from the old to the new continent. It points out that owing to the enormous excess of exportations from the U. S. since the war, that country from being a debtor has become a creditor of Europe, and the Pope has been obliged to pay the U.S. enormous sums annually, as everything now imported from that country is especially food supplies, arms and munitions, must be paid for in cash.

SPENT $14,000,000 TO FORTIFY VIENNA

LONDON, April 19.—A reliable person, who has just arrived from Austria and Hungary," says The Times-Bucharest correspondent, "declares that Vienna is now practically strongly fortified. On the left bank of the Danube Vienna is protected by four lines of trenches, and by heavily barbed wire entanglements. Fourteen million dollars have been spent on fortifications."

ASTRAKHAN SKINS.

Treatment They Undergo Before They Are Parted for Market.

The big season's catch in the Kaiserad and Arabs, bring immense flocks to their each spring and send them to the Shiraz market. These Russian dealers pay large sums in advance to obtain everything from the Ghiljaks, who often deliver as many as 40,000 or 50,000 skins at one time. Before these lamb skins are ready to be packed in bales they undergo a very careful and lengthy preparation to preserve them. All brave Persia in a salted state. The actual tanning being done in Europe.

The preliminary cleaning of the lambskin or astrakhan is done in running water to get rid of impurities on the fleshy side of the skins, which are scraped with long, blunt edged knives. The next step in tanning, which is done in large tanks or earthen vessels capable of holding 200 to 500 skins each. The skins remain in pickle some two to three days and are then taken out one by one and spread on a table, where they are once more carefully examined and scraped.

This finished, they are spread out in the sun to dry for twelve hours or so, by which time they are somewhat, but very dirty, for flour, salt and water have formed a paste and the fine curls are all stuck together and full of lumps. To get rid of these the skins are once more washed in running water. They are next thoroughly rinsed, well shaken and placed woolly side down on the sun warmed pebbles of the river bed, where they have time to dry hard they are sprinkled all over with a thin coating of fine barley flour.

At sunset they are rolled up and left all night. Next morning each skin is stamped with its quality mark, and then all are carefully laid one wool against wool, and that round the legs with a red string. After this they are ready for making up into bales.—Wide World Magazine.

Woman's Work.

After dinner the other evening Mr and Mrs. Brown carried a basket full of their respective duties, and soon an argument as to whether the husband or the wife had the hardest work to perform was in full swing. Each drawn warbled and then wifey sang.

"A wife," argued the good lady, "has to cook, wash dishes, bathe the kids, scrub the floors, sweep the house, make the beds, mend the clothes, carry up coal, nail slats on the back fence, etc."

"Is that all?" sarcastically interrupted Mr. Brown.

"No," was the prompt rejoinder of Mrs. Brown, "in addition to those duties every wife must help her good husband from making a fool of him self."

Gen. Joffre's New Chauffeur.

A humorous story is now current that Gen. Joffre recently selected a new chauffeur, a reservist named Edmond Beaudoin from Paris, who assumed his conscript service as a naval mechanic. The former driver, Sergt. Hubert, the famous racing motorist, whose eagerness to gratify the generals fondness for speed caused him to take unnecessary risks. After one of particularly balm-breath escapes then, Joffre, without reproaching Hubert, calmly announced to his surprise of making a change, not owing to the latter's driving, but because Hubert's darting swerves kept him awake. He now sleeps peacefully through the hundred-mile rushes along the battle-front.

A Mind Reading Craze

By MARTHA V. MONROE

A mind reader had come to town and had given some astonishing public exhibitions. But this had not the effect on the bean monde of an exhibition he gave at the home of Mrs. MacGrinder, one of society's leaders. This private entertainment made him fashionable, and every young man who had shaken his brains down into his heels at cotillion parties and every young girl whose artificial manners and conserved beauty had given her the right to look down on her sisters who had the brains to take down the dictation of a scientific constructor or a merchant prince was talking about mind reading.

Pete Barstead and Lucy Wrighte were sitting together, she on a sofa, he in a chair opposite her. He was holding a stack of yarn on his hands which she was winding into a ball.

"I have heard," said Miss Wrighte, "that Mrs. Brown is very much displeased that Mrs. MacGruder got ahead of her by giving that mind reading exhibition at her house. You see, all society is talking about it. Of course it is pretty rare. MacGruder's event did to have introduced the matter."

"Did the mind reader find out who had the most mind?"

"I don't think that was his object. He told what people were thinking about."

"What were they thinking about?"

"What a question! Is wasn't that which was wonderful; it was that he could tell without knowing what they were thinking about."

"How could he tell what he didn't know?"

She lifted her big brown liquid eyes from a tangle in the yarn she was straightening out to his with a look of puzzled wonder.

"I didn't expect to say," she replied when she had given her brain time to work out an answer, "that he could tell what a person was thinking about without knowing it, but he didn't know it until—"

"He found it out," supplied Pete.

"No, not that either. The remarkable feature of his performance was the way he found it out."

"How did he do it?"

"How did he do it? Why, he did it by—" She was stalled again.

"Perhaps he knew by himself."

"That's it. He said he didn't know how he did it."

"What did he do?"

"He took Billy Perkins' hand and, blindfolded, led Billy to what he was thinking about. Then Mr. Horton wrote something on a piece of paper, folded it, put it in an envelope, put the envelope in a book, put the book on the top of the library, and then the—"

"Where did he put the library?"

"The library! He didn't put that anywhere. I was there and—"

"Well, then what happened?"

"The mind reader told what was written on the paper, though he had been blindfolded all the time."

"That's nothing remarkable. I'll bet I can tell what you're thinking about this minute."

"I don't believe you can do any such thing."

"Try me. Think of something, and I'll tell you what it is."

"Very well; I've thought of something."

"A pumpkin."

There was contempt in her expression as she looked at him and replied that she wasn't thinking of any such thing.

"Yes, you were. You were thinking of Tom Baxter. You couldn't think of him long without thinking of Tom Baxter's head. Tom Baxter's head is a pumpkin."

"How ridiculous!" But she did not smile. Indeed, she made the exclamation because she didn't quite grasp the logical conclusion.

"I'll tell you what you do," he proceeded, not caring for time to think it all out. "You fix your mind on something and I'll lead you to it."

She agreed to the selection of an object, then told him she was ready. He took her hand and led her to the piano.

"I didn't think of it at all," she said.

"I'll try again," he said, still holding her hand, and he led her to a clock on the mantle.

"Wrong again."

He led her to a tete-a-tete in the center of the room. She didn't say whether he was right or not, nor did he ask her. They sank into their respective seats on the tete-a-tete. He still held her hand.

"I can tell you what you are thinking about," he said.

"What?"

"Tom Baxter."

"I'm not."

"Me."

She did not reply to this. She lowered her eyes.

"And I can tell you" he went on, "what you think I'm thinking about."

"What?"

"Your thinking that I'm thinking that I—that I love you."

There was a great deal more of this intellectual conversation, but at this point it became what the world has heard very often, though it is a question if it ever persons. The mind reader had at least given a young man a reason for cause to propose.

But why he went so far out of his way to tell a simple truth that she wanted to hear only persons endowed with sentiment know, and they can't tell.

GOING MAD FROM THE TERRIFIC PAIN

Prominent Merchant Thinks His Life Was Saved By "Fruit-a-tives".

DAYDALE, ONT., JUNE 25th, 1913.

"I am a general storekeeper at the above address and on account of the great good I have experienced from using "Fruit-a-tives", I am recommending them to my customers. They were a great help to me, I can tell you. For about two years ago, I was laid up in bed with vomiting and a terrific pain in the base of my skull. The pain nearly drove me mad. Doctors feared I would lose my reason, owing to my brain, but I took "Fruit-a-tives" steadily until I was cured. I have gained fifteen pounds since taking "Fruit-a-tives", and I believe they saved me from a disastrous illness".

John Blunt's Infatuation

By ESTHER VANDEVEER

John Blunt, gentleman's valet by profession, but independent of a position, was going up to his room on the fourth floor of a tenement house when he noticed a shiny piece of coin on the floor before him. Seeing a figure in skirts ahead of him, he picked up the glove and, hastening on, asked the comely young woman he overtook if the glove belonged to her. She smilingly acknowledged that it did and thanked Mr. Blunt accordingly. Moreover, he noticed that he noticed a look of admiration in the young woman's eyes that was not surprising, for he was a good looking man.

"I aren't seen you in the building before," said Miss. "Are you here visiting?"

"Only a few days. Me and my mother have a couple o' rooms on the next floor above, but I'll not be 'ere long. I'm looking for a place."

"What kind of a place?"

"A lady's maid."

"Maybe I can help you to that. I'm a valley' myself when I'm at work and know a lot o' ladies that are."

"If you do, please let me know. I'm in No. 9 on the next floor above."

The very next day Mr. Blunt rapped on No. 9 and was admitted by an elderly woman, who called out "Russell!" and to some the young woman he had met the day before. He said he had called to get some information as to what wages she would expect and other items of like nature, but in reality he was dotting on Young Susan's acquaintance.

There was little answer to the lowly as well as among the swells, and Mr. Blunt was beat on an affair with the pretty lady's maid. He called often and his attentions appeared to be highly appreciated. Susan seemed a bit fond of finery and jewelry, and Mr. Blunt considered himself fortunate in being able to gratify her, especially in the matter of jewelry. He made her presents of a few inexpensive ornaments that did not seem to satisfy her. John found her very fascinating and in order to gain her good will purchased articles of greater value. Finally he found himself so deeply infatuated that he proposed marriage.

To his surprise Susan refused him. Nevertheless from time to time she gave him encouragement to hope that she might reconsider her refusal. She said that she had expensive tastes and was afraid that he would not be able to gratify them. She hinted at a suitor, a plumber, who had made a great deal of money, but she did not love him. Nevertheless she was thinking of marrying him because he could give her what she craved—jewels.

Upon this John shied off for awhile. Susan didn't seem to mind the change in his attentions to her a bit. Indeed, she seemed rather glad to have him met. One day she told him that she was in receipt of handsome presents from the plumber and she expected a proposal.

Soon after she had told John this he came to her one day with a brooch containing several large diamonds, telling her that he had just mastern a stockbroker, had given him a tip by which he had made a lot of money. He had spent a part of it for his beloved Susan.

Susan's eyes sparkled with pleasure at seeing the ornament. She put it on and admired it and herself in a mirror.

"You look fine in it, Susan," said her lover. "I'm so 'appy at my luck in making the money to buy it for you, seeing as 'ow now you needn't 'ave to get a yourself to the plumber."

But Susan did not quite accede to the proposition. John begged her to be his helpmate and agree to marry him, but she said that the expense of living was rising every day and she would not marry him unless a permanent income they would come to grief. She would rather remain single and be the lady's maid than be married and in poverty.

Then John did not despair, for her love for jewelry seemed to him to have been born in her, and his old master, the stockbroker, gave him another tip and he made more money. This time it was Susan's bracelet, a serpent with ruby eyes. Again Susan was delighted and seemed to warm; but, though on the verge of consenting, she did not consent.

One day John called to see his love when she was not at home. Her mother received him and said to him:

"If 'Arry sing'll I can for you, John, with Susan. Persevere and you'll win. It's the jewelry she delights in."

After this John became reckless in his gifts, and before long Susan possessed jewels enough to decorate a duchess.

One day when John called at No. 9 he received no response. He tried the door and found it locked. The same evening he tried it again with a like result. When a couple of days had passed and No. 9 was still locked John made up his mind that something was wrong. He disappeared himself.

Susan had returned to the home of a wealthy woman to whom she lived as her maid. A friend of this lady, who was wealthy, had valuable jewels and had suspected her son's valet. Averse to publicity, she would have arrested him without appealing to the police had not Susan, bearing of the affair from mistress, volunteered to make an attempt to whistle them out of the thief.

Susan was cleverly troubled, but the jewels were returned to their owner, and Susan was well rewarded.

Princess Mary, Daughter of King George of England.

© by American Press Association.

Since the European war broke out Princess Mary of England has been untiring in her efforts to aid the soldiers in France and their dependents at home. She was largely instrumental in gathering a fund before the holidays to purchase comforts for the men on the fighting line. Princess Mary, or May, as her brothers call her, is the pet of the royal family of England, although no longer a little girl. She will be eighteen next April and, of course, is quite grown up. The princess is the only daughter of King George V, and Queen Mary and has been brought up in quite an old fashioned way. She was taught to use and is said to be an expert at embroidery. She has also studied the preparation of food and during her vacations at Sandringham was initiated into the art of making cheese and other dairy products. Quite unusual accomplishments for a royal princess. But that is her mother's idea of bringing up a girl.

About Mythology.

In very ancient times the people believed in many gods. Jupiter was the king of all the gods, but he was very human. He had a wife, Juno by name, and they had a son called Vulcan. Vulcan was very strong, and he was the blacksmith of the gods.

It is said that when he was a child he displeased his father, and Jupiter in a rage hurled him from heaven to Olympus. This fall caused him to be lame, but he grew to be large and powerful. He forged thunderbolts for his father, and he built the magnificent palaces in which the gods lived on Olympus. For his mother, Juno, he built a golden throne and for the sun god, Apollo, he made a golden chariot, and all his works were very beautiful. Vulcan had servants who were called Cyclops. They were queer looking giants, each with but one eye, placed in the middle of his forehead.

Now, whenever you see a picture or a statue of Vulcan you see him with his tools about him, standing at his anvil, making a thunderbolt. He has many

AN INVALUABLE TREE.

Supplies Almost All of the Necessities of Life.

A traveler was journeying through these countries when the heat was a burning sun, where the freshness of shade is rare, and the habitations of man are found only at considerable distances from each other. Sinking with fatigue, the stranger at length traveler beheld a hut, surrounded by trees tall, straight stems, surmounted by a bunch of great leaves, some standing erect, others bending gracefully down gracefully, and presenting a beautiful and elegant appearance. Nothing else in sight indicated any cultivation.

Encouraged by this sight, the traveler made a last struggle, reached the hut, and was kindly received and rested under the hospitable roof.

Here his host offered him a slightly acid drink, which quenched his thirst and refreshed him. When the stranger had rested himself a little the Indian invited him to partake of a repast, and served different dishes on a brown platter, shining brightly and highly polished. The Indian offered also a wine possessing an extremely delicate flavor. Toward the end of the repast, he brought a quantity of excellent cocoanuts, and filled the glass of his guest with another kind of brandy.

"The traveler, in astonishment, asked the Indian how in the midst of this desert, he came by all these things.

"I get them from my cocoanut trees," answered the Indian. "The water which I gave you on your arrival was drawn from them. Before ere it had become ripe, and sometimes the nut would contain two pounds of it.

"This available nut is the fruit at its maturity; this milk, which you find so pleasant, is drawn from the same ripe fruit. This delicate cabbage is made from the top leaves of the tree; but we do not cut down for this, as the tree, when its top is blow cut off, does not grow.

"This wine, which pleases you so much, is also drawn from the cocoa. We make an incision in the tender flower stalks and the juice flows forth, which we gather into vessels, and which is known as palm wine. Exposed to the sun it becomes sour and turns into vinegar. When we distill it we obtain this excellent brandy which you have tasted. This sugar is also drawn from the cocoa, with the sugar which I needed for your refreshment. Finally, all these dishes and utensils which we are using on the table are made from the different parts of the cocoa tree.

"This is our all. My house, my

I owe to these invaluable trees. Their wood has enabled me to build my cabin, their leaves dried and interwoven, make the roof, and these same leaves, made into a parasol, protect me from the sun when I walk out. These same leaves which I weave and woven with the fiber thread got from the leaves. These sieves were ready made in the part of the tree from which the leaves spring, and these mats come from the same source. These baskets, sewed with the same, make sails for our ships. The coarse bale which covers the fruit used for calking ships, and it lasts forever and swells when exposed to the water. Cables, ropes and nets are all made of the same material. Finally the delicate oil with which many of these dishes were seasoned, and which burns in our lamps, is obtained by pressing the freshly gathered fruit.

"From the sawdust of the branches I have made this ink and from the leaves this parchment, which, formerly was exclusively used for public documents and records of important events."

Clearing For Action.

A graphic description of what clearing for action on a Dreadnought really means is furnished by a letter from a British blackjack on his mother. After detailing how on Aug. 2 they left a certain harbor with the band playing "The Girl I Left Behind Me," and how no sooner had they got out to sea than they had to clear for action, "We started throwing all wooden things overboard so as to make less risk of fire," he says. "Two pianos that just gone over and an organ. Chairs and tables follow after. It is just like throwing a gentleman's drawing-room into the sea. Sofas, bedsteads, everything that can be thrown over is going. We have thrown over about 50,000 worth of stuff."

Not Her Quarrel.

The fact that corporal punishment is discouraged in public schools is what led Harry's teacher to address this note to the lad's mother:

"I regret very much to have to inform you that your son Harry idles away his time. He disobeys rules, recisome and disturbs the pupils who are trying to study. Spanking will be a good whipping, and I strongly recommend that you give him one."

Mrs. Smith—Jones' wife—replied as follows:

"Dear Miss Arnold:—Lick him yourself. I ain't mad at him.—Yours truly, Mrs. Smith."

The Gallery's Comment.

"I went along to the Strand yesterday," a Londoner said, "behind an officer in uniform. Between the top of Arundel street and Charing Cross railway station he was saluted, and that quite a dozen times. Now, the thing is going on all over the town, and I have it on the authority of a colonel that it is considered by the commanding ranks as a beastly bore."

STORIES OF FLAGS

Origins of Some of the Emblems of European Nations.

THE TRICOLOR OF BELGIUM

It Was Originally the Standard of the City of Brabant, and Contains Colors of Austria and the Flags of Germany, France, England and Russia.

Prior to the Franco-Prussian war of 1870 the German empire was divided into more than a group of scattered states. When they combined into a single empire, however, three of the flags were combined in the resultant standard.

To be sure, the colors of Prussia—black and white—and the Prussian eagle enter very largely into it, but it must be remembered that this eagle became at that time the head and ruler of all the others. Besides the Prussian flag, there were those of the flags of East and West Prussia to be included. That of West Prussia was black, white, black, three stripes of equal diameter, running the length of the flag. That of East Prussia consisted of two such stripes, the upper black and the lower white. The "jack" of the imperial navy consists of three horizontal stripes, the upper black, the middle white and the lower red. The much prized Iron cross dating back to the end of the twelfth century) is in the center. The red stripe in the jack of the merchant ships of the empire, in which the tricolor (black, white, red) appears in the upper quarter, with the iron cross upon it, while the remaining three-quarters are white, is the royal arms in the center.

The flag of Austria is a very complex affair. To begin with, the various Austrian provinces have their own flags. Bohemia is red-white, Tyrol is white-red, Dalmatia is blue-yellow, Galicia is blue-red, Croatia is red-white-blue and Istria is yellow-white-blue. Then again, Austria-Hungary has a dual monarchy, both Austria and Hungary must be separately represented—and fully—on the flag. Consequently this combination was rendered more easy by the fact that portions of the flags of the two countries were alike the same. Thus, the Austrian flag was red-white-red, the Hungarian was red-white-green. Compromise was effected by dividing the lowest horizontal stripe in two, and having half red while the remainder was green. The arms of both countries also appear on the flag. This was decided upon March 6, 1850.

The imperial standard of the czar of all the Russias is of brilliant yellow, in the center of which is a large double headed black eagle. The flag dates from the year 1472, when Ivan the Third married Sophia, a niece of Constantine Palaeologus, and thence assumed the arms of the Greek empire. On the breast of the eagle is an escutcheon bearing on its red field in silver the figure of St. George slaying the dragon, the whole being encircled by the collar of the Order of St. Andrew, also in the displayed wings of the eagle are other shields bearing the arms of Kiev, Novgorod, Vladimir, Kazan, etc. The Russian eagle's jack is very similar to that of England, save that the principal crossbars are blue instead of red—this is the well known Russian war flag. The cross is that of St. Andrew, the patron saint of Russia.

The well known tricolor of France is made up of three stripes—blue, white and red—running not the length, but the width of the flag. It dates from the era of the French revolution and came into existence in 1790. It has been the national flag since, with but slight variations. In 1794 the strongest was also made the jack of the French navy.

The union jack of Great Britain is composed of the three flags of St. George, St. Patrick and St. Andrew. That of the first was a scarlet cross, dividing a white flag into four white squares; the white cross of St. Andrew, on a dark blue ground, from corner to corner diagonally, while the red cross of St. Patrick ran in the same direction. In the union jack the combined it will be found to be composed of three white crosses on a blue field. The flag was first suborned in 1801, on the union in that year of Great Britain (England, Scotland and Wales) and Ireland.

The flag of Belgium is composed of a tricolor—black, yellow and red—running up and down—that is, the width and not the length of the flag. The royal standard has the arms placed in the center of the yellow stripe. This was adopted as the national flag in 1831, being originally the colors of the duchy of Brabant.

From 1477 until 1506 Belgium belonged to Austria, but on the latter's date it fell into the hands of Spain. In 1795 and for some years following it was held by France, and in 1815 the Prince of Orange, but in 1830 the Belgians rose against the latter and established their independence. The flag which is now flown was then adopted.—Washington Post.

Household Hints.

To prevent glass dishes from cracking when pouring in a hot mixture place the dish on a tea towel.

A few drops of ammonia in the dish water will brighten the glass and silver.

Suet may be kept fresh by chopping roughly and sprinkling well with a little granulated sugar.

To prevent a tam-o'-shanter that has to be washed from shrinking dry it over a thinner dish.

To restore faded silks to their natural color immerse them in soapsuds to which a little pearl ash has been added.

Meat Loaf.

One pound and a half each of beef and lean pork. Remove the bone and gristle and run it through the meat chopper. Add one cupful each of cupfuls of breadcrumbs, three well-beaten eggs, one cupful of milk, a dessert teaspoonful of salt, one of ground sage and half a teaspoonful of pepper. Mix well together and place in a loaf tin. Cover with thin slices of fat pork and bake in a moderate oven for an hour and a half, basting often.

Lima Bean Puree.

Boil a pint of lima beans in salted boiling water. Add a tablespoonful of sugar; when soft put them through a sieve; make a thick white sauce with one tablespoonful of flour and one of butter and a cup of milk. Stir until smooth. When hot add a pint of chicken stock and then add the beans a little at a time, more stock, serve very hot.

To Remove Iron Rust.

Cream of tartar is said to be excellent for removing iron rust spots. Use a tablespoonful of cream of tartar to a tea quart of water and boil the article in the solution. This is said to have removed stains of iron rust and salt and even oxalic acid had failed to do so.

...DAY ... OF COURT

...Will you please to go upstairs," he said, "and when she is all in bed let me know. He looked for a little while at the fire, and then, without speaking with which to lacerate his fingernails. Well, she said rather sharply, "you needn't look so solemn about it. I'm not going to be killed by, should he called for me three or three times more." Promptly just then, should, thinking that I disliked it—looked as he could. "I'll be longer," shilling or no shilling."

"You needn't speak that rashness to me, master," he said gruffly.

"What' said the gentleman, looking up. "Why, I was surprised, and no wonder, at the tone of his voice.

"You mustn't speak like that to Miss McNeill, Court," repeated old Mrs. Jones roughly than before. "You are to understand she is not a common girl; but like yourself."

"Perhaps you'll excuse me," turned and looked at her just once, short and sharp, and I am told that his face was as red as hers when their eyes met. "I beg Miss McNeill's pardon—humbly," he said, taking off his hat grandly, yet as if he meant it too; "I was under a great misapprehension."

"After that you may believe they did not enjoy the row much. There was scarcely a word said by anyone until they came ashore again. The visitor, to the great joy of Peter, who was looking for a chance, gave him half a crown; and then walked away with the young lady, side by side with her, but very still and silent. However, just as they were parting, Peter could see that she said something, having her hat in his hand the while, and that Miss Peggy, after standing and listening, bowed as "grand as might be. Upon which they separated for that time.

"But two things came of this; first that everyone began to call her Miss McNeill, Court, which was not at all to the pleasure of the Llewellyn Evanses. And then that, whenever the gentleman, who was a painter lodging at Mr. Campbell's of the shop, would meet her, he would stop and say a few words, and more as the time went on. Presently there came some wet weather; and Mrs. Campbell borrowed for his use books from her, which had a little while; and, after he had sent for a box of books from London, and then the lending was on the other side. So it was not long before people began to see how things were, and to smile when the gentleman treated old Robert Evans at the Newgold Inn. The Newgold Inn, where he was out with them, would tack so that he might see the smoke of Court after Peggy, and that there was no more Peggy back" to be met, either rowing with Peter Rees or running with among the rocks, but a very pale young lady who yet did not seem to be unhappy.

"The old man was ailing in his limbs at last, but his mind was as clear as ever, and his grip of the land as tight. He could not bear, now that his sons were dead, that anyone should enter after him. He was thinking that he would be taking everyone for a holy-bird. Still the family went forward with presents and such like, and helped him perhaps about the farm; so that, though there was talk in the village, no one could say what will he would make.

"However, one day toward winter Peggy came in late from a walk, and found the old man very cross. 'Where have you been?' he cried angrily. Then without any warning. 'You have been gossiping with that fine gentleman from the shop!'

"'Well,' my lady replied, putting a brave face upon it, as was her way, 'and what then, grandfather? I am not ashamed of it.'

"'You ought to be!' he cried, banging his stick upon the floor. 'Do you think that he will marry you?'

"'Yes I do,' she replied stoutly. 'He has told you so today, I know.'

"Robert Evans laughed, but his laugh was not a pleasant one. 'You are right,' he said. 'I have told me. He was very forward to tell me. He thought I was going to leave you my money. But I am not! Mind you that, my girl.'

"'Very well,' she answered, white but real by time.

"'You will remember that you are no relation of mine?' he went on vi-ciously, for he had grown very crabbed of late. 'And I am not going to leave you money. He is after my money. He is nothing but a fortune hatcher.'

"He is not!' she exclaimed, as hot as fire, and began to put on her hat again.

"'Very well!' We shall see!' answered Robert Evans. 'Do you tell him what I say, and see if he will marry you. Go now, girl, and you need not come back! You will get nothing by staying here!' he cried, for what with his jealousy and the mention of money he was furious—'not a penny! You had better be off at once!'

"She did not answer for a minute or so, but she seemed to change her mind about going, for she laid down her hat, and went about the house place getting tea ready—and no doubt her fingers trembled a little over the old man cried, 'Well, why don't you go? You will get nothing by staying here!'

"'I shall stay to take care of you all the same,' she answered quietly. 'You must not be left alone, and then—and then I shall know whether you are right.'

"'Do you mean it?' asked he sharply, after looking at her in silence for a moment.

"'Yes,' said she.

"'Then it's a bargain!' cried Robert Evans—'it's a bargain! And he said not a word more about it, but took his tea from her, and talked of the Llewellyn Evanses, who had been to pay him a visit that day. It seemed, however, as if the matter had been settled; he had to be helped to bed, and complained a good deal neither of which things were used with him.

"Well, it is not unlikely that the young lady promised herself to tel her lover all about it next day, and looked to hear many times over from his own lips that it was not her money he wanted. But this was no to be, for early the next morning Owen Meade was at her door.

"'You are to get up, miss', she said. The master wants you to go to London by the first day train.'

"'To London!' cried Peggy, very much astonished. 'Is he ill? Is any one dead?'

"'No, answered the old woman very short. 'It is just that.'

"And when the girl, having dressed hastily, came down to Robert Evans' room, she found that this was pretty nearly all she was to learn. 'You will go to Miss Richard Evans, who lives at Islington,' he said, as if he had been thinking about it all night. 'She is my second cousin and will find house room for you and make no charge. A telegram shall be sent to her this morning. To-morrow you will set off, and I will give the address upon it, and the next day a packet will be returned to you, which you will bring back to me. I am not well to-day, and I want to have the matter settled and off my mind, Peggy.'

"She could not someone else go if you are not well?' she objected 'and I will stop and take care of you.'

"He grew very angry at that. 'Do as you are bidden, girl!' he said. 'I will see on the doctor to-day, and for the rest Gwen can do for me. I am well enough. Do you look to the papers. Richard Evans owes me money, and will make no charge for your journey.'

"So Miss Peggy had her breakfast and left a wonderfully short time, as it seemed to her, was on the road to London with plenty of leisure on her hands for thinking—very likely for thinking and fearing as well. She had not seen her sweetheart, that was one thing. She had been dispatched in a hurry, that was another. And then, to be sure, the big town was strange to her.

"However, nothing happened there. I may tell that. But on the third morning she received a short note from Gwen Meadoe, and suddenly began to make breakfast with a fork, and, her face very white. There was news in the letters—news which the whole neighborhood for miles round Court was by that time full of. Robert Evans, if you will believe it, was dead. After ailing for a few hours he had died, Gwen Meadoe told it smooth his pillow.

"It was late when she reached the nearest station to Court on the way back, and found a pony trap waited for her. She was stepping into it when Mr. Griffith Hughes, the lawyer, saw her, and came up to speak.

"'I am sorry to have had news for you, Miss McNeill,' he said in a low voice, for he was a kind man, 'and what with the shock of the long journey she was looking very pale.

"'Oh, yes!' she answered, with a sort of weary surprise: 'I know it already. That is why I am come home to Court, I mean.'

CAMPHOR'S TRAIL OF BLOOD.

The Cost in Human Lives For Gathering the Pungent Drug.

Every drop of camphor you use is estimated to have cost at least its weight in human blood. There are few things which demand a heavier toll of lives than this pungent drug, which is so widely used. Every bottle sets out of our clothes and for sale contains a number of tragedies.

The reason for this is that the most valuable parts of the island of Formosa, from which the world gets most of its camphor, are inhabited by head-hunting savages, whom the successive invaders of the island have been unable to subdue.

These savages are quite alive to the value of the camphor trees and forests, and oppose all attempts to get possession of them. Their hostility makes the gathering of camphor a most dangerous occupation, and one in which a loaded rifle is the most indispensable tool.

Since the Japanese took the island after their successful campaign against China in the nineties they have been carrying on a carefully conceived plan of gradual penetration of the valuable camphor regions. They have established a chain of military posts in the forests. At intervals of every 100 yards a guardhouse and every 500 yards a fort, connected by a wire entanglement and defended by barbed wire entanglements, are established. Behind this chain of defenses are the camphor factories, where the gum is distilled. Formosa contains about a million camphor trees, some 30,000 of which are cut down every year. At this rate the supply will be exhausted in a hundred years, but when the country is thoroughly pacified there is no doubt that the Japanese will see that reafforestation is properly undertaken and an inexhaustible supply insured.

The savages who are making so much trouble are estimated to number about 120,000, and a further twelve years, it is thought, be required to subdue them.—New York America.

War's Deathe Merely a Trifle.

The total population of the earth is about 1,800,000,000. Annually there are added to it 54,000,000 souls. Every year at least 80,000,000 are born and 90,000,000 or 100,000,000 die. This means a daily birth rate of almost 200,000, a death rate of 180,000. The daily increase in population is 40,000. In comparison with this irresistible arithmetic side what are the greatest battles, where destruction by almost mechanical people cripples? If we imagine that the power were given to some despot to order a wholesale slaughter and the guillotines were kept busy beheading people from every minute night and day this would only increase the average by 1 per cent to the existing death rate!—Scientific American.

Ceremony and Cannon Balls.

There is a tale told about an officer who was conversing with Marlborough during a hot engagement and insisted on taking off his hat and bowing profoundly every time he spoke to the duke. The great man suggested that at such a time they might very well waste all ceremony. But the officer bowed deeply to his commander's suggestion, and just as he was bending down a cannon-ball cleared him and took off only half of a comrade. The officer on coming up again and seeing what had happened remarked calmly, "Your grace perceives that one loses nothing by politeness."—London News.

Luring the Bees.

The Arabs and Bedouins of Tripolitania profit by the industry of bees wherever vegetation abounds. At the swarming season empty hives are placed close to the old ones, and a trail of honey laid at each entrance. A queen is disposed to fly away with her subjects when she finds a hive on a wall near the hive; the quickly spreading indigenous odor attracts the bees, arrests their flight, and the lure of the honey at the portal completes their capture.

In the Trench.

We live in trenches, and so few of us realize it. Life is a trench. Beside us are the jesters and the heroes, the lifting and the dead. In the interstices of our own encrements we make nosegays and stare at the stars, or the sand runs warm as and stir our bones and memories and cosmic cravings. We do not see the savages in life's crowd. Sometimes we lie asleep and dream, and the others grow up around our glory.

And we helped to dig it.—Life.

End of the Locomotive.

When railroad locomotives have served their time of usefulness or are badly damaged through accidents they are ordinarily scrapped and disposed of as scrap. This at least is the practice followed by many of the companies which own or lease their obsolete equipment of this kind to firms which junk it. After the shedding is removed from the sides of the locomotive the cutting is done with oxyacetylene torches. Castings, malleable iron and the different grades of metal are separated as the work proceeds.—Popular Mechanics.

FROZEN FOODS.

And Why Care Should Be Exercised In Eating Thawed Fish.

Meat will keep in the frozen state at temperature of 32 degrees F. Not so fish. Putrefaction is due to two causes—decomposition, which any process may effect, and certain ferments normally contained in the flesh, which cause chemical changes in the food. At a temperature of 22 degrees below the point of the former, but has little effect upon the latter. In the case of meat this ma merely a "ripening" effect that improves the flavor and does no harm, but in the case of fish it makes the flesh taste disgreeable, although it may not be actually unsome.

This is why fish that is not marketed perfectly fresh is frozen. In price 25 degrees F. is regarded as the proper temperature for cold storage of fish. Oysters should not be frozen, and it is held that they may be kept six weeks at a temperature of 40 degrees.

A bulletin of the United States department of agriculture speaks at full ...ows of the possible dangers from eating frozen fish:

"The formation of ptomaines quite frequently, although not always, accompanies putrefactive fermentation; it is said, in its early stages, and therefore great care should be taken to eat fish only when it is in perfect condition. Fish which has been frozen and, after thawing, kept for a time before it is cooked is especially likely to contain injurious ptomaines.

"It should be said that fish that should be considered unfit for food when the eyes have lost their sheen, the gills have become cloudy, the gills pale red, when blubber shows at the gills, when the flesh ate dry or easily loosened or when the flesh is so soft that if pressed with the finger the impression remains. Laying fish in water has been recommended as a means of judging of their condition. Those which sink may be considered undecomposed and wholesome, while those which are decomposing will float."

PERSIA'S DEVIL PLANT.

It Is Death to the Animal It Grips With Its Claws.

The devil plant they call it in Persia, and well they may, for it is more deadly to the flocks and herds that feed so important a part to their life than is the wolf to the herds of our mountain states.

It is the fall that the devil plant gets in its work. The flowers give place to seed pods with great belly like capsules and long, stiff claws like those of a beast of prey. These are hidden under the brown and yellow leaves, and when a grazing animal—a sheep, a camel, a wild ass or an antelope, for example—browses among the foliage it hooks the beak themselves into its muzzle. The animal tries to rub them off, but the more it rubs the deeper it forces the claws hidden into its skin. Its throat becomes so swollen that it can neither eat nor drink, and consequently it dies of starvation and pain.

The animal's body lies in the open and decays, and into the decomposing flesh the hundreds of black seeds contained in the capsules of the claws of are discharged, for it seems that earth is not rich enough for them and only in decayed flesh can they find enough nourishment.

Drivers of caravans curse the devil plant, for it may cost them many of their beasts when these are turned loose to graze at night. But most of the Persian's loathe that grass in the country has learned to avoid it, even as the American herds have learned to avoid the deadly loco weed.—New York World.

The Butterfly's Eye Spots.

What do they say about the butterflies' wings mean. The naturalist, says Mr. Harry Collins, must answer frankly, "I do not know." It is thought that they have some utilitarian application, and that they are one of the most intricate of all natural things. Of late they have butterflies have been captured with their eye spots painted out. The butterflies, so deprived, became birds, has been used as an argument in favor of the view that they must be "protective markings" resembling eyes, because birds strike at the eyes of their victims. But this explanation is hardly regarded as satisfactory. Something therefore the most striking examples of eye spots are found on the undersurface of the wings.

A Great Surprise.

There are lots of bags and missbapes during a play that are not down on the bills. One incident is related by a manager while playing in a small town. Ice cream was supposed to be sold in the second intermission, but being able to get ice cream cotton was used on dishes as a substitute. The characters were sitting around the tables presumably eating ice cream and cake. In the centre of the stage was a candelabrum, and the candles were supposed to be shaded by lady, while talking, got her dish of ice cream too near the candles, and to the surprise and amusement of the audience, the ice cream caught fire and burned merrily until the curtain was lowered.

The Pessimist Says:

If Opportunity had enjoyed the advantage of a modern course in business efficiency it wouldn't leave a man's door knocker a standing a minute. It would leave one of these intermittent alarm clocks.—Richmond Times-Dispatch.

THE FOUR PARTNERS.

They Wanted to Hear Patti Sing, and There Was Trouble.

In the year 1869 Adelina Patti visited the city of Maastricht, in Holland. The great singer was at the height of her fame, and as the management of the theatre had to pay her a large sum the price of seats was put at twice the usual amount.

Four impecunious, dissolute loving citizens of Maastricht desired to hear the great singer and, not being financially able to buy a seat apiece, put their money together and bought one seat for the opera of "Lucia." Each was see one of the four acts, and they drew lots to see in what order they should attend.

On the evening of the performance everything went well until the fourth act. When the third act was over the man who held the seat left the opera house and, hastening to the Vaentian, passed over the seat check to his successor. The latter, a batmaker named Groozyer, immediately took his place, congratulating himself that he would have the last view of the great singer. But when the act opened imagine his disappointment at hearing the tenor sing in lugubrious tones "Lucia is dead." That batmaker had not known that Lucia di Lammermoor dies in the third act of the opera. He was not to see the great Patti, after all.

Wrathfully he left the theatre and returned to the cafe. When he saw his friends sitting there and laughing at him he lost all control of his temper and stormed about, abusing his partners violently. At last he gave so violent that he had to be ejected from the cafe and was arrested for disorderly conduct. Thereupon he brought suit against his three partners for the amount he had paid toward the ticket, and won his case.

Next, the manager of the opera house heard of the matter, and himself brought suit against each of the four men for the price of three seats. The manager was able to convince the court that the words on the ticket, "Not Exchangeable," were meant for all such cases, and the decision was given in his favor.

So the admirers of Patti had to pay for three more tickets, the fines and the costs of the court proceedings, which made it an expensive theatre party, especially for the unfortunate batmaker, Groozyer, who had not even seen the famous singer.

Women Back at Work.

A large number of former women telegraphists at the postoffice who have left the department in recent years to get married are resuming their old work in London, in order to fill the gap left by the many men who have gone to the front, either as combatants or on special service. When the girls bade farewell to the sounder and the tape they were asked as a matter of form whether they would return to work in a national emergency, and the authorities are now communicating with those who replied in the affirmative. A very satisfactory response is understood to have been received.

BARN BURNED

At a few minutes after eight o'clock last evening, the fire brigade was called out to Lime street. A fire from some cause originated in a barn belonging to Mr. George Bowen, and the structure was totally destroyed. The loss sustained by Mr. Bowen is, we are informed, partially covered by insurance.

LETTERS FROM ABROAD

LETTER FROM LIEUT. ALASTAR PATERSON

First 4th Cameron's,
France, April 3rd, 1915.

Dear Cousin,—

At the present moment I am writing in the parlor of a little French farm house, diligently plying my indelible pencil. We left Bedford on the 19th of February and have been at the grim game of war ever since. We got our first taste of the trenches about six days after we arrived in France and have been in and out of them ever since. At present we are in Divisional Reserve resting, but will likely get another spell of the rabbit warren business in a day or two.

We were fairly in the Neuve Chapelle success and got a bad slap in the casualties, but nothing in comparison to some of the other regiments. Ask them at Bearnly to send you a "Northern Chronicle" of March 31st, and you will get there a full and graphic account of all we went through. It was a terrible experience for any human being to be in. I for one do not care to call up to memory by writing about it. Read Private Theobald's account in the Chronicle. He was with me most of the time, also my Company Scribe. I am thankful to Providence that we both came safely through it. I have before me a snapshot from home of my people and your William. I have not quite a lot of Canadians up here where we are. I have been enquiring for him, but so far have not been successful. I will trust to luck to strike him yet. Now that I have got his photo I can identify him easily.

I came out to France as a Company Quartermaster Sergeant, and have been gazetted 2nd Lieutenant, 23rd Battalion, and am presently in command of No. 15 Platoon, D Company—all Skye men. I was to have been sent home for kit and such like, but as I suffered in junior officers I have been kept on and at present there is no further word of getting a trip back to Bonnie Scotland. However, with the help of Providence I hope to win through and return safely some day to my ain folk. If not—well, death only comes once, and we could die a worse death than fighting for a just cause. Of course, Mother, Dad and the rest must have a terribly anxious time at home imagining things worse than they really are, although goodness knows they are bad enough, and every man of this business has to be finished once and for all, and without meaning to boast unduly, I say we all are the boys to do it, and do it we will. Another is what is required to shift the begars, and I'm safe in saying so are adding to our strength in this department every day, so you can watch the wicket for another big bang soon.

With good luck to you all, and hoping to see you all some day, when the pipping days of peace come again, I remain,

Yours very sincerely,
ALASTAIR.

Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of the merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

APPOINT SETTLERS AS FIRE RANGERS

TORONTO, April 20.—A radical departure from precedent is being made in the appointment of Ontario fire rangers by the minister of lands, forests and mines this year. Men who will be placed in charge of the important duty of patrolling the northern woods and fighting down fire outbreaks will this year be chosen from among the settlers of the north, and must be eminently fitted for their work. In many cases applicants are their own sponsors entirely and are receiving employment of this character.

Heralding to announcement of retrenchment during the war season the department is cutting down the size of the staff, and whereas 528 were employed last year only 400 will be selected for 1915. Of these 132 have already been placed, and Hon. G. Howard Ferguson is proceeding with the completion of his list. By a judicious distribution of labor it is expected that the work will be efficiently carried out at a minimum of expense.

KULTUR RECORD WILL BE KEPT FOR RECKONING DAY

LONDON, April 20.—(Special)—The Admiralty has issued the following statement:—

"Yesterday a German submarine torpedoed and sank the trawler Vanilla. The trawler Fermo attempted to rescue the crew, but was fired at and driven off.

"All the crew of the Vanilla were lost.

"This killing of fisherfolk for no military purpose should not escape attention. It is the second murder of this character committed within a week. A careful record is being kept of these events."

The sinking of the Vanilla took place in the North Sea. Captain Hill of the Fermo said he was within three hundred yards of the Vanilla when she was struck. He made an attempt to pick up the crew, but declares that the submarine attacked him in his effort at rescue. It fired a torpedo at the Fermo, which forced her to seek safety in flight.

FRENCH TROOPS ARE APPROACHING METZ

The Advance From Verdun Steady and Irresistable—Germans Lose Initial Advantage of Attack, and Their Toul-Verdun Barrier is Not Very Strong

LONDON, April 20.—(Special.)—A correspondent of The Times in "Eastern France," summing up the fighting about the St Mihiel wedge, says:

"The net result of the autumn and winter campaign is that the Germans have lost their initial advantage of attack, and their line is now being besieged by the French."

The correspondent emphasizes the importance of the capture of Les Eparges "the teeth of the German Crown Prince," and notes that the French "are steadily pushing forward from Verdun toward Metz." He says that the strength of the German positions in the Toul-Verdun barrier of fortresses is now more apparent than real.

"It seems to be certain," he adds, "that the Germans have begun to withdraw their heavy guns from Camp des Romains. Confirmation of this would be important, because it would be impossible for the French to occupy St. Mihiel, even if the rumors that the Germans have evacuated it are true, unless the Germans also quitted Camp des Romains."

WHOLE EMPIRE TO APPROVE PEACE, SAYS EARL GREY

LONDON, April 21.—(Special.)—"I agree it would be a sin to pray for peace until the barbarous, world-enslaving pretensions of Germany have been killed," declared Earl Grey at the Royal Colonial Institute meeting today. If we are true to ourselves, we shall at the conclusion of the war be more powerful than over. Let us see that we give the wide world a reason for its confidence."

Three Hundred Dollars Found

Port Hope Boys Make Interesting Discovery—Dollar Bills in Jar

PORT HOPE, April 20.—Two young lads, Richard Richmond and Harry McGibbon, while playing about the yard at the rear of Richmond's bakeshop came across a gun jar which appeared to have a ringing. Curious to find out just what this ringing was, the little fellows managed to take the top off, and to their surprise and delight roll after roll of money fell out. The boys felt like real millionaires, and after straightening it all out they found they were wealthier by about three hundred dollars. The money was turned over to the police and is now awaiting an owner.

Mrs. Wesley Rose, who lives near by, had been house-cleaning and remembers throwing out some old gem jars very similar. If this prind jar came from Mr. Rose's establishment it is probability the money it contained was saved by his former wife. If the owner cannot be found, the money, of course, will return to the boys.

Swiss Army Always Ready

"Anyone Who Wishes to Violate Our Neutrality Must Fight"

ROME, April 20.—Ulrich Wille, Comander of the Swiss army, is quoted in an interview in The Tribuna as declaring his country's neutrality must be kept mobilized. Although no other power at present threatens Switzerland, he said, an incident might occur at any time on the frontier which would compel the Swiss to enforce their rights and their neutrality.

After describing the military organization of Switzerland, Col. Wille closed the interview by saying:

"Speaking as a mere hypothesis, that anyone wished to violate our neutrality they first must crush us."

KEEN TO FIGHT HAD TOES CUT OFF

WELLAND, Ont., April 20.—Many minor operations have been undergone by recruits, now that they might pass the medical examinations necessary to join the various contingents, but William Risen has gone the others one better. When he volunteered he was rejected owing to the fact that he had a hammer toe on each foot. Not to be debarred in his desire to fight the Germans he submitted to an operation by which the offending toes were amputated. Fully recovered from the operation, he was accepted yesterday as a member of the third contingent.

HAD HIS SUSPICIONS

Are you certain this is the man" asked the commanding officer, when a farmer accused a soldier of shooting a chicken.

"I won't swear to him," said the witness, "but I will say he is the man I suspect of doing it."

"That's not enough to convict a man," retorted the C.O., considerably nettled. "What raised your suspicions?"

"Well, sir," replied the sturdy farmer, as he slowly mopped his forehead with his kerchief: "it was this way. I see 'im an my property with a gun; then I heard the gun go off; then I see 'im putting the chickens into his knapsacks and it didn't seem sense no how to think the bird committed suicide."

LONDON April 21.—(Special.)—The preservation of the common interests of all the powers in China by the assurance of the independence and the integrity of the Chinese Republic and the principle of equal opportunities for the commerce and industry of all nations in China, these were, declared by Sir Edward Grey, foreign secretary, to be the policy of the British Government in China.

The foreign secretary said that the government was in close touch with diplomatic circles in China and Japan, that with commercial bodies interested in the far east, and the house might rest assured that the government would endeavor to secure, to the best of its ability, an open door to British commerce in all parts of China.

COLLECTED MONEY BUT FAILED TO START

HAMILTON, April 21.—(Special)—Peter Sarcinno, the Indian runner who was supposed to start in the race at Buffalo last night, was on Sunday into a heap of trouble. Arrangements collected money from several local people for the purpose of defraying the expenses of his trip to Dearborn. On Friday evening he left on the train, along with Cecil Phillips, the other Hamilton runner, but on arriving at Buffalo he suddenly changed his mind, and took the next train back to Toronto. In Toronto yesterday he received a strong kick with the newspapers because the people of Hamilton would not send him to Boston.

Jamieson collected well over $30, and now he will be asked to return it or there will be trouble. Jamieson has left any friends he ever had here by his latest action.

Jamieson's action will probably result in his suspension by the Amateur Athletic Union of Canada. Bobby Kerr, the local representative of the body, has written forwarding to Secretary Trivett, enclosing the facts of the case, and urging that the Indian be placed under the ban.

ENEMY IS WEAKENING BEFORE THE RUSSIANS

Austro-German Force of 600,000 Opposing Advance—Fighting Is Desperate—Germany Has Rushed Reinforcements Through Moravia

LONDON, April 21.—Special—The battle of the Carpathians is being fought with dogged determination on both sides over a front extending between the Lupkow and Uzok Passes, the Russians slowly breaking down the powerful resistance of the enemy. Realizing the gravity of the Russian advance into Hungary, Germany rushed an enormous force to the defence of her ally, while Austrian troops are being withdrawn from Bukovina to aid in stemming the tide of invasion.

The key of the position is in the centre of the Lupkow-Uzok line, and here the Austro-Germanic forces are fighting with terrible ferocity in an effort to pierce the Russian line. Picked German troops have been pushed to the front to stiffen the Austro-Hungarian defence, but the Russians have beaten off the counter-attacks among the villages that nestle at the foot of the southern hills.

Latest reports from Petrograd show that the Russians have been busy repulsing Austro-German attacks in the direction of Stryj and to the southeast of Lupkow Pass, and have themselves captured another height on the eastern Rozsanka chain of the Carpathians.

Railway Official Shot by Spy

LONDON, April 21.—(Special)—A Belgian who has just arrived in London from Ghent in a narrative to the Daily Mail said:

The saddest incident of recruit week was the shooting by the Germans last Wednesday of M. Lemire, a Belgian railway official, who was divisional chief at the railway ministry. The Germans accused him of espionage, and after a summary trial by court martial he was sentenced to death by execution.

A parade was called for the municipal rifle range of Ghent and about 200 persons were forced to be present, including the condemned man's wife. Her despair was aware that his wife was among the crowd gathered behind the soldiers, but faced the firing party without flinching, and died with a smile upon his lips. An appeal to the Duke of Wurtemburg, who is in command of the fourth army in Flanders, had been previously rejected.

TO TEST RIGHTS OF GAMBLING MACHINE

OTTAWA, April 20.—A gambling machine was seized by Detective McLaughlin in Jack O'Meara's barber shop last night, and the latter will face a charge of conducting an illegal game in court to-morrow. The machine, which was supplied by a Montreal firm, is a slot device, with a lever attached. When a nickel is deposited in the slot, the lever is turned and a small piece of gum drops out. Then on the face of the machine, various designs appear such as three maple leaves, five stars and Mills. These represent winning hands and all have values.

When a winning hand is registered a number of chips are credited out of the machine, and these are redeemable at five cents apiece.

This machine was submitted to the morality officer before being set in operation by the manufacturing company. He immediately pronounced it illegal. The case to-morrow will be watched with interest as it constitutes a test case. The manufacturers claim it is a legitimate enterprise.

DOMINION PREMIERS WELCOME IN LONDON

LONDON, April 21.—In the House of Commons yesterday Prof. Hearn asked the Prime Minister what steps his Majesty's Government were taking to consult the King's Ministers in the Dominions overseas so as to assure that in discussing the terms of peace His Majesty's Ministers in the United Kingdom had behind them the full support of the self-governing peoples of the Empire, and whether the Government would now intimate to the Premiers overseas that the presence of themselves or any of their colleagues would be most welcome in London this summer.

Mr. Harcourt, who replied, said the Prime Minister had asked him to say that he could not add anything to the statement which was made to the House on April 11. Being pressed to answer the latter part of the question, Mr. Harcourt said: "The Premiers of the Dominions already know that their presence here will be most welcome at any time. There is always a vacant chair waiting for them in the Committee of Imperial Defence."

Hearne—They have been informed of that?

Harcourt—Certainly.

Saved Her Baby Burnt Herself

MONTREAL, April 20.—Mrs. Lettice Reason, aged 23, of 183 Masson street was painfully burned yesterday in saving her five-months-old babe from fire which took to her dress by a spark from the kitchen stove. International treaties for limitation of armaments must be agreed upon with a view to disarmament.

NERLICH TREASON TRIAL ADJOURNED

TORONTO, April 21.—(Special)Mr. Justice Clute yesterday reused the application made by W. G. Mason, who have the charge of high treason against Emil Nerlich traversed to the fall assize court. His Lordship ordered that the case be spoken of again in two weeks.

Mr. Mason argued that the treason trial should not be taken until the court of appeal had disposed of the reserved case granted by Sir William Mulock, when Mr. Nerlich was found guilty of conspiring to commit an indictable offence.

W. C. Mikel thought the trial should be proceeded with during the present sitting of the court, but would not oppose the application if the decision of the court of appeal would have any bearing on the treason charge.

Gum and Chocolate—Have Fun as Well as Hardship

The Calgary News Telegram publishes a letter from a Canadian soldier on the firing line:

"We have already been in the trenches which form the firing line, and expect to enter them again shortly. Everything is fine here, and there are a lot of articles that we cannot buy at all. I would greatly appreciate some mitt cookies and some specimint gum. It would surely go fine. I would also like some of those extra heavy sox. We have some enjoyable times once in a while. There is a lot of fun as well as hardship attached to warfare."

Soldiers ask for chewing gum because it quenches thirst, helps to steady the nerves.

Four Teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts

as the cereal part of the meal, helps keep one in fine fettle.

There's a Reason—in fact a number of reasons.

Grape-Nuts is a concentrated food, hence a small portion goes a long way.

It is made of wheat and barley, and contains all the nutriment of these grains, including those invaluable mineral salts so often lacking in ordinary food, but which are indispensable for normal growth and maintenance of body and brain. One great aim in originating Grape-Nuts was to supply this lack of mineral elements, and it fulfills its purpose admirably.

Grape-Nuts is a delicious food, and digests quickly, generally in about one hour. Compare this with the 2½ to 3 hours required by bread.

CLERKS IN KHAKI

Giving an Insight Into "Office" Work on the Battlefield

Inside a long, low building, at rows of tables, all the clerical staff attached to the British Expeditionary Force at headquarters. The clerks are soldiers, clad in khaki, ready, if need be, to scrabble at a moment's notice the pen or typewriter for the sword or rifle.

The tables are littered with dockets, report forms, and an immense mass of correspondence. At one table a bronzed warrior is entering up particulars in a book from a pile of queer, dirty-looking pieces of paper. These pieces of paper are the counterfoils of orders given by commissariat officers to shopkeepers and others for goods obtained from them by officers, all of which liabilities must be discharged in solid gold. Thousands of dollars are paid in this way every week, and fifty soldier clerks alone are engaged at headquarters in looking after the "accounts" department.

At another table may be seen half a dozen soldiers engaged in filing reports deftly with recommended promotions, including those from the ranks, near them are men performing the sixteen task of all—the compiling of the lists of killed, wounded and missing.

What Thin Folks Should Do to Gain Weight

Physician's Advice for Thin, Undeveloped Men and Women

Thousands of people suffer from excessive thinness, weak nerves and feeble stomachs who having tried advertised foods-drinkers, food-fats, muscle culture stunts and rub-on creams, resign themselves to life-long skinfulness and think nothing will make them fat. Yet their case is not hopeless, for recently discovered regenerative Kruschen fat grow' after years of thinness, and is also unequalled for repairing the waste of sickness or faulty digestion and for strengthening the nerves. This remarkable discovery is called Sargol. Six strength-giving, fat-producing elements of acknowledged merit have been combined in this peerless preparation, which is endorsed by eminent physicians and used by prominent people everywhere. It is absolutely harmless inexpensive and effective.

A month's systematic use of Sargol should increase the flesh and strength by correcting faults of digestion and by supplying nourishment direct to the blood. Increased nourishment is obtained from the food eaten, and the additional fat that thin people need are provided. J. S. McKeown and other leading druggists supply Sargol and say there is a large demand for it.

While this preparation has given splendid results as a nerve-tonic and vitalizer, it should not be used by nervous people unless they wish to gain at least ten pounds of flesh.

Young Man Shot Cleaning Rifle

TORONTO, April 20.—Accidentally shot in the abdomen while cleaning his rifle yesterday, Charles Dundas, 23 years old, a young farmer living at Lonside Junction, died of his wound in the General Hospital at 6 p.m. It appears that the young man did not know that the rifle was loaded, and while bending over it, he in some way discharged the weapon. The bullet passed through his abdomen and lodging in his spinal column, paralyzed the legs. Although the accident occurred early in the week, no word was received in the city until several hours later. Dr. Forlar, of Carlton street, was notified, and made the trip in fifteen minutes. On his arrival he had the young man removed to the General Hospital in Toronto, but all efforts to save the man's life was fruitless. Deceased was single and had lived with his mother. An inquest is unlikely.

Young Lindsay Boy Drowned in River

LINDSAY, April 20.—A sad drowning accident occurred in the Scugog river last night at 5.30 o'clock, when Harry, the nine year old son of Mr. Neil Gray, contractor, went to his death. The little fellow, who was a pupil of the public school, and Ward went to the river with a number of companions to fish from the crib work opposite Perrin's boathouse, when he lost his balance and fell into the water. His companions gave the alarm, but when help arrived the boy had disappeared from view. A search party was organized and about seven o'clock the body was brought to the surface.

GERMANY'S ARROGANT TERMS.

Not since this devastating war commenced has there been such an important document placed before the world as the letter of Dr. Dernburg, the German Government's mouthpiece in the United States, read at the Portland meeting. It must be regarded in the light of an official communication from Berlin, giving the terms upon which Germany is prepared to make peace. It is a full confession of failure. No other interpretation can be put upon it. The very moment of its publication gives support to this view. After the winter's rest the Allies are ready to take the field with their armies enormously increased and with immense supplies of all the necessary munitions of war. Germany is not asleep, and she knows this only too well. The fact that at this critical juncture she should—through the agency of an ambassador—disclose the terms on which she would be willing to lay down her arms, is in the highest degree significant. It is an admission that Germany recognizes that she is beaten and knows she cannot gain what she set out to attain. She is not directly suing for peace. It is an admit attempt to gauge the temper of a neutral nation and of the Allies. Like every other important step taken by Germany since the war began, it is doomed to failure.

The suave tone of the letter and the honeyed phrases it contains are positively sickening to all sensible minds. The horror of all the civilized nations of the old world slaughtering one another, everyone convinced of the perfect righteousness of their own cause" comes well from of the representative of the nation which brought about this terrible slaughter. To speak of these countries as "one big family, with interests spiritual as well as commercial" is a piece of Berlin bunkum with which we are now familiar. What a pity this view was not taken in Germany before they let loose the dogs of war!

When we leave these silvery nothings and come to the actual conditions upon which Germany is willing to make peace we find them so absurd and preposterous that they are scarcely worth a moment's consideration. Germany is prepared to evacuate Belgium if "all the other German demands are carefully complied with." What a magnanimous offer, considering that Germany will be obliged to evacuate Belgium under any circumstances. Even to volunteer to do so under any conditions is an admission of failure, for Germany has loudly proclaimed that Belgium is already a German province, and that she intends to retain it. Her demands include a "guaranteed free sea," meaning the closing against any of the high seas to the unrestricted commerce of all nations under an international covenant that shipping shall not be molested under any circumstances, and that telegraphic and mail communications shall be kept open at all times between all countries. Another demand is that preferential tariffs are to be abolished. The cloven hoof is disclosed when Dr. Dernburg indicates that the evacuation of Belgium depends on the formulation of a German-Belgian trade treaty, on terms suitable to Germany.

If the Kaiser and his satellites believe that after all the blood and treasure poured out by the Allies they would be willing to accede to these terms, it is another instance of the utter inability of the German mind to see things as they really are. Dr. Dernburg disclaims with "full authority" "any ambition by my country as to world dominion." So the German people of any rate learned one lesson from the war. What Dr. Dernburg puts forward as an "equitable solution" will be regarded in that light by no one but the military despots of Germany. When their armies have suffered more crushing defeats than they have yet sustained we may expect to see a very considerable modification of these arrogant terms.

THE DUST NUISANCE.

Ald. Wallbridge is deserving of thanks for having drawn the attention of the City Council to the condition of the roads. During the past week the clouds of dust have been a source of great annoyance to residents and pedestrians alike. Everyone would wish that Belleville should be made as attractive as possible for visitors; and to minimize this dust nuisance—a small matter in itself—would help to accentuate the favorable impression which a stranger must form of the city. Residents, too, are entitled to some relief; and since it is the custom for those who wish for the roads to be sprinkled with oil to pay for the privilege, it is to be hoped that they will at once come forward with their petitions. As Ald. McFee remarked, oil has a protecting influence upon the roads; but to wait for a downfall of rain would be to unnecessarily prolong the evil from which the inhabitants are suffering.

CURRENT COMMENT

Toronto News: "The Turk may yet repudiate the Hun as too barbarous an ally.

Hamilton Herald: "Sir Douglas Haig, commander of the first British army, has earned the greatest reputation, so far, of any British officer engaged in the war.

Toronto News: "The United States, open and neutral, has been drawing $100,000,000 by war taxes. Yet Hon George P. Graham defies that Canada's war taxes are war taxes.

Hamilton Herald: "A factory at Belleville where war's pikes were being made has been destroyed by fire under circumstances which point to incendiarism. All factories producing war supplies should be carefully guarded night and day—and the guards well armed." This evidently refers to the Graham evaporator at Frankford.

Toronto Globe: "Here's hoping that Mr. J. A. Flavelle will have better luck as a Livesaw Commissioner than his distinguished brother has had on unsuccessful tilt against the Hamilton crowd in Toronto." Is there anything on earth The Globe would not sneer at that was not of its own creation?

GERMANY'S LOST COLONIES.

Germany, at the outbreak of war had colonies in Africa with an area of 900,000 square miles, and a population of over 10,000,000. In Asia and Polynesia she had a total of 35,000 square miles and 850,000 people. She has already had nearly all and will eventually be shorn of every foot of territory.

FORESTRY IN ONTARIO.

Last Spring no fewer than 100,000 trees were distributed by the Ontario Government in an effort to make good the mistakes of the previous generation when lands were cleared of trees which proved unsuitable for cultivation. It is a good work which should be copied by every government in the country.

Montreal Gazette: "Germany is prepared to pay damages and apologize for the sinking of neutral ships by her piratical submarines. The money, of course, is the loss in property; it may satisfy the individual owners, but it will not remove the national mistrust and scorn that such unscrupulous methods of warfare create."

Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph: "The Canadian house dealer who has been selling spavined and otherwise dilapidated equine wrecks to the British army must not consider that he is fighting on the side of Germany, but his Canadian fellow citizens. No one can understand horsetrading ethics may be pardoned if they hold that view."

Journal of Commerce: "The perfection of the art of extracting sunbeams from cucumbers are likely to be surpassed or be minimized if the Germans are able to make a success of a scheme just announced—the production of a substitute for butter from sunflowers. All station masters are requested to plant sunflowers in every bit of vacant ground.

Providence Journal: "Italy gives the impression of desiring to extract the utmost profits from the situation without incurring unnecessary risks. With military men the need be no very serious quarrel. Surely any Government in possession of Sunday can before it plunges its people into the losses and horrors of war. But it Italy delays her entrance, she may find the task on which she has determined—the acquisition of Italia Irredenta—whether by warlike or diplomatic measures—rendered much more difficult. The Government at Rome, in a word, must keep a sharp lookout for the psychological moment."

Montreal Gazette: "The British nation is not a drunken one, nor will it ever be. It has certainly not deteriorated physically. Since last August an army of in the neighborhood of two million has been assembled, trained, and dispatched to the Continent. Of course there must be at least another million under arms, prepared for any possible attempt at invasion. Recruiting is yet going on and there is no lack of volunteers for active service. Even men who have passed a strict physical examination are refused to take part in the horrible game that man can play at. These millions are good proof of national efficiency and a living contradiction of the pessimists' fear that the country is going to the dogs by the road of drink."

Agricultural News

BEST GRAIN FOR QUEBEC AND ONTARIO

In Bulletin No. 81, of the Ontario regular series issued by the Director of the Dominion Experimental Farms and entitled "Division of Cereals: Summary of Results, 1914," Dr. Charles E. Saunders, Dominion Cerealist, recommends the following varieties of grain for Quebec and Ontario.

Spring Wheat—Red Fife and White Fife, good sorts but late in ripening; Huron, Marquis and Early Red Fife are earlier. Huron is vigorous and prepotent—the best and equal to the others for bread-making. Prelude, if the soil is rich and rainfall sufficient, is recommended for extreme northern districts. In Southern Ontario Blue Stem gives good results. Goose Wheat is useful in extra dry localities. Kubanka makes excellent bread, but is not in favor with millers.

Oats—Banner and Lincoln are good, but where extreme earliness is desired Daubeney and Eighty day will best fill the bill.

Barley—Manchurian and Ontario Agricultural College No. 21, are best six-rowed varieties; Duckbill, Canadian Thorpe and Chevalier (best straiten) two-rowed varieties. No varieties of beardless or hulless are recommended, but Success is early ripening.

Peas—Arthur for earliness and productiveness; Golden Vine, Chancellor and White Marrowfat are good and Prussian Blue, Wisconsin Blue and English Grey are recommended for color.

DAIRY AND COLD STORAGE

The report of the Dairy and Cold Storage Commissioner for the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1914 has just been issued.

This report deals with the progress of dairying, the expanding home market, the export trade, the importation of New Zealand butter and the work of the Pinch and Home dairy districts, of the Extension of Markets Division, of the Fruit Division and of the Division of Cold Storage.

In the appendices, of which there are eight, the reports of the chiefs of the various divisions are given; these include many details illustrative not only of their work but of the progress being made in dairying, marketing, storing and shipping of fruit.

This report, which is issued as Sessional Paper No. 15 a, is a volume of 112 pages. Copies may be obtained on application to the Publications Branch Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

Toronto Triplets All Three Died

TORONTO, April 20.—A pleasant surprise in the form of triplets, came to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Watson, 445 Dufferin street last week, only to turn into a bereavement, as none of the three infants lived out the week.

On Wednesday last two sons and one daughter were born to Mr. and Mrs. Watson. One of the infants lived only an hour. The remaining two died on the following day and one on Friday. Mr. Watson is employed as a carmaker at the Massey-Harris Company.

In view of the fact that a fish lays 7,000,000 eggs a season, it might be a wise stunt to employ a fish to set the pace for the bens.

TOURED CONGO WITH KING OF BELGIUM

TORONTO, April 20.—James B. Ashmun, a native of Ireland, who five years ago was in charge of the letters of 16,000 black carriers who accompanied King Albert of Belgium, then Prince of Liege, in his trip through the Congo Free State, is in Toronto trying to enlist with an aviation corps or else secure transportation to England, there to join the Royal Flying Corps. Ashmun has been in the city for two weeks and is rooming at 211 Simcoe street. He has seen several persons with out military men in Toronto, but of course as there is no aviation corps in Canada they have been unable to satisfy his desire. His request for a commission in an engineering corps also had to be refused as there are many already in accordance with the waiting list.

Ashmun is about 26 years of age and was born in Capetown, South Africa, of British parents. He left the Union about two years ago and went to England where for a time he was connected with the Union of South Africa Offices at London. He is desirous of making acquaintance with any other South African who happens to be in the city.

Tragic Death of Husband and Wife

Swift Current of Port Severn Carries Couple Far Out From Shore

WAUBAUSHENE, April 20.—Mr. Thomas Strachan, Dominion Government resident engineer at Port Severn, and his wife, were yesterday afternoon drowned in the Severn River. Their house fronts on the river and Mrs. Strachan, who had gone to the shore for water, fell in, and was being carried out into the stream. In response to her cries, her husband jumped in from the house and dragged in after her. The current at his point, however, is particularly strong and swift, and the efforts of people were only unavailing, but he himself was swept down stream. Clinging to each other the husband and wife were carried over the falls and down the rapids and will probably be taken a long distance out. A large family of small children are left behind.

Officer Paid $52 For Fancy Boots

He Imported Them From England Freight and Duty Came High

TORONTO, April 20.—Some of his fellow-officers are mentioning the subject of "boots" to Lieut. Charles Porterfield of the Eaton Motor Machine Gun Battery these days, and there is a very good reason for the omission. Having heard a great deal about the qualities, good and bad, of Canadian military footwear, Lieut. Porterfield decided to import a pair of high boots from England. He sent $25 to pay for the boots, but when they were delivered yesterday he had to pay $17 for duty and $10 for express and other details, making a total of $52 for the one pair. He intends to wear them out as quickly as possible.

BANISH BILE!

A bilious condition of the system is the result of inaction of the liver, often causing severe headache through the eyes and temples, culminating sometimes in nausea and vomiting, which is frequently followed by a bilious diarrhoea.

Abbey's Effervescent Salt, when taken as directed, stimulates the peptic glands of the stomach and increases the contraction of its muscular fibre above downward. This action is communicated to the intestines and increases the flow of the intestinal juice, thus stimulating the ducts of the liver to pour out the bile, when it can be carried downward by the laxative action of the Salt, instead of remaining to clog up the liver and flow back into the stomach.

Thus, if a person who is subject to Biliousness and Bilious Headache will use Abbey's Effervescent Salt, the natural action of the Stomach, liver and intestine will be kept up and no bile can accumulate in the system.

DR. HUGHES CONFINED FOR ONLY ONE HOUR

Mr. Justice Clute Says Evidence Showed Good Faith of Prisoner in That He Lost Money Himself—Released in Court Room

Dr. F. G. Hughes, convicted of conspiracy to defraud in the Union Life trial, served his sentence in the Assize Court today. He was remanded from the last Assizes, and appeared again, before Mr. Justice Clute today. He was sentenced to one hour in custody. He stayed in the court room ten minutes past ten to ten minutes past eleven. He was then released.

His Lordship in giving judgment, said he had taken into consideration the fact that Dr. Hughes was not the instigator of the improper conduct, and had been personally a sufferer by it. His good faith was burdened by the fact that he had lost money by it himself. Under these circumstances he thought it would not be fair to punish him severely. Were it in his power, said Mr. Justice Clute, he would impose a fine. As it was not, he would make the punishment as light as possible. Accordingly he passed sentence of one hour in confinement.

New Tax Proposed On all Theatres

Rate Will be According to Population Where House is Situated

TORONTO, April 20.—The theatres are to be taxed and regulated by the Province in the same way as moving picture theatres. The Provincial Treasurer announced today that a tax based on the population of the centres in which the theatres were located would be placed on theatres throughout the Province and will be payable June first of each year commencing this year. Theatres in cities of 500,000 population or over will pay $300. Theatres in cities of 100,000 population and up to 500,000 will pay $200, and cities of under 100,000 will pay $100.

It is expected that the revenue from this source will total something over $10,000.

Regulations with regard to the width of the entrances, the number of fire escapes and exits, etc., are also laid down for the theatres as they are for the moving picture houses. The regulations provide that there shall be open spaces on each side of the building for the erection of fire escapes and main entrances must not be less than forty feet in length. The exits on each side and on each floor must not be less in the aggregate than half the width of the main entrance which must be eight feet for the first five hundred seating capacity and an additional eighteen inches for each additional hundred seats.

The supervision of the theatres will be under the charge of Mr. Robert Newman, the moving picture censor for the Government.

WHY SEVEN WOMEN DESIRE ONE HUSBAND

A SYMBOLICAL BIBLE PICTURE OF PRESENT-DAY RELIGIOUS CONDITIONS

Woman a Symbol of the Church—Jewish Marriage Typical of the Union of Christ and the Church—The True Church a Betrothed Virgin—"The Marriage of the Lamb"—"The Spirit and the Bride Say Come"—Who are the Seven Women?—Who the Man?—Why He Turns From Them

ROCHESTER, N.Y., April 18.—Pastor Russell spoke twice here today. We report his discourse on the text, "Seven women shall take hold of one Man in that Day, saying, We will eat our own bread and wear our own apparel; only let us be called by Thy name to take away our reproach." (Isaiah 4:1) He said in part: "Many of the Old Testament prophecies are highly figurative. Doubtless they had some measure of application at the time when they were written, but we have apostolic authority for concluding that they were intended for Spiritual Israel. (I Peter 1:12) Our Lord and the Apostles quoted continually from the prophecies and invariably applied the lesson to the Gospel Age. Hence we are abundantly justified in assuming that our text is applicable to the present. Its peculiar expression, "In that Day," is usual throughout Scripture in referring to the close of the Gospel Age with its troubles and confusion incident to the inauguration of the Millennium.

Throughout the Scriptures a woman is a symbol of the Church—a pure woman of a pure Church, a corrupt woman of a false Church. Our Lord compared the true Church in the end of this Age to a company of Virgines—part wise and part foolish—and Himself to the Bridegroom, came at the end of the Age to receive His espoused Church unto Himself in glory. John the Baptist used the same figure saying, "He that hath the Bride is the Bridegroom"; and St. Paul amplifies this thought, declaring, "I have espoused you (the consecrated Church) as a chaste virgin unto one husband, Christ." (John 3:29; 2 Corinthians 11:2.) Here, as in the parable of the Ten Virgins, the Jewish marriage is set forth as typical of the union between Christ and the Church.

With the Jews in olden times, when a betrothal took place, legal and binding documents were signed by or for the contracting parties, but no actual marriage occurred for about a year. During that period it was required that the espoused be as faithful to her espousal as it is now expected of any true wife. We see the harmony between the Jewish marriage custom and the Lord's dealing with the Church. No one is espoused to our Lord who has not entered into a definite contract with Him. On our Lord's part the contract is the assurance of the great and precious promises that if the espoused is faithful, she shall be joint-heir with her Lord in His Millennial Kingdom. On the Church's part the contract is our Covenant of consecration, faithfulness to our Redeemer even unto death.

The interim between our personal acceptance of the Lord's gracious promises and our death corresponds in a measure to the betrothal periods of the Jewish maiden, but the more exact fulfilment of the figure is found in the history of the Church as a whole. At Pentecost our Lord's virgin Church was espoused to Him, and has since been awaiting the coming of the Bridegroom and her resurrection change to glory, honor and immortality—the marriage the union—for nearly nineteen centuries.

The Bride in Kingston Glory

In His last Message to the Church our Lord continues to picture the Church as a betrothed virgin, under strictest obligations to purity and faithfulness down to the end of this Gospel Age, where she is represented as making herself ready for the Bridegroom's coming and for the marriage. To be ready she must have on the wedding garment, and it must be "without spot or wrinkle or any such thing." (Ephesians 5:27.) That must represents the imputed righteousness of Christ, covering her every unintentional blemish and imperfection; any spot or wrinkle upon this robe would cause such grief to the betrothed one that the stain would be removed and the wrinkle pressed out by the gracious arrangement made therefor by the Heavenly Bridegroom; for He presented the robe and gave directions by which it might be kept "unspotted from the world."

With her resurrection changed in the end of this Age the "espoused virgin" Church will be no more. She will have passed into the more exalted state of the Bride—united to her Lord and Bridegroom. Note the symbolical picture by which she is represented—the New Jerusalem, coming from God out of Heaven." That is, the Heavenly Kingdom, the new rulership of the world is then pictured as the Bride. The grand work of the Church in glory is also pictured as the work of the Bride—"The Spirit and the Bride say, Come. And whosoever will, let him take of the Water of life freely." (Revelation 21:2, 9, 10; 22:17.)

Not only is the Church not the Bride now, but she is not privileged to say, Come, And whosoever will, let with the calling of this Age there is a measure of election. Our Lord declared, "No man can come into His except the Father which sent Me draw him." (John 6:44.) Moreover, there is no River of Water of Life now. That bountiful provision is for the world during the Millennial Age. Now, as our Lord explained, those who become His consecrated followers have within themselves "a well of water springing up unto everlasting life."—John 4:14.

Many Church of Christ

The heathen and children of Christian lands when they begin to study the Bible are perplexed and enquire, Which is the Church of Christ? They are surprised at the various names claiming to be branches of the Church; and they ask, Which did Jesus establish? The answer implies confusion and reproach. All claim genuineness and originality, but none can show any evidence of its present organization earlier than the 19th Century. When we contrast their elaborate and formal services with the simplicity of the early Church, as described in the New Testament, we are sure that they cannot be the same. When we compare their doctrines with those of Christ and the Apostles, as set forth in the New Testament, their claims fall to the ground for lack of support.

To illustrate: The Scriptures teach that there is but one God, the Father, and one Lord Jesus Christ. (I Corinthians 8:6.) That the Father, who is above all, and His God to be our Redeemer; that when the Son had fully accomplished that work the Father raised Him from the dead and exalted Him to His own right hand, or place of favor next to Himself. Our Lord Himself said "My Father is greater than I." (John 14:28.) But the various churches, each claiming to be the original, safe and leading one that there are three Gods, "equal in power and glory."

All this confusion has tended to undermine the faith of the more rational members of these various churches. The disgusted have people in a measure become with their inability to harmonize with common sense the creeds of the Dark Ages that one of the brightest minds have abandoned these and sought to formulate new and more rational conceptions.

But, as the Bible forewarned, the great Adversary has manifested himself as angel of light and leader into all truth, and has captured their colleges and seminary professors, as well as their most prominent ministers, and has transformed unwittingly they have become Higher Critics and Evolutionists. In the name of all that is holy and good they are undermining the leading minds in the various sects that the Bible is not the Word of God; that it is not reliable; and that while Jesus and the Apostles were well-meant enough, they were not brilliant scholars, and therefore could not detect the falsities of the Old Testament, upon which their teachings are based.

"Denying the Lord That Bought Them." These wise men of our time assure us that the story of Adam and Eve is at very most, an allegory; that there was no Garden of Eden, and that there never was a sentence upon Adam because of disobedience in perfection; that consequently the Scriptures include us when they declare that by reason of Adam's disobedience sin and death entered the world. Since they deny the fall of man, they perforce deny the need of a Savior. They deny our Lord's declaration that He came "to seek and to save that which was lost."—Luke 19:10.

Denying that there was any sin on Adam's part, they deny that Christ died for our sins and rose again for our justification. They ignore the Apostle's statement that by one man's disobedience sin entered into the world and death as a result of sin; and thus death passed upon all men, because all are sinners. (Romans 4:24, 25; 5:12-21.) Thus do they make void the testimony of God and of two Testaments, and many theories—the golden images to which all are required to bow down and worship if they would be called respectable, intelligent.

All this while the true Church has been in "the wilderness," as the Scriptures explain. (Revelation 12:14.) In other words, she has been in disfavor, ignored, and unknown to the worldly wise. Some of her members have been scattered throughout the various denominations, and some have been outside of all these. The popular institutions known as churches are worldly, their aims, ambitions and methods are worldly. Hence there can be very little religious fellowship and co-operation between the majority in these sectarian systems and the minority who are true to the Lord and His Word.

Having in mind the numberous brands of Christianity and their various conflicting doctrines, we cannot wonder that Scriptures used the word Babylon—confusion—as a name for these systems as a whole. One can put his finger with some degree of definiteness upon the teachings of Confucius, and Confucianists know what they believe; one can do the same with those of Buddhists, Brahmins, etc., but not so with Christians; for their doctrines are legion.

The confusion or doctrine amongst the various branches of Christianity has brought reproach upon them all. The heathen are enquiring how it comes that there are so many kinds of Christians, and how it is that they all get their conflicting theories out of the same Book. This reproach is keenly felt by the leading minds of all denominations. Consequently their creeds are very generally ignored; but the organizations built upon those creeds are held into most tenaciously. The systems are worshipped, and the creeds repudiated.

"Seven Women In That Day."

We have seen that in Scriptural usage women symbolize the Churches; that the true Church is represented by a virgin, and the false systems by harlots, unfaithful to their espousals and associating with the world (Revelation 17:6.) Throughout Scripture the number seven is well recognized as the symbol of completeness. Accordingly we assume that in our text it signifies all the churches of this world, but does not include the true Church, which is not of this world and does not follow its course.

We have come to the time when these seven women—the various sects and denominations—feel keenly the reproach of their situation. And what is their conclusion as to the proper course to be pursued? We answer that it is prophetically voiced in our text. The one Man represents our Lord, the Heavenly Bridegroom. Our text thus signifies that all the nominal churches have come, or are about to come, to the place where they desire to be called the churches of Christ, but care to have nothing more to do with Him. They wish to hold their sectarian name and at the same time be called Christians. The name of Christ is almost their only asset. For the doctrine of Christ they care nothing or for any thought of redemption and covering of sins through Him.

Associated with these various earthly systems are some members of the true Church, but they will not long remain therein; for one by one they are hearing the voice of Truth calling to them. "Come out of her (Babylon), My people, that ye be not partakers of her sins and receive not her plagues." (Revelation 18:4.) The more these seven women desire to eat their own bread and to wear apparel of their own furnishment, the more the Lord's true people will hasten that they have neither part nor lot there.

The true Church does not wish to eat her own bread; she wants the Bread from Heaven. She does not prefer her own theories, her own plans of salvation; she desires that which the Lord has provided "meat in due season," for "the Household of Faith." Neither does the espoused virgin of the Lord desire to wear her own apparel; for she has come to understand that her own righteousness is as filthy rags. (Isaiah 64:6.) More and more does she trust in the merit of her Redeemer. Therefore she is giving heed to the Message of the Lord sent forth to His Church of this Enoch—Revelation 3:14-22.

"He saw then she was thinking only of Robert Evans' death, and of what was in his mind. It is for the will, he said in a whisper, though he need not have been so whispered, for everyone in the neighborhood knew all about it. Read them Madoc. It is a cruel will, about not have made it for him, my dear. But his lot. Code of the Llewellyn Estates, said the lawyer between set teeth.

"It is quite right, she answered, as calmly that he stared. 'My grandfather explained it to me. I fully understood that. I was not to be in the will.'

"Mr. Hughes looked more and more puzzled. 'Oh, but,' he replied, 'it is not so bad as that. Your name is in the will. He has laid it upon those who get the land and money to provide for you—to settle a proper income upon you. And you may depend upon me for doing my best to have his wishes carried out, my dear.'

"The young lady turned very red, and raised her eyes sharply.

"'Who are to provide for me?' she asked.

"'The three families who divide the estate,' he said.

"'And are they obliged to do so?'

"'Well—no,' said he unwillingly. 'I am not sure that they are exactly obliged. But no doubt—'

"'If I owe very much,' she answered, taking him up with a smile. And then she shook hands with him and drove away, leaving him wondering at her courage.

"Well, you may suppose it was a deep house in which she came home. Gwen, British Hughes, the executor, had been before the Llewellyn Evanses in taking possession, so that, besides a lad or two in the kitchen, there were only Gwen Madoc and the servant there, and they seemed to have very little to tell her about the death. When she had heard what they had to say, and they were all on their way to bed, 'Gwen,' she said softly, 'I think I should like to see him.'

"'So you shall, to-morrow, honey,' answered the old woman. 'But do you know, honey, that he has left you nothing?' and she held up her candle suddenly, so as to throw the light on the girl's tired face.

"'Oh!' she answered, with a shudder, 'how can you talk about that now?' But presently she had another question ready. 'Have you seen Mr. Vernon since—since my grandfather's death, Gwen?' she asked timidly.

"'Yes, indeed, 'tach,' answered the housekeeper. 'I met him at the door of the shop this morning. I told him where you were, and that you would be back to-night. And about she will, moreover.'

"She girl stopped at her own door and snuffed her candle. Gwen Madoc went slowly up the next flight, creaking the steepness of the stairs. Then she turned to say good-night. The girl was at her side again, her eyes shining in the light of the candle.

"'Oh, Gwen,' she whispered breathlessly, 'didn't he say anything?'

"'No a word, 'tach,' answered the old woman, stroking her hair tenderly. 'He just went into the house in a hurry.'

"Miss Peggy went into her room much in the same way. No doubt she would be telling herself a dozen many times over before she slept that he would come and see her in the morning; and in the morning she would be saying, 'He will come in the afternoon;' and in the afternoon, 'He will come in the evening.' But evening came and darkness, and still he did not appear. Then she could endure it no longer. She let herself out of the front door, which there was no one by, to bar her herself, and with a shawl over her head ran all the way down to the shop. There was no light in his window upstairs, but at the back door stood Mrs. Campbell, looking after someone who had just left her.

"The girl came, strangely shrinking at the last moment, into the ring of light about the door. 'Why, Miss McNeill!' cried the other, starting

Mrs. Campbell, where is Mr. Vernmore?

And tenders called for construction.

"'I know no more than yourself, my dear,' said the good woman, relentlessly. 'He went from here yesterday—to take the train, I understood.'

"Yesterday! When! At what time, please?' asked the young lady. 'There was a fear which she had been putting from her all day. It was getting a footing now.

"'Well; it would be about midday. I know it was just after Dawn Madoc called in about the—'

"But the girl was gone. It was not to Mrs. Campbell she could make a moan. It was only the night wind that caught the 'Oh, cruel! cruel!' which broke from her as she went up the hill. Whether she slept that night at all I am not able to say. Only that when it was dawn she was out upon the cliffs, here very white and sad-looking. The fishermen who were up early, going out with the ebb, saw her at times walking fast and then standing still and looking seaward. But I do not know what she was thinking, only I should fancy that her guilt had a different cry for her now, and it is certain that when she had returned and came down into the parlor at Court for the funeral there were none of the Evanses could look her in the face with comfort.

"They were all there, of course. Mr. Llewelyn Evans—he was an elderly man, with a gray beard like a bird's nest and very thick lips—was sitting with his wife on the horsehair sofa. The Evans of Nant, who were young men with lank faces and black hair combed upward, were by the window. The Evan Bevans sat at the table; and there were others, besides Mr. Griffith Hughes, who was undoing some papers when she entered.

"He rose and shook hands with her, marking pitifully the dark, hollow rings under her eyes, and inwardly confirming his resolution to get her a substantial settlement. Then he hesitated, looking doubtfully at the others. 'We are going to read the will before the funeral instead of afterward' he said.

"'Oh!' she answered, taken aback—for in truth she had forgotten all about the will. 'I did not know. I will go and come back later, then.'

"'No, indeed' cried Mrs. Llewelyn Evans, 'you had better stop and hear the will—though no relation, to be sure.'

"But at that moment Gwen Madoc came in, and peered round with a look of importance. 'Maybe someone', she said in a low voice, 'would like to take a last look at the poor gentleman?'

"But no one moved. They sighed and shook their heads at one another as if they would like to do so—but no one stirred. They were anxious, you see, to hear the will. Only Peggy, who had turned to go out, said, 'Yes, Gwen,' softly, and slipped out with the old woman.

"'There is nothing to keep us now,' said Mr. Hughes, looking round. Then he took a closer grain. And everyone nodding assent the lawyer went on to read the will, which was not a long one. It was received with a murmur of satisfaction, and much use of pocket-handkerchiefs.

"'Very fair,' said Mr. Llewelyn Evans. 'He was a clever old man, our old friend.' All the leaders murmured after him 'Very fair' and it went round about the home-brewed, and Robert Evans' recipe for it. Then Llewelyn, who thought he ought to be taking the lead as host, said, 'I think it is about time to be going to church.'

"'There is one matter,' put in Mr. Griffith Hughes, 'which I think ought to be settled while we are all together. You see that there is a—a—what I call a charge on the three main portions of the property in favor of Miss McNeill.'

"'Indeed, but what is that you're saying?' cried Llewelyn sharply. 'Do you mean that there is a rent charge?'

"'No exactly a rent charge,' said the lawyer.

"'No!' cried Llewelyn with a twinkle in his eye. 'Nor any obligation in law, sir?'

"'Well,—no,' assented Mr. Hughes grudgingly.

"'Then,' said Llewelyn Evans, getting up and putting his hands in his pockets, while he winked at the others, 'we will talk of that another time.'

Work of Session Just Closed

Fifth Session of the Twelfth Parliament Was in Many Respects Notable

(From Montreal Gazette)

The Parliamentary session just concluded was in many respects memorable. Its principal features were:

The war budget brought down by Hon. W. T. White on February 11, one week after Parliament assembled.

The adoption of an address to His Majesty for an amendment to the British North America Act to increase the Senatorial representation of the four western provinces.

The investigation by a special Parliamentary committee into the quality of the boots supplied to the Canadian overseas troops.

The wide-open investigation by the committee on Public Accounts into the purchases of war supplies and equipment, followed by the declaration of the Prime Minister that prosecutions and punishment would ensue wherever fraud could be established.

The adoption of the bill preserving to all Canadian soldiers on active service the right and the opportunity of exercising their electoral franchise.

The war budget went into immediate effect in so far as the horizontal tariff increase was concerned, and the effect has already been seen in the turning of the tide of revenue. The special war taxes went into effect to-day.

It is the belief of the Government, as stated in the budget speech by statistics, that the measures taken will restore the revenue sufficiently to meet all the obligations for which this provision was made.

The Opposition fought the war budget. The so-called party truce was insufficient to bind the men who had claimed protection under it.

The address for an amendment to the British North American Act to extend the lines of the resolution which passed the House of Commons at the last regular session and was passed by the Senate. The amendment added by the Senate provided that the increase should not become effective until the end of the present Parliament. This amendment was not acceptable to the Government at that time, and under the conditions then existing and the requisition did not pass. The same amendment was added by the Senate to the resolution this year, and was reluctantly accepted by the Government so that a second clause, safeguarding Prince Edward Island's representation in the Commons, was added.

The resolution provides for an increase of nine in the Senatorial representation of the four western provinces which become a fourth Senatorial district.

Boot Inquiry.

The investigation by special Parliamentary committee into the quality of the boots supplied to the first contingent was a most thorough and comprehensive one; more than fifty sittings being held and a great many witnesses being examined under oath. The committee had before it as exhibits scores of new and old boots purchased for the Canadian troops, as well as the sample boot adopted by the department of Militia during the Borden administration. Boot experts, who were appointed unanimously by the committee, examined these boots and found that the percentage originally got up to sample was a fraction of one per cent., and that the sample was a good service-able boot.

The report of the committee vindicated the manufacturers of the boots and the efficiency of the Department of Militia in connection with the contracts.

A minority report put in by the Liberal members of the committee contained a condemnation of the boots on the ground indicated in the various rumors upon which the investigation was based. The debate which took place in the House of Commons on these reports ended without a division and with only five members of the Opposition in their favor.

The war contract investigations by the Public Accounts Committee and the proceedings which took place in the House following the report of the committee are too recent to require elaboration. The actual cash losses through irregularities disclosed in the investigation amounted, according to the estimate given by the Prime Minister lately, to a few hundreds of one per cent. on the expenditure of fifty million dollars.

Soldiers' Vote Bill.

The soldiers' vote bill was passed only during the last halfhour of the session to-day, and substantially in the form in which it left committee of the Commons. It provides for the preservation of the franchise to those electors who are on active service, extends the franchise to all other soldiers 21 years of age or over, and provides a method for the polling of these votes. This method requires the taking of the votes at the front, placing them under seal, forwarding them to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery and of subsequently including them in the votes polled in the Province indicated on the sealed envelopes. A residential qualification of thirty days is provided for those not otherwise on the voters' list.

The Senate amended this bill to provide for the appointment of six scrutineers to be selected three by the Government, and three by the Opposition and to be present in the person of deputies if necessary at the front.

Railway Legislation.

The completion of the National Transcontinental Railway and the unwillingness of the Grand Trunk Pacific to take over the line for operation under the terms of the contemplated legislation to provide for the acquisition of the Lake Superior branch by the Government as a necessary link in any scheme of Government operation. The debate on this legislation brought out the fact that the contract with the Grand Trunk Pacific made no provision for ascertaining when the line was completed, and also that the contract provided no security in the event of a default by the railway. The acquirement of the Superior Line, the key of the eastern section, will serve a double purpose as an integral part of the National Transcontinental and as a factor in compelling a satisfactory settlement on the part of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company to take over the line.

A bill was also passed to acquire certain branch lines for the Intercolonial Railway and to empower the Government to take over further ours if necessary.

Relief For The West

Two measures were assented to relieve the situation in the drought-stricken areas in the prairie provinces, seed grain being supplied at cost and relief provided where necessary.

Bills to amend the Dominion Elections Act and the Dominion Controverted Elections Act were passed. The former gives an extra hour at noon for workingmen to vote. The latter simplifies the procedure in the hearing of protests and does away with the necessity of the deputy which under the old law were possible.

A number of other measures, including many private bills, were passed.

What were in some respects the most important legislation of the session, the $100,000,000 war vote, went through almost without discussion, and made almost a record for the speed with which it did down the line.

WHAT DYSPEPTICS SHOULD EAT

A PHYSICIAN'S ADVICE

"Indigestion and practically all forms of stomach trouble are, also times out of ten, due to acidity; therefore stomach sufferers should, whenever possible avoid eating food that is acid in its nature, or which by chemical action in the stomach develops acidity. Unfortunately such a rule excludes many foods which are pleasant to the taste as well as nourishing and are the kinds of flesh and nerve building properties. This is the reason why dyspeptics and stomach sufferers are usually so thin, emaciated and lacking in that vital energy which can only come from a well fed body. For the benefit of those sufferers who have been obliged to exclude from their diet all starchy, sweet or fatty food, and are trying to keep up a miserable existence on glutten products, I would suggest that you should try a meal of any food or foods which you may indicate a preference for, and then after-wards a teaspoonful of bisurated magnesia in a little hot water. This will neutralize any acid which may be present, or which may be formed, and instead of the usual feeling of uneasiness and fullness, you will find that your food agrees with you perfectly. Bisurated magnesia is doubtless the best food corrective and antacid known. It has no direct action on the stomach, but by neutralizing the acidity of the food contents, and thus removing the source of the acid irritation which causes the delicate stomach lining. It does more than could possibly be done by any drug or medicine. As a physician, I believe in the use of medicine whenever un-necessary but I must admit that I cannot see the sense of dosing an inflamed and irritated stomach with drugs instead of getting rid of the acid—the cause of all the trouble. Get a little bisurated magnesia from your druggist and when you want to eat your meals take some of the bisurated magnesia as directed above, and see if I'm not right.

Our Own Point of View.

Why cannot the man see it is green? What a doit the fellow is not to perceive it is yellow! Big headed booby not to admit it is crimson—and so we are all at each other's throats about trifles, unconscious of the fact that we are all more or less wrong ourselves and are merely estimating matters from our own particular standpoint of prejudice. And this it is which prevents this world from ever being a happy one, for we each feel impelled to force others to see things even as we see them ourselves, and were it a impossible to do so, we ultimately get wild with the world.—Jeringham's Essays.

The Goats of Asia Minor.

The goat more than any other factor has assisted the rural inhabitants of Asia Minor to destroy the magnificent forests which once extended from Smyrna through to Konia, the ancient capital of Karamania. Not only have the peasants and nomads destroyed the timber for the sake of firewood, but they destroyed it also in order that their goats might obtain suitable pasture. And the goats by their lurn presented the new shoots ever after from replacing the trees which had been cut down.

Value of Politeness.

Hollow trees are always the stiffest, but the mightiest oak, it is found, can bend. The more exalted a man is by station the more powerful should he be by kindness. There is no policy like politeness, since a good name and reputation more often best tongue has failed. Politeness is also useful to inspire confidence in the timid and encourage the deserving. —London Strand Magazine.

Women Police.

Women police may shortly be appointed in New Zealand. It was recently decided that the Government of New Zealand should communicate with the Governments of countries in which women constables are employed, and, after considering the information obtained from this source, decide if the fair sex should be appointed to the New Zealand force.

A Composite Church.

While there are many beautiful churches, it is an old saying that the choir of Beauvais, the nave of Amiens, the portal of Rheims and the towers of Chartres would together make the loveliest church in the world. The glass in the great windows of nave and transept at Rheims was one of its greatest charms. Almost all of it was made at the time when such work was most beautiful.

Scared, but No Coward.

"You look scared, lieutenant," said the cocky, genteel fellow in the ranks to an intelligent young officer as the regiment was ordered to charge.

"I am scared," was the frank reply. "If you were half as scared as I am you would be on the run five miles in the rear."—Boston Transcript.

Wants English Canadian Language

Presbyterian and Methodist Ministers in Quebec Deal With Bi-Lingual Question

QUEBEC, April 20.—The agitation of the French Canadians against the attitude of the people of Ontario on the bilingual question has been assisted simultaneously in Presbyterian and Methodists pulpits of this city. Rev. S. T. Martin and Rev. T. Perry being the preachers. In view of the fact that this is a British colony, the Rev. Mr. Martin took as his postulate that the language of the country must be English always recognizing the rights accorded the French language by treaty and imperial legislation. In his scoring the bi-lingual schools on the matter of what he described as inefficiency and characterizing the operation of the neutral panel in Quebec province as unjust, the speaker summed up as follows:—"I have said that this is not a political question only, not a question of race and language, but one of religion and creeds. Behind the movement is the mighty force of the Roman Catholic Church."

Dog Swallows False Teeth

WANTAGH, L.I., April 20.—A French poodle belonging to Mrs. Kinna Seamon, of this village, has developed a peculiar appetite. His diet has been carefully guarded by his mistress, all luxuries being kept from him.

A few mornings ago the poodle's hunger took an unusual turn, and he swallowed the false teeth of his owner. Mrs. Seamon had placed the teeth on a window sill over her bed to sterilizing, and when she went down stairs in the morning she did not take them with her. Her husband, who was still asleep, was awakened by an unusual noise in time to see the poodle jump down from the stand and begin breakfasting on Mrs. Seamon's teeth. He called to his wife, but before she arrived the dog had swallowed them.

Mrs. Seamon has placed an order for a new set.

Recovered 800 Pounds of Copper
Was Bought By Kingston Firm in Regular Way, But Proved to be Stolen

KINGSTON, April 20.—Detective Monds of the C.P.R. and P. C. Bateson of the local police force this morning found at Susman & Cohen's about eight hundred pounds of copper which had been stolen from the C.P.R. shops at Peterboro some time ago. The railroad detectives have been searching for the metal throughout the province for a considerable length of time.

Susman & Cohen bought the copper in the regular way from a Peterboro firm, not knowing that they were buying stolen goods. The metal will be returned to Peterboro and it is likely that there will be some interesting developments in the case.

LITTLE GIRL HAD CHRONIC COUGH
Left from Whooping Cough—Was Terribly Rundown and Weak—Mother Tells How She Was Cured by Vinol.

Philadelphia, Pa.—"My little girl was thirteen years old when whooping cough which settled into a chronic cough. She was terribly rundown and had trouble. She had to stay at home from school while being treated by Mrs. H. Whyte, Philadelphia, Pa.

What Vinol did for this little girl it will do for others, for it is the healing, curative, tissue building influences of the medicinal elements of the extract of cod's livers aided by the blood making, strengthening properties of iron, and which makes Vinol so successful in such cases, and children like to take Vinol because it is pleasant, and it is much better for them than "cough medicine" which have no strengthening power. Vinol builds up the body and throws off the cough.

Remember, if Vinol fails to benefit, we return your money.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS.

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory and the North West Territories, and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Applications for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

Temperance In Illinois

CHICAGO, April 21.—Special—Illinois "dry" landed an old King Alcohol again. Almost one-half of the twenty-one incorporated cities and villages that balloted on the saloon issue yesterday voted to chase the demon, rum, from their borders. No new counties were added to the "entirely dry" column, but the "remonstrating territory" was extended until less than 200 townships in the State are now wet.

The most extensive success of the dry's was one in Dupage county, a neighbor of Cook county, of which Chicago is a part, where three out of four communities that had the question up went "dry."

The feminine vote was the deciding factor in at least two of the Dupage dry triumphs. In Naperville 476 women voted dry and 295 wet, while of the men 222 voted dry and 206 wet. The dry proposition carried by 117 votes through the strength rolled up by the feminine electors. The outcome was similar in West Chicago. The men voted for the saloons. They cast 277 dry ballots and 366 wet. The women were against the saloons almost two to one. They voted 365 dry and 197 wet, and the dram-shops were put out of commission by a majority of 29.

UNCLE SAM'S NAVAL EXPERT.

One Who Does Nothing but Play With Toy Battleships.

In a long, low building down near the river in Washington there is a man who plays with toy ships on a toy ocean. And as a result of his play he can foretell exactly how the big battleships of the United States navy will behave in a storm at sea, and he can predict to a ninety how much horsepower will be needed to drive the great transatlantic liners laden with their passengers and freight. He does this before even the keels of the ships have been laid down.

He is a naval constructor in the United States navy, and the toy ocean in which he works is the United States experimental model basin. The sheet of water in the basin is 600 feet long and fifty feet wide, with a maximum depth of fourteen feet.

But in this limited space the naval expert, working with a wave maker, a dynamometer, a towing bridge and other apparatus, can solve all the mechanical problems connected with the construction of a ship. He probably will when struck by giant waves and he horsepower needed in its trenches and engines to drive it through the water. He works with wooden models twenty feet long. None of them weigh 1,000 pounds, none of them more than 1,200. The other countries of the world use metallic models, but he works entirely with the miniature ships of wood.

The drawings and plans of the battleships to be built by Uncle Sam are turned over to the constructor by the navy department's bureau of construction and repair. In a little shop adjoining the building which covers the model basin the models are made and stained. Each of that, each weighing twenty-five pounds, are kept on hand to bring the model up to the corresponding weight of the big ships. The final tests are made in the "toy ocean" near by.—Popular Magazine.

UNSEEN COMPANIONS.

Familiars That Are Born and Dwell In Our Imaginations.

Real men and women are not the only people. Our minds are inhabited as truly as any other country. Every child has his lovable playmate, to whom he talks more freely than to his parents and with whom he goes upon strange adventures—a tiny Columbus, for whom he marks upon the surfaces of the bathtub to discover a new land, or a pet dog. The lonely boy may be slips through the garden gate unnoticed and unafraid, always before to be three grown. He does soon as escorted him into the wilderness which lies across the brook in the field or in the woods.

If you are the father or mother of this pet you never can understand that—how the timid baby who was never before out of your sight could have gone so far alone. Why, when you found him, stained with his travels, very tired, almost nodding, he was quite confident, preoccupied and bent upon a further pilgrimage into the unknown. It is because he was not alone. He was accompanied by another whom he knows better than he will ever know father or mother, one of those companions of his own fancy, about whom he never tells you or any one else.

These people grow up like other people. Little eight has his families and the young man his his "ideal," always a woman—not the one he marries nor even the one he might have married, but one whom he never saw in the flesh, a veiled and inscrutable presence who never frowns him. And when he grows old and the wife he did marry and the children and grandchildren are three quarters human, a Rebuke.

"Mary followed Edward," mumbled the high school girl who was trying to fix the sovereigns of England in her mind.

"What's that?" spoke up grandma, who had been dozing.

"Mary followed Edward."

"Then you keep away from Mary. I don't want you to go with them kind. Girls is getting too bold."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

TRACING COUNTERFEITERS.

The Secret Service Agents Have a Speedy Effective System.

Some time ago one of the local banks caught during the day a counterfeit ten dollar bill. It was such a clever counterfeit it would pass anybody but an expert. The next day two or fifteen more of the bad bills were found in the city.

Then the government's machinery to protect its currency began to work. But there was nothing mysterious about its working. In fact, the secret service here an official sat all afternoon smoking and looking at specimens of counterfeit currency. Huge clouds of smoke rose from his pipe. That kept up all day. The same detective tells who believes the secret service works in a mysterious way would have been distinctly disappointed. But at last the pipe dropped from the lips of the man sitting at the desk in the federal building with a whole pile of greenbacks in front of him. He took up two bills and compared them carefully. Then he studied them again, noting every little curve and characteristic mark. He stepped to the telephone and called the United States prison at Leavenworth.

"Was James Ward, alias Stewart, alias Nolan, in prison?

No. James of the two aliases had been out six months. Then telegrams were sent to certain other secret service cities. How they located James Ward the government keeps as a secret. Later the counterfeiter was arrested at Springfield, Ill., and his outfit for raising bills was found with him.

And the counterfeiter was caught and put out of business. How was it done? Simple enough—if you belong to the secret service. Every counterfeiter has some distinguishing characteristic in the work—some little curve or break in a line that gives him away. The secret service agent compares the new counterfeit with dozens of old counterfeits. At last he found the latest distinguishing characteristic. And the rest was easy.

James of the two aliases and a counterfeiting device had served three terms before. So there was plenty of his samples.—Kansas City Times.

Newfoundland Coal Mines.

Operations in the mines of Newfoundland which were largely suspended on the outbreak of the war, have been partly resumed. Five hundred men are now at work. Canadian manufacturing concerns have arranged for substantial shipments from the mines. This will increase the Government revenues through the payment of the export income tax. Increase the demand for labor, and may be regarded as indicative of improving labor conditions in the area concerned.

Good Wheat Surplus.

After allowing for the wheat needed for seeding and food requirements until next harvest, there is still in the country a surplus of 28,174,972 bushels of wheat or its equivalent in wheat flour, according to a statement issued by the Government recently.

Worried.

"That dog of Black's will be the death of me, barking at me every time I pass."

"But barking dogs don't bite."

"I know, but I'd rather be bitten at once than kept in suspense."—Philadelphia Ledger.

LET THERE BE HARMONY IN THINGS ESSENTIAL—LIBERTY IN THINGS NOT ESSENTIAL—CHARITY IN ALL.

Vol. 48 BELLEVILLE, ONTARIO, THURSDAY, APRIL 22, 1915. No. 288

Personal Liberty League Formed

Citizens of Hamilton to Oppose the Extreme Views on Temperance and Sunday Observance

A movement is being inaugurated at Hamilton which has for its object the organization of a Personal Liberty league to oppose extreme views and measures with regard to temperance and Sunday observance. Prohibition and puritanic Sabbatarianism are the enemies which the organizers of the league propose to fight. On the question of temperance the promoters of this new movement say: "We believe in temperance in all things, and in its promotion. We favor the license system under proper regulation and control, but we are opposed to any legislation which encroaches upon or curtails the purely personal liberties of our people."

The moderate drinkers of Hamilton have evidently been alarmed by the agitation for further restrictions in licensing matters.

Counsel to Probe Evidence In Supplies

OTTAWA, April 21.—W. D. Hogg, K.C., and M. J. O'Connor, K.C., of Ottawa, have been appointed by the Department of Justice as special counsel to examine the evidence given before the Committee of Public Accounts, and to determine in what cases prosecutions should be instituted.

The cases referred to the Justice Department were those relating to the supplies of field dressings, etc., by Ernest Fowell, of Ottawa; the supply of horseclaws through P. W. Ellis & Co. of Toronto, in respect to a certain number of which fraud is charged on the part of the seller, to the Ellis firm, and finally the horse-purchasing deals in Kings County, Nova Scotia.

If there is any evidence upon which prosecutions may be based it is the instruction of the Government that no time be lost in taking action and pushing the proceedings.

This is further evidence of the Government's determination to ferret out the evil doers and have them punished. What a contrast when compared with the covering up of frauds against the Government by the Laurierites of the past.

Form Corps of French Women

PARIS, April 21.—A regiment of Frenchwomen is being formed in Paris, under the supervision of the wife of an officer, Madame Arnaud. The Queen of the Belgians is to be asked to accept the honorary presidency of the regiment.

One of Madame Arnaud's feminine lieutenants states that the women volunteers will be commanded by officers of the army until their instruction is so far advanced that they may find officers among themselves. They will wear khaki uniforms and learn how to handle a rifle.

The regiment will be placed on a regular military footing, thus everyone wishing to join must first pass a medical examination. Already several companies have been formed.

HILL NUMBER SIXTY HELD BY THE ALLIES

Latest British Victory Important One in the Light of Results—Graphic Account of the Fighting Around Hill Number 60 in Which the Germans Losses are Heavy

NORTHERN FRANCE, April 22.—(Special.)—Although the brilliant and successful action southeast of Ypres, which ended in the capture of Hill No. 60, was a minor affair compared with the battle of Neuve Chapelle, its results promise to be even more far-reaching and important.

With Hill No. 60 in our hands the way is laid open for a damaging blow at the enemy. Hill No. 60 is a lowlying ridge, strongly entrenched and held by the enemy. It formed a screen and protection for the larger hill of Zand Poudre, five kilometres farther east, where the enemy's artillery is posted. Zand Poudre is the highest hill, commands the whole country, and is the key position in Belgian Flanders.

In October there were many desperate struggles for the possession of the hill of Zand Poudre. Those who held it were masters of the situation. It fell into the hands of the Germans, and they have retained possession of it ever since. On it were established batteries of light guns which reduced Ypres to ruins, and for months they held in check the British advance from Ypres towards Staain and Lille.

Now that Hill No. 60 is in our hands and the screen of trenches has been taken, the enemy's infantry has been broken and driven back, and the hill of Zand Poudre, deprived of its main protection, has become seriously exposed and the strain upon it might well reach the breaking point, for here the enemy has no salient like those at La Brassee and St. Mihiel. It is a concave line, with the hill of Zand Poudre in the centre of the curve.

Yard by yard we have approached the enemy's trenches on Hill Number 60. Finally a mine which was exploded on Sunday evening prepared the way for the attack on the hill. The enemy were supplies and mining, too. Our sappers beat them at the game, but it was a close thing for half an hour later, the enemy's sappers would have been prepared to explode a mine under our trenches.

Immediately afterwards the trenches on the hill were searched by shrapnel and thousands of shells from our massed guns, and then the infantry sprang from the trenches for the assault. The first line trenches were taken with little opposition, so great had been the effect of the mine explosion and artillery fire.

The second line was still held in great strength. The enemy, though surprised and rudely shaken, fought stubbornly, but our men were irresistible, and the whole hill was soon in our possession.

When darkness fell fresh troops were thrown into the captured trenches, and during the night strenuous efforts were made to repair the damage and strengthen and put them into a state of defence, but it was a terrible experience for our men. The enemy had the range on the hill and all through the night rained shell and shrapnel upon it with telling effect. Nor was there any respite when dawn came, for with its coming the Germans launched their first counter-attack.

Masses of grey-coated troops swarmed over the plain. Decimated by shrapnel, mowed down by machine gun and rifle fire, they reformed and continued their advance with desperate courage. More than once they reached our trenches at the foot of the hill. Then the bayonet was needed, as well as the rifle shot and machine gun fire, to keep them out. Time after time they returned to the charge. They charged furiously all day, but when night had again fallen the pluck and fine fighting qualities of our men had won the day. The enemy retreated, leaving heaps of dead and wounded in front of our lines. Our losses, too were heavy, but not as great as was at one time anticipated.

CAPT. T. WARREN REPORTED KILLED WHILE IN ACTION

TORONTO, April 22.—Special)—It was reported to the militia department in Ottawa late last night that Capt. Trumbull Warren of Toronto, who is an officer of the 15th Battalion, commanded by Lieut.-Col. John A. Currie, had been killed in action.

This message follows closely that received announcing the death of Capt. Dudley, also at the front of being wounded was adjutant of the 15th Battalion. The two were great friends. They enlisted together, fought together and only 48 hours after the death of one was made known, the name of the other was included in the casualty list.

Now is the time for all good men and women to remember that the early house fly should be swatted.

French Generals Are Replaced

Twenty-Nine Have Been Retired to Make Way for Younger and More Active Men

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, April 22.—The official journal contains the names of eleven more generals of divisions and eighteen brigade generals who have been retired to make way for younger and more active men.

The official report on the progress of hostilities this afternoon, contained nothing additional to what was in the announcement made last night.

Another Grit Lie Nailed

OTTAWA, April 21.—"I deny absolutely that I ever made the assertion that no goods could be sold to the Militia Department except through middlemen."

The above is the text of a cable received by the Minister of Militia from Surgeon-Gen. G. Carleton Jones, director of Medical Services, who is now in France. It refers to a statement made before the Public Accounts Committee by W. J. Shaver, (a Liberal) the Canadian representative of Bauer & Black, Chicago, who stated that when he went to sell field dressings direct to the department, Surgeon-Gen. Jones said this could not be done, but that it had to be through a middleman.

To suppose for a moment that a British officer, who was in Canada, doing special duty, would make such a statement, carries upon its face a falsehood. It is not difficult to find a reason for the statement.

Man Held For Woman's Death

MONTREAL, April 21.—Edmund Gaumond, held responsible for the death of Mrs. Florence Bourgeault by a coroner's jury, appeared before Recorder Lecocq charged with manslaughter, and after a lengthy enquiry the accused was remanded for voluntary statement on the 29th inst.

Gaumond is the young man who was found in the C.P.R. yard off St. Catherine street east a week ago with the almost lifeless body of the aged woman lying at his side. The evidence of Constables Lejeune and Senecal was to the effect that both constables had seen the woman alone a few minutes before she was discovered in a dying condition thirty feet from the roadway.

The accused was held responsible for the woman's death, which was caused by fright. The police are working on the theory that the unfortunate woman was seized by the accused, who was drunk, and, being alone at midnight, she was frightened to death.

Austria and Italy May Compromise

A Settlement is Stated to Have Been Reached Which Will Save Clash of Arms

(Canadian Press Special)

ROME, April 22.—The deadlock between Austria and Italy has been broken, and hopes of a settlement without a resort to arms have been revived. It is reasoned that either Austria or Italy has made some concessions.

BRITISH SUBMARINE SUNK IN NORTH SEA

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, April 22.—A brief official report today says French attacks in the wood of Ailly-le-Haut and near Hartmann's Weilerkopf have been repulsed, and to the south of La Basee canal and to the northwest of Arras German mining operations were successful.

The German Admiralty says that British submarines have been observed frequently of late in a German bay off the North Sea. One of them was sunk on April 17th, and the destruction of others is considered probable.

Seamen Strike at Glasgow

(Canadian Press Special)

GLASGOW, April 22.—Atlantic steamers are held up here by the strike of five hundred seamen for an increase of £1 per week in wages. An early settlement is probable.

Italy's Attitude Ominous Report

Germans and Austrians in Switzerland Called up—Steamships Required by Italy

GENEVA, April 22.—All German and Austrian subjects in Switzerland, even those who never did military service, were recalled yesterday by their respective governments.

The news reached Lugano this morning, but Italy's government had stopped trans-Atlantic sailings with the United States. Passengers who had purchased tickets had had their money returned. The Italian government, the report says, requires all steamships.

BRITISH TRANSPORT MANITOU NOT SUNK

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, April 22.—Mr. Thos. J. MacNamara, parliamentary secretary to the admiralty, replying to a question put by Admiral Lord Charles Beresford, explained in the House of Commons today the recent loss of more than fifty fires from the British transport Manitou, off the coast of China, in the Mediterranean. The transport was bearing troops when she was stopped by a Turkish torpedo boat, which ordered her to proceed. Soon after the ship and then fired two torpedoes, which missed the vessel. British torpedo boat destroyers pursued the Turkish warship and she was beached. In the meantime the lifeboats of the Manitou had upset, which resulted in the serious accident mentioned.

Mr. MacNamara did not explain why the Turks gave the British warning before firing the torpedoes.

FOREST FIRE IN BRITISH COLUMBIA

LAKESIDE HOME AT TORONTO ISLAND SWEPT BY FIRE

Damage to Sick Children's Summer Hospital Will Reach $125,000—Strong East Wind Kept Flames From Destroying Entire Property

TORONTO, April 22.—(Special)—Within an hour after fire was discovered in the Lakeside Home this morning the main building was in ashes, the fire having done damage amounting to $125,000. The tuberculosis, infectious and boys' surgical buildings, along with the caretaker's residence were saved. All the buildings were of frame construction.

At 1.18 o'clock this morning William Hamm, caretaker, saw a room in flames on the second story. He turned in the fire alarm, notified the soldiers and the police and got out some of the hospital boys, and soon had water playing on the building. The 150 soldiers gave every assistance in their power and A. Soloman sent the "Clark Bros." to the Island, bearing ten firemen from the Adelaide street fire hall. Commodore Williams was in charge of the boat.

The spring cleaning at the hospital was nearly finished. For three weeks back, men and women have been working in the building, doing painting, scrubbing and other work. Whether some of the workmen left a match, cigarett or other butt among some combustible material is not known. Douglas Davidson, secretary of the Lakeside Home, was on a boat this morning to account for the origin of the fire.

STRONG WIND.

When the fire was discovered there was a strong east wind blowing and as soon as the windows were broken in, thing could save the structure. The wind took the flames through the frame partitions as if they were paper. The buildings saved were to the north and west of the burned structure, and the officials stated this morning that their location was the only thing that saved them. The volunteer firemen had all the hose they could get playing on the fire, but without effect. Undoubtedly the new paint in the building aided the spread of the flames greatly.

WOMEN ESCAPED.

At one time it was thought that Wm. Hamm's (the caretaker's) residence would be destroyed, so a number of men helped to carry the furniture from the building. It was said that there were six women in the burning building but they all escaped.

The main building, which was erected in 1881, was valued at $75,000. It was remodelled and enlarged in 1892 and 1897. Last year John Ross Robertson, who built the home, erected the Heather Club pavilion for tuberculosis patients. The equipment in the building was valued at $20,000. There were no surgical instruments of great value destroyed. A good many of the instruments used to perform minor operations, and those performed there—were taken to the Hospital for Sick Children at the close of last season. The bedding, which was of some value, however, were lost, along with all the bedding and furniture.

The accumulation of the burned building was for about 125 children. Plans had already been made to move this number over about the middle of May. About the same number of patients can be accommodated in the three buildings not burned. The tuberculosis and boys' surgical buildings, though, are non-inflammable, and can only be used when the weather is fine.

Owing to the changes made in the rents in the vicinity of Long Island, where the Lakeside Home is, the Island had to be taken into the bay and travel a long course before it could reach the hospital. They had to travel at least three miles more than if the out which runs close to the hospital had been navigable. The time lost this way was costly.

BELLEVILLE

Mrs. Wilmot, the Misses Wilmot and Miss Pouton sang very acceptably at a concert in the Y.M.C.A. Barracks tent last evening. The event was most pleasing throughout.

Captain Caruthers has returned from Ottawa, bringing with him three excellent maps of the war zone, which detail the battle lines, and the countries through, which the conflict has been raging for the past months. They are considered the best yet published. Captain Caruthers is having them mounted on heavy canvas, and will keep them at headquarters for reference.

"Any complaints?" A hundred and fifty lusty voices shout a long-drawn "No-o-o." "God Save the King," three ringing cheers "For the ladies" and the eighth concert at the Y. M. C. A. Marquee of the 39th is over and the men file out to be ready for the "Last Post."

To the visitor, accustomed to having the word "concert" suggests rows of orderly seats with orderly individuals sitting thereon, and a platform which lifts into prominence the artists of the occasion, the scene last night was refreshingly novel. The audience lounged around in the nondescript furniture which fills the place, smoked if they liked and in all looked decidedly "at home." Some sat at the writing tables and between numbers wrote to someone who must not be forgotten. One or two, who had stayed by the cup too long, had found the music a sedative and were in shamefaced. Back in the corner the Y.M.C.A. manager efforts to enjoy the concert were interrupted with irritating frequency by men who wanted stamps or wanted to send money home. But the men were clearly most attentive; if all chairs did not face the front, all eyes did. At the piano sat Mrs. Wilmot and about her were gathered Miss Pouton, Miss Wilmot and Miss Alicia Wilmot.

The volume of clapping and shouting of "more" which followed each number clearly showed the soldiers appreciated the excellent entertainment given them and when after an hour and a half of continuous performance, Mrs. Wilmot suggested that "the boys might be getting tired," she was quickly convinced that the contrary was true by the enthusiastic exclamations of "No, you can't tire us!" The appreciation extended even beyond the marquee, to the guard house behind where the evening's crop of ill-at-ease were confined. For some reason or other though, this portion of the audience found it difficult to confine their applause to the intervals between the selections rendered, and once or twice they even positively stuck the expression on performance.

When informed that such a gathering is a daily occurrence at the Marquee, the visitor concluded that the Y.M.C.A. in providing such wholesome entertainment for the men, is rendering a very vital service.

KINGSTON

All the married men of "C" Battery are asked to hand in their marriage certificates, also birth certificates of children, (if any) for the purpose of having the same registered.

A cablegram has been received in Gananoque from Major Britton, of the 8th Field Battery, stating that his battery had been in action in the last big fight in France, and had passed through without any casualties.

All the military units in the city are making every preparation for the big assault-at-arms to be held in the Grand Opera House on the evening of April 29th. One half of the net proceeds will be given to the sock campaign of the Standard, the other half to the Red Cross Society.

Eighteen men of the 25th Battery were given a "Warmer" ride in the ridge school on Place d'Armes yesterday morning. This ride will be given every morning, and a road ride every afternoon for some time. The men are getting to be good riders, and the suggestion is that in the battery are found of the saddle.

The overseas batteries of this division will be brought to Barriefield camp on the 15th of next month. This will mean that the 25th and 26th Batteries, and the ammunition column now in Ottawa will come here. In addition to these there will be over 500 infantry recruits which have been recured all over the division, and these will probably be recruited to the strength of a battalion, and another regiment formed for overseas service. Other troops will be added to make the camp an important one.

RUSSIANS STRIKE ON THE ENEMY'S FLANK

Advance into Hungary Halted by Spring Thaw and Floods—Repulse Enemy's Attacks—Germans Suffer Heavy Losses on Stryi Munkacs Line

LONDON, April 22.—(Special.)—From official despatches it is evident that the Russian offensive in the Carpathians has been halted, and that the Muscovite forces are simply standing on the defensive, hurling back the attacks of the enemy. The menace to the Russian left has been definitely removed. The Austrians appear to have evacuated Bukowina, although there is no official confirmation of the report. With the roads impassable and rivers flooded, Russian commander evidently has decided to hold in check the big Austro-German army poured into the Carpathians, and to wear down the enemy by steady attrition until the movement arrives for a general advance. The Uszok Pass is still in possession of the enemy, according to an Austrian report.

In a cable despatch from Petrograd, Frederick Rennet, the correspondent of the London Daily News, says:

A counter-attack by Gen. Litzinger's Bavarian army against the Russian left wing in the Carpathians has now been definitely stopped. This attempted German advance northward has been the only serious threat the Russians have had to meet since they crossed the main ridge.

Generally the situation in the southern campaign is now very favorable to the Russians.

There are signs of discord between Gen. Litzinger and the Archduke Frederick; the nominal commander of the entire Austro-German combination. The Germans are ready to sacrifice Hungary, at least economically, by fighting a series of rearguard actions and drawing the Russians down towards the saddle Danube. This would relieve the Silesian flank, where great German forces are now being deployed from Cracow, chiefly along the Dunajec.

LINDSAY RAILROAD FIREMAN MEETS DEATH ON THE TRACK

LINDSAY, April 21.—W. E. Jones, a fireman on the Whitby mixed, No. 377, which left Lindsay this morning at 5.40 o'clock, was accidentally killed early this afternoon at Brooklyn.

Details of the accident are not to hand. In fact outside of a report that the unfortunate man fell off the tender the engine has been received by local Grand Trunk authorities as to the nature of the accident.

Fireman Jones is a married man, living with his wife and family of three small children on Georgina street, and has been a resident of Lindsay for some time past. He came here from Hastings and originally from England.

Engineer Thos. Wilkinson was at the throttle and it is thought that today's run was Fireman Jones' first one to Whitby.

It is surmised that the Whitby mixed was returning from Manilla to Whitby on the return trip.

Railway men and other citizens will be shocked to hear of the distressing accident, and will join in extending deep sympathy to the bereaved wife and family.

TWO YEARS AND NINE MONTHS IN THE KINGSTON PENITENTIARY

LINDSAY, April 22.—On Friday last Mr. E. Lloyd Jones, well known by the citizens of Lindsay and surrounding country for his connection with Western land deals was sentenced by His Honor Judge McGillivray to serve 2 years and 9 months in Kingston penitentiary. He was taken from Whitby to Kingston yesterday

Edward Lloyd Jones, who had been residing in Caledon, appeared in the court at Whitby some time ago on a charge of defrauding Wilbert St. John of Uxbridge, of the sum of $250 the purchase price of a Calcary farm.

Jones operated throughout the district of Canningston and Uxbridge, touring the country in a big motor car, as he did around Lindsay two years ago, and making a profound impression on certain easily influenced minds.

He was an expert salesman, smooth and apparently straight-forward in his dealings, and he easily ingratiated himself into the good will of his clients.

He claimed to have a number of C. P.R. lots for sale, and he had. He sold several, and the transaction went right through and the deeds delivered, all in proper shape. But he also sold some lots which he did not own, and one of these went to Wilbert St. John for $250.

St. John pressed for a delivery of the deed, but Jones always asked for a little more time to get it. Finally St. John sued him in the County Court for $250 and was given judgment, but Lloyd-Jones did not pay up.

The result was that St. John, despairing of getting back his money, brought the matter to the attention of the Crown, whereupon proceedings were taken against Jones. Col. J. E. Farewell, K.C., County Crown Attorney, taking hold of the case.

A. E. Christian, of Whitby representing Jones, endeavored to show that Jones did not intentionally sell a lot he did not own, but thought he was entitled to sell any lot for the C.P.R. He is not a well educated man, and his lack of education may have been partly responsible for his wrong-doing.

His Honor Judge McGillivray reserved judgment for a week, and Mr. Jones went back to the county gaol to wait.

Jones, it is understood, has a number of wealthy relatives, who were at one time desirous of settling his debts for him. However, when they found that in addition to St. John's $250 claim there were several others, which may later be involved in charges against him, they decided the amount required was too large; consequently Lloyd-Jones was left to face the course of the law.

U.S. Rejected British Protest

LONDON, April 21.—That the British Government had protested against the facilities accorded the German auxiliary cruiser Prinz Eitel Friedrich at Newport News was disclosed Monday in the House of Commons by Sir Edward Grey, the British foreign minister.

Commander Bellairs asked whether the permission to repair the cruiser "included the use of the port for cleaning her hull, thereby increasing her speed chances of escape from the British cruisers."

Sir Edward Grey said that before her internment the Eitel Friedrich had her bottom cleaned and coated with a non-fouling composition while in dry-dock at Newport News thus considerably increasing her speed.

"His Majesty's Government," Sir Edward continued, "protested on the ground an increase in her speed or radius of action, as the case might be, was an increase of her fighting force, such as Article 17 of The Hague Convention forbids. The United States considering that any damage sustained by the action of the sea and not inflicted by an enemy may be made good. They also called attention to the provision that the local authorities of neutral powers shall decide what repairs are necessary.

Declaring that her husband laid her husband laid her over his knee and spanked her with a slipper, Mrs. John P. Bebbel, New York has sued for a separation.

DEAD FRENCH AIRMEN FOUND NEAR MUELHAUSSEN

BERLIN, April 22.—(Special.)—The bodies of two French military aviators, one dressed in the uniform of a Lieutenant and the other in that or a Sergeant have been found in the wreckage of an aeroplane in the forest east of Muelhausen. The bodies bore a number of wounds made by shrapnel bullets. It is believed that the aviators were members of the aerial squadron which recently attacked the manoeuvre grounds at Nuremberg.

PICKED UP TORPEDO AND LOST SIX FINGERS

NORTH BAY, April 22.—(Special)—An Italian, Isaac Moroz, met with a peculiar accident today while walking on the C.P.R. tracks outside of the city limits. He picked up a torpedo used by trainmen in giving signals and started to dissect the article. In doing so the torpedo exploded, blowing off six of his fingers and badly lacerating his face. The man is now in the hospital undergoing treatment.

MORE GRAFT CHARGES.

It will probably be some years before we cease to hear charges of graft in Canada. They are always cropping up. It is one of the chief activities of Liberal Opposition to bring them forward. Nor is this surprising. During their tenure of office the baneful practice was so common that they not unnaturally assume that the present Government are guilty of the same malpractices. It is refreshing to find the Winnipeg Tribune denouncing graft and "corruption in politics. The chief owner, Mr. R. L. Richardson, was formerly a Liberal member of Parliament, and ran as a Laurier candidate in a Manitoba by-election several years ago. This is what the Winnipeg Tribune has to say concerning the Laurier administration:

"Laurier surrounded himself with a number of notoriously unscrupulous and dishonest men—bosses."

Such being the case it is not at all surprising that the Laurier party are always bringing forward charges of corruption and graft. The last to come under notice concerns the Manitoba Legislature. During the session charges were made by the Opposition that grave misconduct had occurred in connection with the letting and execution of contracts for legislative and departmental buildings for the province. They alleged that there was evidence to show that $800,000 had been lost to the province through the methods of the Government; and went to the extent of presenting a memorial to the Lieutenant-Governor, declaring that the investigation of the Public Accounts Committee had not been complete, and asking that prorogation should not be permitted till provision had been made for a Royal commission to make full enquiry. If such a commission had been insisted upon against the wishes of Ministers, they would, as a matter of honor, have been bound to resign. The Government agreed to the appointment of a commission perfectly independent of politics, so that a thorough investigation could be made. In this respect the Manitoba Government is following the example of the Federal and Ontario Parliaments; and it is this readiness to court full enquiry which disconcerts the Liberal party. The commission has been appointed, and consists of Chief Justice Mathers, Mr. Justice MacDonald, and Sir Hugh John MacDonald, Police Magistrate, of Winnipeg. A better selection of independent gentlemen of repute could not have been made; and the Liberal accusers will now have every opportunity to prove their case—if they can.

CURRENT COMMENT

Le Temps: "Canada has done her duty admirably. She has contributed both men and money to the war, and this will never be forgotten. To-day the best means to serve the cause of civilization is to develop our agricultural resources, and to assure the Allies of abundant supplies of foodstuffs, and to increase our industry and commerce."

The first war tax opposed in this country was one arising from a gift of three dreadnoughts.

Dr. Dernburg says now that the Germans don't want a world empire. The fox didn't want the grapes, either.

Montreal Mail: "It is evident from many sources that the British people will not be driven into prohibition. The nation is making up its mind, slowly as usual."

The Kansas City police have in custody a man who, seemingly, believes that the war can be ended by showing up those who supply the Allies with foods. No wonder if he has ever been to Frankford.

May 15th is the date set for the opening of the Erie and Oswego canals. The fact that about 100 miles of the new barge canal will be put in use this spring will make a failure to provide money for completing it all the more exasperating.

Grafting at the expense of the Government in connection with the supplying of war materials is reported in the Old Country, and already the scandals are beginning to bud forth. The honest war contractor, now as in the past, does business everywhere.

Montreal Gazette: "Prominent members of Tammany Hall characterize as preposterous the report that the name of the organization is to be changed. They would be sorry none of Boss Wigwam's political enemies. It is Tammany's methods that they call government, not its name."

Buffalo Express: "A Berlin dispatch indicates that Germany will declare the sinking of the Dutch steamer Medea a mistake and will apologize and pay an indemnity. So Germany is not trying to pick a quarrel with Holland, after all! But yesterday another Dutch ship was sunk by striking a mine."

Germany is now said to be collecting old rubber, and it is doing it with German thoroughness. It is to be hoped that some of the frugality, and some of the efficiency, taught to the world by this war will be retained by the world after the war is past. The experiment of making a substitute for butter from sunflowers is hardly likely to be copied in Canada.

The daughter-in-law of Jesse James, the famous outlaw, has applied for a divorce in Los Angeles. She will have to get witnesses to corroborate her charges, however, or wait seven years to see if he turns up. She married him in 1910, and has not seen him since her little girl was born. Evidently the art of hiding a trail was not lost a generation ago, nor cowardly conduct either.

Arrangements are being made in Great Britain to call back from the front to the factories men skilled in the work of making materials of war. The development of the art of fighting battles has made the demand for war supplies greater than even soldiers and related units, and only skilled crafts-men can do the work of production. The feeling now in the factory is behind the fighting man in the trench in an unusual way in this war.

In a debate in the British House of Commons yesterday on the subject of the use by members of intoxicating beverages, Sir Arthur Markham declared that in the smoking room of the House of Commons in two days more than four shillings' worth of whiskey had been consumed. Whew, with 670 men in its membership, the House of Commons shows such a voluntaristic-made record, there is no need of a law to restrict the parliamentary traffic on too cheering beverages.

A cat-o'-nine tails has been installed in the sheriff's office at Walkerton and will be used for the first time on an Indian wifebeater near Wiarton.

A Million Corns
Went Last Month

Last month, a million corns were ended in this easy, simple way. And every month a million more go like them.

To each corn was applied a little Blue-jay plaster. Because the corn pain ended there.

Then the wax in the plaster—the B & B wax—gently freed the corn. For 48 hours or more the corn came out, without any pain or soreness. A few stubborn corns required another plaster.

That's the story of some seventy million corns ended by this invention. It will be the story of your corns in 48 hours if you treat them in this scientific way. Your friends will testify to that.

If you don't do this, in all, probably, those corns will stay for years.

THE HON. FRANK OLIVER

Charged With Retaining Royalties Belonging to the Crown

The Hon. Frank Oliver, late Minister of the Interior in the Laurier Cabinet, and one of the most blatant accusers of wrong doing, by his political opponents, was placed upon the grid-iron the other day in the House of Commons by the Hon. Mr. Roche, at present Oliver's successor as Minister of Interior, and by the Solicitor-General, Hon. Mr. Meighen, for gross malfeasance of office in retaining royalties paid by miners of coal.

This castigation Mr. Oliver brought upon himself by moving an adjournment of the House for the purpose of explaining certain charges made against him by Mr. Ferguson, a Commissioner appointed by the present Government to inquire into certain dealings in Crown lands and coal mines, in the Nor'west by members of the late Government, which inquiries were "blocked" by certain members of the Public Accounts Committee, when, during the reign of Laurierism, attempts were made to bring them to light.

After an impotent attempt by Mr. Oliver to explain his position and justify his administration of the Interior Department, the Hon. Dr. Roche, Minister of Interior, rose and charged him directly with being concerned in the withholding from the public treasury of proceeds from the disposal of mining rights on the lands owned by him near Edmonton. Dr. Roche further charged that certain public lands in Alberta had, as a result of manipulation, eventually come into his own possession, and $25,000 borrowed by mortgage thereon.

To these charges M. Oliver made no reply. All night he remained in his seat and heard the charges driven home with merciless force by Hon. Arthur Meighen and R. B. Bennett, M.P. for Calgary, who repeatedly invited him to resign from public life.

Dr. Roche further charged that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company had, while it was obtaining grants and large concessions in their railway enterprises, subscribed $15,000 in aid of the reorganizing of the Edmonton Bulletin Printing Company, a newspaper owned and published by the Hon. Frank Oliver, who at the time of such subscription for stock, was Minister of the Interior, from which department the said Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company was receiving favors and seeking more. This was not denied by Mr. Oliver, contending that such stock taking did not in any way influence him in his dealings with the company as a Minister of the Crown. Sceptical people will, however, be themselves what influenced the Grand Trunk Pacific Company to subscribe for $15,000 stock in a newspaper owned and published by a member of the Laurier Government, who held an important portfolio of a department of the Government with which the Railway Company was constantly dealing? One thing is certain, no evidence has been given, nor has any discovery been made, that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company invested in newspaper stock of opposition tendency. The question answers itself.

It is worthy of record that Mr. Oliver acknowledged that the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company subscribed for and paid $15,000 for stock in his newspaper, and that he retained the amount of money received by him as royalty upon the coal mined in his mine, which royalty belonged to the Government, and which has not yet, so far as is known, been refunded. His explanation of this transaction, published over his own signature after the prorogation of Parliament, is that "At that time it was my belief, although clearly I was in error, that I owned the coal as well as the surface rights."

Poor innocent unsophisticated Frank Oliver! Who would, who knows him, have given him credit for such simplicity? It may well be asked, Why was not the royalty, which had been in his pocket so long, refunded, when his attention was called to its illegal retention? This question has not satisfactorily appeared.

The following extract from the report of the debate in the House of Commons more fully explains the transaction:

Doctor Roche declared that if the Government desired to go deeper into the transaction of the department under the Liberal administration, it was only necessary to peruse the files. They would show that in 1906 Mr. Oliver took a homestead within two miles of the city of Edmonton. Not being able, for various reasons, to perform the homestead duties, Mr. Oliver purchased the land at the rate of $1.00 per acre. It was distinctly printed on the entry that the coal and mining rights were reserved to the Crown. Yet, in 1906, Mr. Oliver leased the mineral rights to a man named Willis, who had paid royalty to Mr. Oliver amounting to thousands of dollars. A few months after the change of Government, Mr. Oliver applied to the department for a lease of the mining rights in his own name and got it. He then issued a sub-lease to Willis. No restitution of the royalties collected from Willis had ever been made to the Government.

Mr. Oliver—If Willis stated that he paid me royalties amounting to $1,000, he made a statement not in accordance with the facts.

Doctor Roche—Then the hon. member admits that he got some royalties Mr. Oliver—Yes.

Doctor Roche—Then it is simply a question of amount.

Mr. Oliver agreed.

Dr. Roche produced a number of receipts for royalties in the forms of letters from Mr. Oliver to Mr. Willis as follows: January 2, 1908, in which Oliver acknowledged the receipt of $1,345.; and on April 10th, $1,200., Mr. Oliver being royalty for the month of February.

Mr. Roche stated that he had a statement from Mr. Willis to the effect that he had paid royalty to Mr. Oliver on 19,000 tons of coal at the rate of 7c. per ton. This would amount to about $1,330. This made several cheques, he said, that Mr. Oliver had accepted royalties on land which he had no right to lease to Mr. Willis. Upon further reflection he would probably come to the conclusion that he had been dealing in his dirty way in the land and taken royalties therefrom when he was not the owner of the same.

Is this the only transaction in which the Hon. Frank Oliver, late Minister of Interior, conspicuously shines? His light must not be hid under a bushel measure, hence we must return to the subject in order that the voters and taxpayers of the Dominion may learn how their affairs have, under Laurierism, been administered by howlers of purity in politics.

Agricultural News

AN UP-TO-DATE STABLE

A modern and conveniently equipped stable and barn to be seen in the county of Middlesex is that owned by Robert Baty. It was our privilege last summer to attend the raising of the barn upon a new foundation and not long since we again visited the stable after it had been thoroughly equipped. Among special features is the rock-brick flooring in the majority of the cosy stalls. Mr. Baty has found that the cattle do not slip on such a floor and that it is warmer than cement. The stable is well lighted. On the east side are nine windows, each window containing six pans of 10x12 glass. On account of the aproach and drive barn the west side would allow for only seven windows and these were installed similar in size to those on the east side. The windows are so hinged that ventilation is provided by their opening and closing. The manure shed is convenient and very complete. The bottom is concrete so not a particle of solid or liquid manure is lost. If necessary a team can be driven through the entire length of the barn behind the cattle and into the manure shed but the manure can be hauled out of the shed at the north end. The practice here is to haul out the manure every five weeks. Adjoining this shed are four hog pens and the swine are watered from a trough. Outside feeder chutes are conveniently arranged and all the grain is taken from bogeys in the stable. The chop house is really under the approach and beyond is a quantity of roots are stored. The height of the stable is nine feet clear and the floor is raised a foot higher to allow for the floor. Cement floors and passageways, steel stanchions and mangers, water bowls and clean lumber have been combined into a modern, convenient and sanitary stable. At the end of the hog pens is a snug harness room holds the equipment and everything is in its place. A silo is an adjunct of the stable and its equipment is not an unimportant part at all.

The Patricia's Late Colonel

Major Hamilton Gault Pays Generous Tribute to the Late Colonel Farquhar

OTTAWA, April 22—Major Hamilton Gault, of the P. P. C. L. I., writing to General Hughes from London, where he is confined to a hospital with wounds received in action, says of Colonel Farquhar: "He so dominated us in this military genius, besides being universally loved by officers and men, that his loss to the battalion is one that never can be replaced.

"We all felt that he was so indispensable as to be immune, that anything could ever be allowed to happen to him.

Major Gault states that the question of the command of the battalion has been admirably settled in the appointment of Captain Bulley.

ROLL THE MEADOWS

Rolling meadows in the spring is always a safe practice. The work should be done as soon as the land will bear the horses without it being punched and broken. In many sections it may be a little late now but in most localities there is still time to roll meadows. If the land is solid it might be well to leave the rolling until the sod was drying up after a spring rain. Rolling supresses the soil around the roots and is particularly valuable on the new seeds. It is also very beneficial on old meadows. If you have the seed sprinkled over it serves to squeeze down all coal stones out of the way of the mowing machine and thus means a saving on machinery, particularly mower knives which are very often ruined by coming in contact with stones. If the land is somewhat inclined to the south, the stones of the rapidly running knife. Rolling makes smooth cutting. Try it this season.

The Alsike Situation.

Ontario alsike seed is usually sold in the spring of the year by the farmers to the local dealers in their respective districts. The demand from this source is now materially reduced because of war conditions. Ontario growers should note that the present stability of prices is due to the much smaller production in the province this season. A big crop this year with a continued war conditions might cause a heavy drop in the market. Ontario alsike growers would be well advised to save seed only from specially clean fields.

WOMAN'S BEST MEDICINE

Mrs. Kelly Advises all Women to Take "Fruit-a-Tives"

HAGERSVILLE, ONT., Aug. 26th, 1913.

"I can highly recommend "Fruit-a-tives" because they did me an awful lot of good and I cannot speak too highly about them. About four years ago I commenced taking "Fruit-a-tives" for a general break-down and they did me a world of good. We bought a good many dollar's worth, but it was money well spent because they did all that you claim for them. Their action is so pleasant, compared with other laxatives, and I found only pleasure, as well as health, in taking them. They seemed to me to be particularly suited to women, on account of their mild and gentle action, and I trust that some other women may start taking "Fruit-a-tives" after reading my letter, and if they do, I am satisfied the result will be the same as in my own case".

MRS. W. H. KELLY

"Fruit-a-tives" are sold by all dealers at 50c. a box, or 6 for $2.50, trial size, 25c, or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

Swan Lake Ablaze, Half Of Town Gone

Four Stores, Postoffice, Government Elevator, all Destroyed

SWAN LAKE, Man., April 21.—The worst fire in the history of Swan Lake broke out early yesterday and wiped out four stores, the post office, the "Echo" printing plant and the Government elevator.

The fire started from a bonfire at the back of W. W. Shirley's bakery, which was completely gutted. It then destroyed Mrs. Couche's restaurant, an empty store, the post office, the B. J. Halleman general store and the Echo newspaper office. The flames then leaped Main street and gutted the Government elevator.

The total loss is estimated at $50,000 with the following insurance:

W. W. Shirley, $600; P. J. Halleman, $8,000; the "Echo" office, $800; Mrs. Couche, no insurance; the post office unknown.

Suspended Sentence On Italian Girl

TORONTO, April 21.—After Mr. Justice Clute had let Felicia da Volpe off on suspended sentence for wounding Heather-in-law, Leonard Lisel, he added that he hoped that if the Crown could find grounds in the evidence for prosecution against the complainant they would bring him to trial. Lisel, he said, had offended against society in an outrageous way.

Mr. W. C. Mikel, K.C., Crown counsel, promised to take any steps to that end that lay in his power. His Lordship suggested that a copy of the evidence be brought to the attention of the Attorney General's Department.

Mr. Justice Clute, before he gave judgment, gave reasons for his actions with great exactness. He reviewed the evidence minutely. Lisel, his father-in-law, by his improper attentions, by his infamous and slanderous allegations against her character, which he believed to have minister motives, had given her the strongest possible reasons for anger.

"The instrument he wrote and admitted to be false, were perfectly shameless. No woman could bear of them without the most violent indignation," his Lordship said he. "On the evening in question by offering to furnish her with a room in his house he had added insult to injury. At that moment you slashed. There could have been no greater provocation than you were suffering at that moment."

On the other hand his Lordship said he whished to be very clearly understood among Felicia's people that the punishment of offences rested with the law and not the individual. As she by had been vindicated by the verdict of the jury, with which he thoroughly agreed, he would let her out on suspended sentence and on bond of $500 from herself and her father.

COL. J. A. CURRIE, M.P. DESCRIBES FIGHTING

OTTAWA, April 21.—A letter from Lt.-Col. J. A. Currie, M.P. was received here today and contains some thrilling references to the terrific fight along the Canadian front.

He wrote on April 6th, when the Canadians were resting a few miles behind the firing line.

While they were in the trenches, he said, the fighting was incessant, shells by day and rifle fire at night. The fight at Neuve Chapelle was very hot. The Canadians were not in the thick of it but the rifle and artillery fire sounded like Niagara. The Canadian artillery were doing good shooting. He adds that the Canadian troops would as soon trust their own artillery to shoot over their heads as some of the British batteries.

Was Only Canadian M.P. There

Even back from the trenches as they went to sleep at night they could hear the patter of German bullets against the walls of the building. At the time of writing Col. Currie was the only Canadian M.P. in the trenches.

His own regiment, the 48th Highlanders, from Toronto, had only lost two killed and a number of wounded, but some of the British regiments during the same period lost 50 to 60 killed.

FOUGHT TO LAST DITCH

"Joe" Martin's Vancouver Journal Suspends Publication

VANCOUVER, B.C., April 21—The Vancouver Journal, fighting Joe Martin's newspaper, issued a notice this afternoon that it was suspending for financial reasons. The career of the paper was a short and merry one. The entire back page was taken up everyday with editorials written by Mr. Martin who made life pretty interesting for his personal and political adversaries, of whom he had many. Lately he had been waging an editorial war with the Sun, the Liberal paper of Vancouver, and wound up his campaign today by quoting verbatim a letter which was given to Mr. Martin by Sir Wilfrid Laurier last October questioning his co-operation in political matters in the West.

Vancouver newspaper readers are now looking for the appearance of Mayor Taylor's new Globe. That paper is to come out in a month it is said. The mayor recently relinquished control of the World newspaper.

BOY KILLED BY BROKEN LIVE WIRE

MONTREAL, April 21.—The body of a thirteen year old boy was found electrocuted behind a fence on the banks of the Lachine canal near St. Gabriel locks, at Shearer street, shortly before noon yesterday. He was found by some men who had come to repair a broken live wire.

The police of No. 9 Station investigated the case and found the boy's right hand burned to the bone, evidently from having touched the wire which carried a high current of electricity.

At the morgue the body was identified as that of John Eros Enack, aged thirteen years of 17 Shearer street. An inquest will be held this morning.

"The French-Canadian company, 250 strong, forming part of our brigade, is very much admired by all those around. In all the engagements they have shown the utmost bravery.

Historic Gong Now in Toronto

It Rang the Knell of ex-Champion Jack Johnson

TORONTO, April 21.—The gong that summoned combatants at the Edward Hotel. It was brought here by accident from Havana at the bottom of a trunk belonging to Mr. Fred Ware, whose name may remember to have seen on "Keystone" comedy films or "Chocolate Soldier" bills.)

That very gong, or rather the absence of the gong, says he, delayed the fight for half an hour. When Johnson and Willard were ready it was found that there was no gong. The crowds, and the fighters, and thousands of readers and tens of thousands of readers in America and Europe, and in various scattered parts of the globe sufficiently civilized to be interested in prize fighting, all had to wait while an automobile was sent to fetch this gong from Havana. "Stopped the round were counted on it, and finally that fateful "ten" rang from it as the referee's hand fell for the last time. Yet it looks just an ordinary gong.

PLANTING BACKYARDS

Vegetable Garden Hints for Dwellers in the City

In view of the fact that the Civic Improvement League is offering diplomas of merit and money prizes to all who have planted to get pleasing gardens established on ground hitherto unused in the city The Gazette has been send a series of suggestions by which the unlovely backyard can be transformed into a healthy source for needed vegetable and valuable source of flowers. The advice given is that a pathway thirty inches wide should be made down the yard to the back lane, if there is none. After the yard has first been carefully cleaned. With boards at the side, nailed to pegs driven into the ground, the pathway can be filled with ashes to a depth of two inches. Outside of the pathway, the advice is to mark off four feet wide, with walks one foot wide between. After the soil is worked into a fine texture, the seeds can be sown. Near the lane entrance a bed of sweet peas can be sown in shallow drills, one inch apart, and two inches deep, and covered. In the next bed garden peas could be laid in the same way.

Further advice is given as follows for the successive beds:

"Tomatoes—Get a dozen good plants ready for planting out and space them out at regular intervals about 12 inches apart, and stalk them up as they grow. When three fruit branches appear, pinch off the main leader.

"Celery—Sow seed in shallow drills 12 inches apart and cover up. Do not earth up celery. Let it grow till the plants are matured, then lay boards against them nearly to the top. It will blanch itself in this way free from disease and from spots.

"Lettuce—Sow in shallow drills 5 inches apart and drop in the seeds one-half inch from each other. Gather the earth over them. Take a flat piece of board, pr it gently down over the bed and trample upon it. Repeat till all parts of the bed are flat. This presses the seed into the soil and facilitates germination.

"Raddish—Same process as in lettuce, but 6 inches apart.

"Beets—Same as above.

"Onions—Sow in drills 12 inches apart, and flatten down as in lettuce. When the plants are strong enough, thin out to 3 or 4 inches apart.

"Garden Cress—Sow in drills or wood cases, in drills, 3 inches apart.

"Parsley—Method of treatment much as above, but soak the seeds five hours in warm water before sowing. Plant in drills 12 inches apart and thin out the plants to 3 inches apart afterwards."

More Wheat Now Than a Year Ago

Statement Showing Canada Is In No Danger Over Exporting Food Supply

OTTAWA, April 21.—That Canada has more wheat on hand now than she had at this time last year and is apparently in no danger of over exportation of her food supplies is indicated in figures issued by the Trade and Commerce Department today. A statement as to the quantity of wheat in store at all points of elevators in the Dominion and afloat on April 11 shows that the total is 14,166,733 bushels as compared with 12,342,150 on the same date a year ago. There is less of other kinds of grain in store, however, the total figures for all kinds of grain in 1915 being 21,870,293, as compared with 26,773,751 bushels in 1914.

In view of this fact that the 1915 crop was an exceptionally heavy one, this is considered a very good showing. It is taken as indicating that fears expressed in Parliament last session that this country would soon suffer a shortage of wheat as a result of heavy exports during the war, were not well founded, and that the Government did the right thing when it refused to limit exports or fix prices.

According to Hon. Robert Rogers, minister of public works, who returned today from the West, prospects are bright for a record crop in the Prairie Provinces this year. He expects that Canadian farmers will be able to demonstrate that they have lived up to the "patriotism and production" ideal.

Offer to Swallow Diphtheria Germs

Dr. Hasting is the Recipient of an Unique Wager

TORONTO, April 21.—The champion of "raw" or unpasteurized milk in Toronto, Dr. J. B. Fraser, "came back" with a very sensational reply to Dr. Hastings' report on the pasteurization theory today at the meeting of the Board of Health.

This was none other than an offer to disprove the theories of the Medical Officer of Health by himself swallowing a large dose of diphteria germs to see whether or not the disease can be contracted thus.

If he contracts the disease, he offers to pay $50 to the Red Cross Society, but if he comes through without an attack of diphtheria Dr. Hastings is to pay that sum to the society.

If Dr. Hastings declines the offer is open to any other germ theorist in the city.

NEW PLAN TO EVADE WAR STAMP TAX

Several Toronto Firms Said to be Getting Printing Done in States

TORONTO, April 21.—Several Toronto business houses have struck upon a plan to evade payment of the war tax on mail matters, such as circulars, catalogues and pamphlets. If one should get a catalogue or circular from a Toronto business house which had been posted in Buffalo or New York or Cleveland, the surprise should be felt because the plan consists in having such printed matter prepared and mailed from an American city. According to information secured by a Toronto printing house, which is vitally interested in the new situation, at least several firms here have decided to have their work done in the States. These concerns have been in the habit of sending out tens of thousands of circulars at regular intervals and by having the matter mailed in the States no less than $100 is saved on each 10,000 circulars distributed.

The plan is not practical, however, for distribution of mail matter in Toronto, because advantage cannot be taken of the local mailing rate of one cent per letter, unless the circulars are sent from the States in unsealed envelopes, when the rate would be the same, but without the additional cost of the war tax.

The printed matter is not prepared in Toronto because the duty and freight charges on the pamphlets or circulars sent across the line would be heavy.

American Reply To German Note

WASHINGTON April 21.—The reply of the United States to the recent memorandum from Count Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, dealing with exportation of arms to the allies will be delivered today to the German Embassy. Secretary Bryan made this announcement today but would not discuss the details of the reply.

Secretary Bryan declined to say whether the reply accepted the Ambassador's memorandum as from the German Government or as an expression of the Count Bernstorff personal views. The reply, however, gives it official recognition leaving the question of its authority between the Ambassador and his Government.

Regarding the Ambassador's protest against the sale of arms and munitions to the allies, it is understood that the reply is based largely upon statements already made by President Wilson in response to appeals from various pepee organizations and that it declares any attempt at this stage of the war to prohibit the sale of arms and ammunition to any applicant would constitute a real breach of neutrality. The note is said to hold that it is Germany's misfortune if she is unable to convey arms to her home ports, while the market is open to her, and nally that there is no possible application in the present conditions of the peculiar legislation and rules made in the case of Mexico.

Moving men are beginning to sit up and take notice.

No Great Love For America

German Papers Would Like to See Hostilities Between U. S. A. and Japan

BERLIN, April 22.—The Post, in an editorial article entitled "The American troubles, says: "America must either give Japan a free hand in China, or demand that Japan leave Mexico. This would mean war. Germany would view such a war with mixed feelings. While we do not desire a victory of the yellow race over the white, nevertheless America has no claim to the love or respect of the Germans. We would be satisfied to know that this country, which first became a state at an expenditure of German blood and German energy, should, from its present condition of unsympathetic contentment, come to know the bitter bitterness of war."

AVIATION SCHOOL AT TORONTO NOW

TORONTO, April 21.—It is officially announced that a Government school of aviation is to be immediately opened in Toronto. The Department of Naval Service has arranged with the British Admiralty for the training of candidates in Canada for the Royal Naval Air Service. Candidates will receive instructions at Mr. J. A. D. McCurdy's flying school in this city.

THE BODY SNATCHERS OF CLOVER COURT

"But Mr. Hughes said, 'that the will of kind man, and very anxious to do the best for the girl, just between you and me and the lamp-post.' Mr. Hughes looking red. 'You will observe, if you please, Mr. Evans, that the testator has not left me anything,' he says. 'Actually nothing.' So that, as sole executor, it is my duty to ask you to state your intentions now.'

"Well, indeed, then," said Llewellyn, changing his face to a kind of blank. "I have no intentions. I think that the family has done more than enough for the girl already."

"And he would, say so, otherwise. But just as to my purpose then, the lawyer looked at Mrs. Llewellyn. She was examining the furniture, and feeling the stuffing of the sofa, and did not seem to hear. He could make nothing of the three Evanses, Nant. They all cried, 'Yes, indeed!' to what Llewellyn said. Only the Miss Evanses remained, and he turned to them in despair.

"'I am sure,' he said, addressing himself to them, 'that you will do something to carry out the testator's wishes? Your share under the will, Mr. Bevan will amount to three hundred a year, a very pretty little bit of pocket-money for two young ladies. Now, nothing—no relations, no home. May I take it that you will sufficiently fill up nothing for your own life? It need only be for her life.'

"Mr. Bevan objected under his spread. 'He was married it. Certainly he did,' Mr. Hughes. It it were twenty months now, since for all, or even twenty-five—and Llewellyn' said my nephew would say the same—I think we might manage that!'

"But Llewellyn shook his head obstinately. 'I have said it, there is no fettered, and I am a man of my word,' he answered. 'Let the girl go out to service. It is what we have always wanted her to do. Here are my nephews. They won't mind a young housekeeper.'

"Well, they all laughed at this except Mr. Hughes, who gathered up his papers looking very black, and not thinking of future clients. Llewellyn, however, did not care a bit for that, but walked to the bell, insisted on-like, and rang it. 'Tell the gentlemen,' he said to the servant, what we are ready.'

"It was as if they were followed almost immediately by an outcry overhead and a quick running upon the stairs. The heated looked uneasily-fortably at the carpet. The lawyer was blacker than before. He said to himself, 'Now that poor child has fainted.' The coming and went to and some minutes. Then the door was opened, not by the undertaker, but by Gwen Madoc. The mourners rose with a slight relief in their surprise she passed by even Llewellyn, and with a frightened face walked across to the lawyer. She whispered something in his ear.

"'What!' he cried, starting back a pace from her, and speaking so that the others at the table rattled again. 'Do you know what you are saying, woman?'

"'It is true,' she answered, half crying, 'and no fault indeed of mine neither.'

"Gwen added more in quick, short sentences, which the family, strain their ears as they might, could not overhear.

"'I will come! I will come!' cried the lawyer. He waved his hand to them as a sign to make room for her to pass and he turned to them, with a queer look upon his face; it was not triumph altogether, for there was discomfiture and apprehension in it as well. 'You will please,' he said, 'that I am as much taken aback as yourselves—that till this moment I have been in the dark as to the dark as anyone. It seems—so I am told—that our old friend is not dead.'

"'What!' cried Llewellyn in his turn. 'What do you mean?' and he raised his black-gloved hands as in refutation.

"'What I say,' replied Mr. Hughes patiently. 'I beg—wonderful as it sounds—that he is not dead. Something about a trance,' I believe—a mistake happily discovered in time. I tell you all I know, and however it comes about, it is clear we ought to be glad that Mr. Robert Evans is spared to us.'

"With that he was glad to escape from the room, for the looks on their faces were very strange to see. There was a long silence. Llewellyn was the first to speak. He swore a big oath and banged his great hand upon the table. 'I don't believe it!' he cried. 'I don't believe it! It is a trick!'

But he spoke the door opened behind him, and he turned to see Robert Evans standing in the room, so I am sure. They had come to walk in Robert Evans' funeral; and here was the gaunt, stooping form of Robert Evans himself coming in, with an arm of Gwen Madoc on one side and of Miss Peggy on the other—Robert Evans' favorite niece and child. Behind him were the lawyer and Dr. Jones, a smile on their lips, and three of the poor women half frightened, half wondering.

USE OF APPLIQUE.

A pretty dress of cloth, had a tight fitting bodice and a long panel, both back and front giving it an appearance of effect. Richly colored applique was used in an effective manner on sleeves and skirt.

"The old man was pale, and seemed to regard little, but when the doctor would have placed a chair for him, he declined it, and stood gazing about him, wonderfully composed for a man just risen from his coffin. He had all his old grim aspect as he looked upon the family. Llewellyn's declaration was still in their ears. They could find not a word to say either of joy or grief.

"'Well, indeed,' said Robert, with a dry chuckle, 'I am sure that you were not to throw at me! I am a ghost, I suppose? Ha!' he exclaimed, as his eye fell on the papers which Mr. Hughes had left upon the table, 'and no! That is why you are not overjoyed at seeing me. You have been reading my will. Well, Llewellyn? Have not you a word to say to me now you know for what I had put you down?'

"At that Llewellyn found his tongue, and the others chimed in finely. Only there was something in the old man's manner that they did not like, and prudently.

had told him how glad they were to see him again just for all the world as if he had been ill for a few days. Robert Evans turned again to Llewellyn.

"'You had fixed what you would do for my girl here,' I suppose' he said, patting her shoulder gently, at which the family winced. 'It was a hundred a year you promised to set up, you know. You will have arranged all that.'

"Llewellyn looked stealthily at Mr. Hughes, who stood up at Robert's elbow, and muttered that they had not reached that stage.

"What!' cried the old man sharply. 'How was that?'

"'I was intending,' Llewellyn began lamely to settle—

"'You were intending,' Robert Evans broke forth in a voice so altered that they all started back. 'You are a liar! You were intending to settle nothing! I know it well. I knew it long ago! Nothing. I say! And for you, he went on, wheeling furiously round upon the Evanses of Nant, 'you knew my wishes. What were you going to do for her? What I say! Speak, you hobbledehoys.'

"For they were backing from him in shocked fear of his fierce, look-ing at one another or at the ruffled face of Llewellyn Evans, or anywhere but at him. It broth the old man blurted out. 'Whatever,' Llewellyn meant to do we were going to do, sir.'

"'You speak the truth there,' cried old Robert bitterly, 'for that was nothing! You, Bevan,' and he turned himself toward the Evan Bevans, who were shaking in their shoes, 'I am told, did offer to do something for my girl.'

"'Yes, dear Robert,' cried Mrs. Bevan, 'and we did intend—'

"'So, I liar.—Well, when I make my next will I will now come to see you down, for just so much as you supposed I owe her, Peggy, that's all recollected, turning from the chapfather lady, and resting into the girl's hands the will which the lawyer had given him, 'tear up this rubbish and tear it up! Now let us have something to eat in the other room. What, Llewellyn, no shelter?'

"And the family, did not stay even to partake of the home-brewed. They were out of the house, I am told, before the coffin and the undertakers' men. There was big talking among them, as they went, of a conspiracy and a fiendish artifice. But though, to be sure, it was a wonderful discovery, and the doctor and Mr. Hughes as they drove away after dinner, were very friendly together—which may have been only the home-brewed—at any rate the sole outcome of Llewellyn's talking and inquiries was that everyone laughed very much, and Robert Evans' name for a clever man was known beyond Carnarvon.

"Of course it would be open house at Coirn that day, with plenty of eating and drinking and coming and going. But toward five o'clock the house grew quiet again. The visitors had gone home, and Gwen Madoc was upstairs. The old man was sleeping in the chair opposite the settle, and Miss Peggy was sitting on the window-seat watching him, her hands in her lap, her thoughts far away. Maybe she was trying to be really glad that the home, about which the eyes lowed and the gulls screamed all the gloomy cliffsers and made it seem home each minute, was hers still; that she was not quite alone, nor friendless, nor poor. Maybe she was striving not to think of the thing which had been taken from her and could not be given back. Whatever her thoughts, she was aroused by some sound to find her eyes full of hot tears, through which could dimly see that the old man was awake and looking at her with a strange impression, which disappeared as she became aware of it.

"He began to speak. 'Providence has been very good to us, Peggy,' he said, with grim meaning. 'It is well for you, my girl, that our eyes are open to our kind friends and relatives. There is one besides those who were here this morning that will wish he had not been so hasty.'

"She rose quickly and looked out of the window. 'Don't speak of him. Let us forget him,' she pleaded, in a low tone.

"Miss Peggy Evans seemed to take a delight in the—well, the goodness of Providence. If he had come to us by the door, since when you were in your grave, sir, as if he were dumming up the case in his own mind, and she were—but a chit a girl, she would have forgiven him, and I would have said you were right. Or even if he had written, eh?'

"'Oh, yes, yes!' sobbed the girl, her face raining down her upturned face. 'Don't torture me!' You were right and I was wrong—all wrong!'

"'Well, yes, yes! There, so. But come here, my girl,' said the old man. 'Come!' he repeated imperiously, as, surprised in the midst of her grief, she looked and hesitated. 'I sit here', and he pointed to the settle opposite to him. 'Now, suppose I were to tell you that I had written that the letter had been—mislaid; shall we say? and come somehow to my hands? Now, don't get excited, my girl.'

"'Oh!' cried Peggy, her hands falling, her lips parted, her eyes wide and terrified, her whole form rigid with questioning.

"'Just suppose that, my dear,' continued Robert, 'and that a letter were then before you which you alone by its contents? Remember, he must have much to explain. Would you let me decide whether his explanation were satisfactory or not?'

"She was trembling with expectation, then. But she tried to think of the matter calmly, to remember the lover's buried flight, the lack of word or message for her, her own misery. She nodded silently, and held out her hand.

"He drew a letter from his pocket. 'You will let me see it?' he said suspiciously.

"'Oh, yes!' she cried, and fled with it to the window. He watched her while she broke it open and read first one page and then another—there were but two, it was very short—watched her while she thrust it from her and looked at it as a whole, then drew it to her and kissed it again and again.

"'Wait a bit! wait a bit!' cried he testily. 'Now let me see it.'

"She turned upon him almost fiercely then, as I sway his daughter, as if it were some living thing he might hurt. 'He thought he would meet me at the junction. She stammered between laughing and crying. 'He was going to London to see his sister—that she might take me to—and he will be there to-morrow—this evening. There! Take it!' and suddenly remembering herself she clutched out her hand and gave him the letter.

"'You proclaimed to abide by my decision, you know,' said the old man gravely.

"'I will not!' she cried impetuously. 'Never!'

"'You promised,' he said.

"'I don't care! I don't care!' she replied, clasping her hands nervously. 'No one shall come between us.'

"'Very well,' said Robert Evans. 'Then I need not decide. But you had better tell Owen to take the trap to the station to meet me.'

SAVAGE WARFARE.

German Methods Put Practices of American Indians to Shame.

The professors of 22 German universities issued a paper declaring that the German atrocities in Belgium were necessary, and declared that such as were committed were isolated acts of brutality by ruthless soldiers acting without orders. The Belgian Commission of Inquiry replies by publishing the actual text of orders and proclamations issued by the generals in command of the invading army. At Ilasselt on August 5 a notice was posted up stating that "in the case of civilians shooting on the troops any-one-thing of the population will be shot." At Andenne the German general believed or suspected that a "treacherous" attack had been made on his troops The inhabitants denied that there was any treachery. "It was with my consent," said General von Bulow "that the general had the whole place burnt down and a hundred people shot." In fact, the number was over 200. Von Bulow himself proclaimed at Namur a rigorous house-to-house inspection. "Every soldier found will be immediately shot." Arms and ammunition were to be given up. "Penalty being shot." At Wavre a levy of £120,000 was demanded. From this sum generally 'hostages' were not promptly paid the town would be set on fire and destroyed "without distinction of persons, the innocent will suffer with the guilty." Marshal von Bissing has announced that if any attempt were made to injure or damage the railways or telegraph lines, hostages from the surrounding districts would be "immediately shot."

The courts-martial established by German military documents is an admission of a violation of the rules of civilization. In Belgium 3,000 persons are to be punished for the crimes of a hostile gendarmerie; one's home can be described as guilty. Repeatedly it has been admitted that a town has been burned or a number of innocent people killed because some one fired upon German troops or is alleged to have done so.

Germany has therefore had been furnished with additional evidence as to German methods in warfare by the attacks on Scarborough, Whitby and Hartlepool, for which there was no military reason; or justification. It was on a par with the practices of the most ferocious Indian tribes in the early days of American settlement, when men and children were tomahawked in their homes The comparison is hardly fair to the Indians, who made no claim to "culture" and whose atrocities had received grievous provocation from the whites.

"Heard at the Hay Rake.

"'A good deal of money in the home,' remarked the proverb dispenser.

"Yes," rejoined the hopeless idiot, "but at that it isn't as stable as a horse trough. What?"—Indianapolis Star.

A Squelcher.

"Is fleeting his wife?" would you ask. "Well, if you were I'd advise you to keep it dark. I don't believe I could—if I were you.—Boston Transcript.

BOARD WITH A LUMBERJACK.

Meals Were Cheap, But Room Rent Furnished a Surprise.

Difficult as the life of a lumberjack in the Canadian backwoods may be, it is partially free from certain annoyances and hardships common peculiar to civilization proper.

"I boarded at the house of a fellow lumberjack during my brief experience of three weeks in the backwoods," said a former lumberjack. "It was an informal arrangement, to say the least. I did not even know the price I was to pay for the living accommodations in the lumberman's household, and something in the very atmosphere forbade me to ask. I took it for granted that I would pay a square deal.

"When the time came for my departure I asked the host for my bill.

"'How many meals have you eat here?' he asked.

"'I should say that I ate about three meals per day for three weeks,' I replied.

"'Nine days?' he demanded.

"'Possibly two or three,' I ventured.

"'Our charge is 15 cents per meal,' he said. 'My wife keeps tabs on all the meals at, so I will ask her.'

"On consulting his wife's accounts, which were kept by means of very good memory, it appeared that I had consumed a few meals more than the aggregate than the total daily quota for three weeks up to that for them.

"'Now what do I owe for sleeping accommodations?' I asked. 'I have been occupying a bed and room for three weeks, you know.'

"'Of course I sleep in it,' I replied. 'In the eastern country where I come from a man's lodgings usually cost about the same as his meals. I presume it is the same here.'

"'I should say not!' was the retorted sharply. 'Nobody in this part of the country is low enough to charge anybody for a place to sleep!'"

Germans Can Shoot, He Says.

A wounded sergeant from Winnipeg just arrived in London is very loose to locate the man who first put the story about that the Germans cannot shoot straight. The sergeant speaking about his own wounds says it went into the trenches for a rest and during the night all that the Germans had to fire at was the flash from Canadian rifles.

During that night seven rifles in his portion of the trench alone were smashed by rifle fire and their bearers were more or less wounded. Many wounded Canadians, he says, will be fit for the firing line again very soon, as many of the wounds are of the slightest and a few days' rest at the base helps wonderfully in restoring the men to full strength.

Farm Crops.

By way of supplementing the Patriotism and Production movement the Ontario Department of Agriculture has issued free distribution Bulletin 228, "Farms Crops," prepared by Prof. C. A. Zavitz.

The reading of this bulletin should assist in a material improvement in the quality as well as the quantity of farm products of the province.

It deals with experiments made in the raising of each of the regular field crops and of other important crops (chiefly for fodder) not now well known to many of our farmers.

These tests were conducted at the Ontario Agricultural Farm, Guelph, under the direction of the author, the well-known cerealist and general experimentalist in agronomics, and valuable advice is given by him regarding the possible increase in farm produce, the rotation of crops, etc. The influence of seed selection and of hybridization in relation to the improvement of both quality and the production of field crops, sometimes resulting in new popular varieties, is stated in a most clear and interesting manner, and is full of encouragement for those who would like to engage in such experiments.

Valuable information is offered as to best combinations for mixed grains, and the treatment of seed grain for smut. Considerable space is also given to discussing alfalfa as a pasture and fodder crop, and to the making of both annual and permanent pastures.

Prof. Zavitz urges that special attention be given to raising seed for field roots in Ontario, as most of such seed up to the present time has been imported from European countries now at war.

The writer of this bulletin gives four very practical rules for producing satisfactory field crops:

1. Raise only such crops as are likely to meet the demand.
2. Select good plump seed which has been tested for vitality.
3. Give the land early and thorough cultivation.
4. Sow all crops at the proper time and according to right methods.

Poetically Put.

"We'd begun to think it would never come to anything," Mrs. Dove said frankly, "for Sister Sue is forty and Mr. Jenks is forty-nine.

"But they're married at last, and the funny part of it is that they seem as happy as if they hadn't been—well, what we used to call courting for seventeen years."

"Ah, a romance of the middle ages!" Mrs. Dove's caller politely observed.

Amount Destroyed by Emden.

During her career of activity the Emden destroyed British ships valued at $5,400,000 without their cargoes and sank a Russian cruiser and a French destroyer in the harbor of Penang, a British possession in the Straits Settlements.

Local Boys at Shorncliffe Instructing Contingent

Mr. Jesse Harris on Saturday received a letter from his son, Albert E. Harris, at Shorncliffe. The communication is dated March 20th, and has evidently been detained. Among other things he says: I have not gone to the front yet, but expect to any day. We are now stationed at the Canadian barracks for defence purposes and during the last week four steamers have been sunk by German submarines, and the town of Deal, just a little way from Shorncliffe, was attacked by German aeroplanes the other night. I am feeling fine and could not be in better health. I suppose you will be surprised to hear that I am a sergeant now on the Instructional Artillery staff of the Reserve Artillery Brigade. This staff is for instructing the artillery of the Second Contingent. Along with me on the staff are Sergt. Wm. Black, Q.M.S., M. Rea and Harries. Sergt. Tett. had a surprise the other day when I saw Major Bierdon walk across the barrack square. He came across to the stable and shook hands with all the Belleville boys and seemed delighted to see us.

About four thousand men, horse, foot and artillery, of the Second Contingent arrived here a few days ago, and the full force of officers on the staff is to train these men.

Battle at Sea Between Whales

LONG BEACH, Cal., April 22.—Captain J. P. Taylor, Dr. Bjorkman and H. W. Cousins are authority for the truthfulness of a whale story the like of which has never before been listened to in Long Beach.

While fishing a mile from shore their attention was attracted to a titanic commotion in the water a mile to seaward. With marine glasses the fishermen say they witnessed for more than an hour a battle to the death between two California gray whales and a thrasher whale. The thrasher finally was victorious.

Powerful New Italian Gun

PARIS, April 21.—Italy has a 40-centimetre cannon more powerful, but lighter and less cumbersome than the Krupp monster, according to a prominent Italian politician's statement to Excelsior. The King attended trials of the new weapon three days ago at Genoa.

The explosions caused popular demonstrations, everyone thinking they were the signal for mobilization, which the Excelsior's informants declares is practically complete, every able-bodied man born after 1876 having already joined the colors.

GERMANS TRIED TO LAND IN ENGLAND

LONDON, April 22.—(Special)—F. T. Jane, the well-known naval expert, addressing a meeting in Liverpool, said it was not generally known that the Germans had tried to land an expeditionary force in Britain, and that it was the British navy that had made them go back to their harbors again. The navy had saved the country, and there was never a word of it in the newspapers.

ARRESTED ON SUSPICION

NORTH BAY, April 22.—(Special.)—Two men by the names of John Brooks and Mervin Taylor were arrested at Parry Sound yesterday on suspicion of robbing the Emsdale post office of $15 on the night of April 19th. Taylor's father lives at 1555 Dundas St Toronto.

NEWFOUNDLAND HELPS.

Her Ice-Breaker Lintrose Has Replaced Earl Grey to Far North.

Indignation as Newfoundland may be in its dear respect, she is proving in unexpected ways, of value as a factor in the present world struggle. The finest of her fleet o. local steamers, the Lintrose was purchased recently for ice-breaking purposes in the White Sea, and messages have been received announcing her arrival at Alexandrowsky, a port some distance from Archangel, where she arrived on Feb. 23rd, replacing the Canadian Government steamer Earl Grey, which was lent to the Russian Czar at the outbreak of the war for this purpose, but which proved unsatisfactory and, indeed, sustained such damages that she had to return to Barrow, England, where she was built some six years ago, in order to effect extensive repairs. She arrived there on 25th, conveying two grain-laden steamers from Archangel.

The Lintrose, which is the finest ship of the fleet afloat, was owned by the Reid Newfoundland Co., and was employed in carrying out the daily cross-channel service between Port aux Basques, Nfld., and North Sydney, Cape Breton, whereby the Newfoundland railway was maintained in direct communication with the Intercolonial Railway of Canada. The Lintrose's experience in navigating the difficult and dangerous waters of the Cabot Strait, the southern entrance to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, suggested to the navigators and engineers of the Government

At the outbreak of the war, negotiations were opened with a view to securing this steamer, but the Canadian Government offering the Earl Grey, they were broken off. She crossed to Europe in September, via St. John's, and proceeded to Archangel, where she did a certain amount of icebreaking work in the early winter, but when the critical period came she proved unequal to the task, and as a result quite a large fleet of freighters was frozen fast in the ice for the winter. These it will not be possible to free by the spring except the Lintrose, because the undisturbed ice in the White Sea will be found to thicken so rapidly during the long winter that nothing about will accomplish much against it. It is confidently expected that the Lintrose will be able to release the ships there at least a month earlier than under ordinary circumstances, and that, in itself, will be a decided advantage.

The crew of the Lintrose are all Newfoundlanders, and there were several others from the colony on the Gulf of St. Lawrence, it is through these, indeed, that cablegrams were receiving the news of the safe arrival at Alexandrowsky on Feb. 23rd, and of the transfer of the Earl Grey to Barrow on March 5. There the necessary repairs will be made to the ship as rapidly as possible, and it is understood that she will then go back again to Archangel to help the Lintrose in her work during the spring. During the summer the Lintrose will probably be used as a freighter, as she has substantial carrying capacity, and the Earl Grey is fitted as an armored cruiser and can do effective patrol work in that role or anywhere else that is necessary.

LOOK OUT FOR TOURISTS.

Canada Will Get a Big Share of the European Trade This Year.

Canada is the land of the summering citizen. The humblest mixed-keeper, the silkmost business man is always well enough off to send his family at least a few miles out of town for July and August. And Ontario is the leading province in that respect. The wilds of Muskoka lie six hours' journey in the heart of the Lakes Ontario, Erie, Huron, and Georgian Bay surround it with balmy shores and fragrant forests, and hundreds of streams, hundreds of lakes and ponds are scattered throughout its length and breadth, bringing a summer resort into reach of every town and every village. No other province or state in America can boast of as much landscape as Ontario. There are the rocky, picturesque wastes of the Georgian Bay. And in behind it are the wide lakes and rolling hills of Muskoka. And back of that again are the trackless forests and the mysterious inland seas of Algonquin Park, clear up to the height-of-land of the Height of Land.

To all this will come this year from the United States as well as the Dominion those who spent other years in England, France, and Germany. It will be the harvest-time of this country so widely that the temporary lull occasioned in the war will leave a lasting increase, and Ontario will no doubt become an ideal tour, in the sense that Europe was ideal in that it was known and well advertised.

Accommodation will have to be increased, but it is said a number of hotels are adding new wings to their old buildings, and in Muskoka a few private business men are building tent colonies to accommodate those who take runs to "roughing it." Usually the Ontario summer season opens in July and closes in September, but America cities become hot in June, and May is often the month in which the wanderlust hits the millionaire's family.

"It is a well-known fact that Paris is converted in the summer into a deserted city, manages to keep people," said an eastern ticket agent recently. "And now, too, that London is converted in the summer into a regular American summer resort. Where will these people go? Scores of thousands go, now that war and submarines have taxed the knock-out to European tours, but to Canada, or Bermuda, or the Indies, or South America? At any rate, I suppose is going to Bermuda or the West Indies or South America in the summer?"

This same tourist agent, as he finished thus, licked the stamp on a letter to New York enclosing an advertisement of Canada's charms to appear in all the New York papers.

Colleges in Canada are closed at this agent, "and other spots in Ontario who have rented their humble little places in other years for $100 or $200 will be able to get $400 or $500 from wealthy New Yorkers or Pittsburgers this summer if they advertise and are scattered through those cities. Hotels that went well-nigh bankrupt in last year's slack tourist season will likely make hay double other years profits. I do not speak idly. There never were such prospects as now!"

Weeds.

In pursuance of its vigorous campaign against weeds on Canadian farms, "Conservation" cites the outstanding effects of carelessness as follows:

1. Weeds rob the soil of plant food and moisture thus increasing the effect of a drought by taking the water and dissipating by evaporation the moisture which should go to the crop.

2. Weeds crowd out more useful plants. The land in a state of weeds is more prolific. As an example of this, the Dominion has at last year's slack grass and weeds are mixed with it because the weeds will soon exterminate the alfalfa.

3. Weeds are a source of expense. From the time the farmer begins to fit his land for crop, these enemies increase the cost of every operation, of planting, harrowing, seeding, cultivating, reaping, threshing, cleaning and threshing, as well as of cleaning and marketing the produce. It takes more time to harvest a weedy crop. It costs the farmer just as much per bushel to thresh useless weed seeds as it does to thresh the grain. These are direct money losses.

4. The eradication of some of our weed weeds is very costly. It sometimes prevents farmers following the best crop rotation, as the weeds compel him to grow a crop which is not profitable.

What's the Use?

The world has many individuals who let events drift by them without any appreciable effort on their account. The Minister of Finance, Hon. T. White, comes across one of these individuals recently while on a trip to Toronto. Mr. White's career has of late years been meteoric, but at one time he was "Tom" White, a reporter on an evening newspaper, and after that a clerk in a comparatively humble capacity in the department department at the City Hall. Sliding on a street car, he happened to sit beside a prominent citizen, whom he recognized as a person he had known years before fate and ambition had called him to a Cabinet Minister's office at Ottawa. They chatted pleasantly on general topics until it was time for them to part. The Minister of Finance shook hands and murmured that he was glad to have met an old friend. Then again, "And so am I glad to see you," said the latter, cordially. "By the way, are you still up at the City Hall?"—Toronto Saturday night.

Fatherly Fought Together.

Capt. R. T. Cory, of the 48th Highlanders writes an interesting letter regarding his experiences in France. At the end of his letter, referring to the son of Sir John M. Gibson, of Hamilton, former Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario, he says:

"I have young Francis Gibson as one of my subalterns now. Is it not curious that his father and my father fought in the same company against the Fenians at 1866 at Ridgeway, and that we are now in the same company in France in 1915."

Canada Contributed Freely.

Canada has contributed $2,000,000 worth of food and clothing for relief in Belgium, it was announced recently at the commission for relief in Belgium, which has received a report to that effect from Hector Prud'homme, of Montreal, treasurer of the Central Executive committee of the relief work for the victims of the war in Belgium. Nova Scotia led all other provinces in the size of its contributions.

Big Scoop on Fake Doctors

Arrest 54 Operators of Medical Institutions—Rode Millions by Swindle

NEW YORK, April 22.—Police authorities said today that of the fifty-four operators of medical museums and their assistants arrested here yesterday in one of the most sweeping raids upon alleged medical impositors ever conducted in this city, one had promised to appear in court today and make a confession. His statement, the police asserted, will reveal the workings of a system of national scope for fattening money by fraudulent physicians and false methods of diagnosis.

The chief operator of the museums, under arrest here, is alleged by the police to have accumulated a fortune of more than $1,000,000 by operating a chain of medical officers with free museums at "feeders" in New York, Newark, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Pittsburg, and half a dozen other cities.

Half a Million a Year

Mrs. Marion Clarke, investigator of the state department of labor, estimated that fraudulent physicians have collected $500,000 a year from "patients" in this city. Most of this came from poor persons and aliens who could not speak English.

More than a hundred witnesses, the police said, are ready to testify that they have been swindled in fraudulent medical institutes. It is charged that in some of the institutes where arrests were made, healthy detectives who applied for treatment in obtaining evidence, were informed that they were in the last stages of Tuberculosis or cancer and that $500 to $1,000 was demanded to keep them alive.

Some of the methods alleged to have been used by the museum conductors included the sale of a two-ounce bottle of ordinary drinking water to a woman for $200 under the pretence that it was "radium water" and the sale for $500 of a box of "magic pills," guaranteed to cure tuberculosis.

Chief Magistrate McAdoo before whom the prisoners were arraigned said: "The work of these men must be checked or it will lead to dreadful consequences."

Included among the prisoners was Henry J. Schlerson who was said by George Whitelsie, attorney for the County Medical Society, to be one of the largest operators of medical institutes in the United States with offices throughout the country.

All the museums raided have been closed by the police pending the hearing of the cases on April 28.

Maintaining a public nuisance is the charge against most of the prisoners.

C.P.R. ICE HOUSE AT HAVELOCK BURNED

The big C.P.R. ice house at Havelock was destroyed by fire on Tuesday at noon. When discovered the immense frame structure was a mass of flames, and every effort to subdue the blaze was unavailing. It is believed that the fire was started from a sawdust pile which was burning Monday and which it is thought was not put out.

For many years past the ice house was filled with ice from the Norwood pond, and provided quite a little amount of work. The Swift Company of Chicago, used the ice for their refrigerator cars, but did not take out any last winter as we understand that traffic now goes around by the new lake shore line—Norwood Register.

CAMPAIGN TO CRUSH TURKEY WELL STARTED

Bombardment of Turkish Positions on Gallipoli Peninsula is Continuous—Movement of Troops Indicate Operations on a Great Scale

LONDON, April 23.—(Special.)—It is believed that at last the big effort against Turkey is about to begin.

A despatch to the Havas Agency at Paris from Athens last night says that the bombardment of Turkish positions on the Gallipoli peninsula continues without interruption.

There is no longer any endeavor to hide the fact that a 4th Anglo-French force is prepared to go, as General d'Amade, the French commander, has said "to any point where it is required."

A German report says that part of this force, which is under command of Gen. Sir Ian Hamilton, has been landed at Enos, a Turkish town near the Turco-Bulgarian border, on the northern side of the Gulf of Saros, under the support of the allied fleet. At the same time there is news of transports loaded with troops passing the island of Lemnos, put far from the entrances of the Dardanelles, and of others being sighted off Smyrna, on the east of Asia Minor.

This makes it uncertain where the blow is to be struck. There are Anglo-French troops in the Aegean Sea, including Senegalese, who were transferred from France, and British "Tommies" from the outposts of the empire, which with the disappearance of the last German raiders are considered safe from attack.

Turk's Preparations

An earlier despatch to the Havas Agency stated that the Turks are strongly entrenched along the Gulf of Saros, and that a big Turkish army has been assembled to realist impending land attack.

The allied fleet has bombarded Turkish encampments at Bulair, while a British torpedo boat shelled a Turkish camp at the Village of Katiphamadja, near Smyrna.

OPERATIONS DEVELOPING IN THE NORTH SEA

Traffic Between England and Holland Suspended While British Submarines Approach German Coast

LONDON, April 23.—Special—Indications of increased naval activity came from various sources today. All steamboat communication with Holland has been suspended by order of the British Government, and close supervision with the news from Berlin that British submarines have been in the Bight of Helgoland, where the German Admiralty claims to have sunk nine and perhaps more, this is believed to foreshadow some movement in the North Sea.

The stoppage of traffic to Hollandi was announced in an official statement given out in Amsterdam in behalf of the British Government, which said:

"All shipping between Holland and the United Kingdom is stopped for the time being. No ships will leave the United Kingdom for Holland after today. Ships from Holland will not be admitted to the United Kingdom after today. It is hoped shortly to announce limited cargo and passenger traffic. Special arrangements have been made for the transfer of mails."

The object of the intention of Great Britain to stop traffic with Holland influenced the rates at Lloyd's and checked the tendency to reduce insurance rates. Nobody in the market seemed to be aware of the cause of the stoppage.

Merchant and fishing vessels arriving in Copenhagen report the presence of an Anglo-French squadron off Stavanger, Norway, and stories also are current in the Danish capital of a German fleet cruising in the North Sea.

The trawler Fuschia reached Aberdeen today with the crew of the trawler Envoy and reported that the Envoy had been shelled by a German submarine last night off the east coast. The men on the Envoy left their ship in a small boat, which, they say, also was shelled by the submarine. The boat was injured. The Envoy's crew drifted about in the small boat for two hours before being picked up. It has not been established whether the Envoy was sunk.

"According to Berlin evening newspapers," says Reuter's Amsterdam correspondent, "a German submarine stopped the British steam trawler Glancarse off Aberdeen and took it into a German port on the North Sea." Aberdeen is some 450 miles across the North Sea from the nearest point on the German coastline.

ONE SHIP SUNK DURING A WEEK.

London, April 23.—(Special) —The Official Press Bureau of the Admiralty last night announced that only one British merchantman had been sunk by German submarines during the week ending April 21.

There were 1,519 arrivals and sailings from British ports during the week, one fishing vessel being sunk.

Russian Aviators Do Good Work

Railway Stations and German Trenches, and an Aeroplane Considerably Damaged

(Canadian Press Special)

PETROGRAD, April 23.—Russian aviators were active yesterday. Fifteen bombs were dropped in Plock. Several hoats on the Vistula were struck, also a railway station and some trains. Considerable damage was done to German trenches and the railway station at Mlawa, and a German aerodrome at Sanniky also suffered.

GLASGOW SEAMEN WIN THE DAY

(Canadian Press Special)

GLASGOW, April 23.—The strike of seamen at this port was ended today. The demand of the strikers, numbering 500, for an increase in their wages of $5 a month, was granted.

Lieut. Marion Crawford Killed

Son of the Famous Novelist—He Was Engaged in Throwing Grenades

LONDON, April 23.—Special—It is unofficially reported that Lieut. Harold Marion Crawford of the Irish Guards was accidentally killed by a bomb explosion at Givenchy on April 16. He was the eldest son of the famous American novelist, Marion Crawford, and was 29 years of age.

Lieut. Crawford was born at Sorrento, Italy, and educated at Harrard. He joined the Irish Guards reserve at the outbreak of war. One of his brother officers writes:

"Some time ago Crawford undertook the difficult and dangerous duty of instructing the officers and men of the Guards Brigade in the throwing of hand grenades. He accomplished this in a way which drew admiration from us all."

A Close Shave For Prohibition

Proposal Affecting Halifax Is Defeated By Casting Vote of Speaker

HALIFAX, N.S., April 22.—The province of Nova Scotia, with the exception of the city of Halifax, is under prohibition practically as complete as ever within an act in the House of Assembly of being included in the prohibitory law.

Mr. Tanner, leader of the Opposition, moved that after March, 1916, when the present licenses in Halifax expired, the provincial prohibitory law should go into effect in Halifax City. This was defeated for several hours, and a vote was taken which stood twelve to twelve. The speaker, Dr. Ellis, gave his casting vote against prohibition, thus defeating the proposal. The legislature adjourned today.

Last Meeting to Grant Licenses

PEMBROKE, April 22.—What was probably the last meeting the Pembroke license commission was held here yesterday to consider licenses for the coming year.

The commission is composed of Messrs. Samuel Bromley, chairman, Pembroke; H. B. Smith, Petawawa, and Richard Manion, South Algoma.

There were 17 applications in all, 14 for hotels and 3 for liquor shops. All were granted with the exception of Mr. Lattemore, lessee of the St. Lawrence hotel here.

Two other local hotels here were given three months in which to make improvements required by the board, and the St. Lawrence hotel three months to dispose of its stock or else another lessee who would be acceptable to the commission.

Tragic Death Of Appleton Farmer

CARLETON PLACE, April 22.—At Appleton, four miles from here, Mr. James Ferguson, well-known farmer of that section, met a tragic death yesterday. Deceased had been engaged with his son doing spring work, returning to his home for lunch. Whilst unhitching the horses he was accidentally knocked down and the wheel of the seeder passed over his head, fracturing his skull. Death resulted almost immediately.

Mr. Wilson was 70 years of age, a native of the township, and was very highly esteemed. He is survived by his wife, two sons and three daughters.

Quebec Election Being Arranged

Expected to be Held Before Dominion Election Takes Place

OTTAWA, Ont., April 22.—The conference of Sir Lomer Gouin with Sir Wilfrid Laurier in Montreal on Tuesday has revived speculation here as to the likelihood of a provincial election in Quebec, immediately preceding the Dominion election, if such is decided on. It has already been reported that this was being planned.

Both sides are leaving nothing undone to be ready for an election and it is understood in both the Liberal and Conservative camps that if an election it is understood, will hold a series of campaign meetings covering all the provinces during the summer.

ARABS TURN ON TURKS RETREAT BECOMES ROUT

Latest News From Persian Gulf Emphasizes Importance of British Success—Enemy's Losses Six Thousand in Three Days

LONDON April 22.—(Special.)—The following official communication was issued last evening:

"The latest telegrams from the Persian Gulf show that the defeat of the Turks at Shaiba was even more complete than had been hoped. Not only have they abandoned their motor cars and guns and ammunition wagons, but independent reports show that their retirement has been a rout, molested by turncoat Arab tribesmen. There are persistent rumors of the suicide of Suliman Askari the Turkish commander-in-chief.

"It is estimated that the enemy's casualties from April 12 to 15 reached 6000. The Turks in this direction are now all north of Klamieh, which is more than 90 miles from Basra."

Heavy Fighting Near Ypres

French and Belgian Troops Repulse Attacks—In Counter-Attack French Take Many Prisoners

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, April 23.—(French official statement)—Yesterday there were fairly lively engagements in Belgium. In the bend of the Yser to the north of Dixmude, Belgian troops repulsed an attack against the advanced trenches, and inflicted heavy losses on the enemy. To the north of Ypres the German, by employing large quantities of asphyxiating bombs, the effect of which was felt for a distance of two kilometres behind our lines, forced us to retire in the direction of the Yser canal.

Toward the west and in the direction of Ypres, toward the south, the enemy's attack was checked. A vigorous counter attacks enabled us to regain the ground and make many prisoners.

In the wooded valley near St. Mihiel, by an attack to the east and west of positions previously captured, we took some hundred metres of trenches and made about one hundred prisoners, including three officers.

All preparations are complete for a trial of strength between the British fleet and the German grand fleet, supported by the Heligoland fortress. The Admiralty have been working for days at full pressure. Every naval base has been under extra guard and nothing has been neglected to greater effort. To Form Base Hospital Unit

Peterboro Physicians Organize for Service—Full Staff and Maintenance

PETERBORO, April 22.—(Special.)—The physicians of the local Medical Society completed today the details of organizing a base hospital unit for the front in any part of Europe where needed, including Serbia, with nine physicians and one dentist, the city having the required number of physicians who are qualified members of the Army Medical Corps. Fifteen trained nurses have offered their services and there will be no difficulty in obtaining orderlies, etc.

The Government, which has accepted the generous offer, will equip the hospital, but Peterboro' furnishes the medical and nursing staff and pays the expenses of maintaining the hospital on service, the local physicians remaining at home paying $50 per month, the lawyers of the city a similar amount, and other citizens the balance. The Business Girls' Club, the Kitchener Club, the Progressive Club and half a dozen other patriotic organizations have been busy providing sheets and other supplies for the new hospital.

This is all in addition to this city's efforts in the line of recruiting. Altogether Peterboro' has furnished to the overseas contingents about 800 recruits, with recruiting still going on satisfactorily, and with the regiment which is being formed directly at Petawawa 400 recruits again brought up to normal strength.

WOMEN ARE RIOTING IN TRIESTE STREETS

ROME, April 22.—Special—The Trieste (in Austria) riots are assuming a revolutionary character. Efforts to suppress the revolt have proved useless since the half-starved citizens, especially women whose children are condemned to a slow death owing to lack of food, have been driven to despair and are practically fighting for their existence. Crowds of women, accompanied by the children, stoned the police, smashed the windows of Government buildings, clubs and hotels, wrecked cafes, shops and openly shouted, "Long live Italy."

WITH FOOT SEVERED FRENCH AIRMAN FLEW INTO FRENCH LINES

PARIS, April, 22—A story telling of the heroism of an aviator described as "De M——", whose father was killed in one of the first engagements of the war, has been sent to the Petit Journal by a correspondent with the northern army.

"De M—— was sent with a sergeant to bombard a corner of the Belgian coast where the Germans had been showing exceptional activity. They had to pass over a region where Roland Garros accomplished his most sensational exploits and where the Germans had installed a hundred anti-aircraft guns. The aeroplane was piloted safely through a storm of shells while the sergeant dropped bombs according to instructions and then turned towards the French lines, rising to a height of 9,000 feet to avoid the hail of shrapnel.

Suddenly a German shell smashed the front wheels and hurled through the machine, severing the aviator's left foot. The aeroplane began to plunge downward but De M——grittied his teeth and righted his machine. Keeping it headed towards camp, the sergeant, who thought they were done for, supported the pilot with his left arm while with his right he started to pencil a farewell letter to his mother. They still had fifteen miles to fly to reach a place of safety.

"Shall I take the helm?" asked the sergeant.

"No, no,—you. Trust to me. We'll get there to France all right," was De M——'s reply.

The sergeant then abandoned his letter writing and supported the pilot with both arms. De M——stuck to his task, and took the machine safely back to the starting place and crawled out unaided through the hole made by the German projectile. Not until he reached the hospital at Zuydcote did he faint.

Sergt. W. C. Bogard, who has been in Quebec taking a course for the past four weeks, and who is connected with the 21st Battalion at Kingston, is in the city visiting with his family. He is on furlough here for five days.

Two Peterborough boys of the 39th have reinstated in their ranks, on account of their being unfitted for military duty, by illness. Their names were Pte. S. Rathwell and W. Richmond.

KINGSTON

According to militia orders all armories must fly the Union Jack every day. This includes forts and drill halls.

Master Gunner Kruger, formerly of the R.C.H.A., Kingston, has been made a Lieutenant and district officer.

All men of the 21st Battalion who are anxious to take part in the assault-at-arms to be given in the Grand Opera House on April 30th, have been asked to turn in their names to R. S. M. Gilbert.

Captain J. Sills of the 21st Battalion has been placed on the sick list.

At eight o'clock yesterday morning, Major-Gen. Hon. Sam Hughes arrived in the city from Toronto over the C.N.R. for the purpose of inspecting local corps. Immediately on his arrival the minister, accompanied by Lieut.-Col G. Patterson Murphy, Col. Hemming, Col. Ogilvie, Capt. Gardner, and Mr. W. F. Nickle, M.P., drove to the upper common at Barriefield, where the 21st Battalion commanded by Lieut.-Col. W. S. Hughes, 25th Battery, in command of Capt. Carruthers, "C" Battery, R.C. H.A., commanded by Capt. Stacey, Queen's Engineers, and Queen's College Hospital Corps, commanded by Lieut.-Col. Etherington, were all drawn up waiting to be inspected. The first unit inspected was "C" Battery and Capt. Stacey and his battery made an excellent showing considering the fact that the battery has an existence of scarcely two months. After inspecting the horse artillery, the general allowed the mounted corps to leave the parade grounds.

Yesterday afternoon the License Commissioners for West Hastings met in this city for the purpose of considering an application for the transfer of the Kyle House license from Wm. Smith to Messrs. B. Luffman and H. Rooney, who formerly conducted a hotel at Deseronto. The commissioners readily granted the transfer, and the new proprietors were today in possession of the premises. Messrs. Huge Holdings of German Property

Britain Custodian of More Than Four Hundred Million Dollars' Worth of Real Estate

LONDON April 22.—(Special.)—The estimated value of German property in Great Britain now in the custody of the public trustee was given in the house of commons this afternoon as in the neighborhood of £85,000,000 ($425,000,000).

Russell Rea, who, on behalf of the board of trade, gave these figures in response to a question from Lord Charles Beresford, assured the questioner that "these German assets will be available for such disposal as seems proper at the conclusion of peace."

Lord Bergsford's suggestion was that Englishmen owning property in Germany should forego out of this fund, and that £1000 ($5000) daily should be confiscated for every British officer subjected to ill-treatment while a prisoner in Germany.

Unearth Ruse To Smuggle Beer

Ontario License Branch Seizes a Carload Containing Hidden Refrigerator

TORONTO, April 22.—(Special.) Another ruse for the illicit smuggling of beer into the north country has been discovered by the Ontario license branch, and officials are proceeding to cope with it. The system is not new, but to date it has been rarely attempted in the province. A carload of so-called temperance beer will be shipped, and concealed cleverly in the shipment will appear several kegs of liquor over proof. The seizure of a car load of this description at Englehart is providing a court case before the Haileybury magistrate.

License Inspector W. S. Blackwell on Saturday last, heard of a large shipment of Colnit beer going through to Cochrane and Porcupine, at Timmins which is a non-license district, and held it up for analysis. Six samples were taken indiscriminately, and three showed .side strength. Liquor containing more than 2½ per cent. so the case goes before the magistrate and the whole consignment will be confiscated.

It is likely that prosecution proceed ings may be taken against the man who intended to receive the goods.

One on Leacock.

Stephen Leacock, who has been on the public platform recently reading from his own works for the benefit of the Belgians, tells a story about one of his recent chairmen at a meeting held in Ottawa recently, says Beck's Weekly (Montreal). This chairman was one of those type of thinkers who are apt to get lost in the mazes of their own oratory; and when he rose after the meeting to express the gratitude of the audience he allided to the generous audience of applause that had followed the conclusion of the performance and went on: "But I may say, Mr. Leacock, that we should have been even more generous in so far as applause is concerned had you sat down sooner." Somewhat alarmed, the small, professor stepped the seat of his chair and waited for the criticism of the evening which he supposed was to follow this remarkable utterance; but none came. And the mystery was not cleared up until half-past two the following morning, when the chairman was awakened from profound slumber in his bedroom in the hotel by sounds of uproar in the hall, and his late chairman burst into the bedroom, in a state of wild agitation, and shouting: "I must see him! I must see him!" to the night clerk and three bell-boys, who were vainly endeavoring to hold him back. And having achieved an entrance to the bedroom, the chairman proceeded to explain that what he had meant to say was that if Prof. Leacock had broken his entertainment into sections, and sat down, or left the platform, like a concert artist, after each number, he would have been as loudly applauded at these various points as he was at the end of the lecture.

Raising Indian Corps.

Mr. F. O. Loft, who is engaged in raising an Indian unit for service at the front, is meeting with considerable success. Col. Merritt has promised to equip the corps.

Mr. Loft, at a recent meeting, reviewed during a period of centuries the fidelity and patriotism of his race, and particularly the Mohawks, and urged his auditors to enlist, and to be prepared, if required, to go forth to duty in the present crisis.

Arms and the Woman.

"Did anybody ever see a one armed woman?" asked a gray bearded man as he surveyed the afternoon parade. "I never did. Almost every day I meet one armed men, but I have yet to encounter a woman with that pitifully empty sleeve. Are there no women who have suffered that mutilation? If not, why not? And, if so, where are they? Yesterday I heard it argued that there was no cause for a woman to lose an arm; that women do not go to the wars and are not engaged in occupations that are likely to carry away a part of their body. But that reasoning is not sound. Many women work in mills and factories, and they are as liable to accidents in the streets and public conveyances as men. Frequently they figure in those accidents; but, although men in the same situation would lose an arm, women never do. What is the cause of their immunity?"—New York Globe.

Poor Season For Seals.

Wireless reports received at St. John's, Nfld., within the last few days from the sealing fleets indicate that the outlook for the season is unfavorable. The steamers of the eastern fleet after working their way through the ice for some 250 miles up the eastern coast of Newfoundland, became jammed in the heavy floes off Cape St. John, at the northern point of Notre Dame Bay, and about 175 miles south of the easterly entrance to the Strait of Belle Isle. Five hundred seals taken by the steamer Florizel recently comprise her total catch. In the average season the eastern fleet captures about 30,000 seals by the middle of March. The vessels of the western fleet made little or no catch.

DRINKING FACILITIES WILL BE CURTAILED BY GREAT BRITAIN

LONDON, April 22.—(Special.)—"Dealing with the limiting of facilities for drinking."

That the British Government does not intend to have recourse to prohibition in dealing with the drink question was inferred from Premier Asquith's statement in the house of commons last evening, when he said that on Wednesday or Thursday next the chancellor of the exchequer, David Lloyd George, would bring forward proposals for

The prime minister's remark was evidently interpreted as meaning that the hours during which drink would be obtainable in the public houses would be considerably curtailed throughout the country, and not merely in the areas where munitions of war are manufactured.

Killed When Auto Struck

Driver Pinned Beneath, Companion Seriously Injured—Big Stone The Cause

TORONTO, April 23.—(Special.)—B. F. Law, aged 46, a contractor, living at 143 Kingston road, was instantly killed, and Charles Thomas of Midland avenue, East Toronto, seriously injured at ten o'clock last evening when a motor car, owned and driven by Mr. Law, struck a boulder and turned turtle into the ditch at the side of the roadway. The accident occurred about 100 yards east of Birchcliffe postoffice.

Law and Thomas left the house in the car about 8 o'clock, and it was on the return trip that the accident happened. The car was travelling east at perhaps twenty miles an hour, when the right front wheel struck a big stone, slewed around, and turned completely over into the ditch. Law was caught under the framework of the car and almost instantly killed. Thomas was but little more fortunate, only he fell into an excavation and the heavy body of the car did not rest its full weight on him.

Luckily a passerby saw the accident or the men might have lain under the car for some time. He immediately summoned assistance and half a dozen residents turned the car over and pulled the men out. Dr. Penney, Danforth avenue, was summoned. He pronounced Law dead and had Thomas removed to the hospital.

WITH THE FRENCH WOUNDED

THE WOMAN'S SACRIFICE

London, April 22.—2.50 p.m. Away from the battlefield one sees war stripped of its glamor. We see the heroic work of nurses who are on duty day and night. There is devotion, self-sacrifice, suffering patriotism—qualities which only a great war and its terrible consequences can inspire to the highest development. The woman everywhere are helping and everywhere one sees self-sacrifice and devotion to country.

The women of Canada do not know how fortunate they are. Here there are plenty of women who suffer in silence, whose strength is cut of all proportion to their ambition. Their hands are tied by some chronic disease common to womankind; that weak back, accompanied by pain here or there, extreme nervousness, sleeplessness, maybe fainting spells or spasms, are all signals of distress for women. She may be growing from girlhood into womanhood, passing from womanhood to motherhood. At any or all of these periods of a woman's life she should take a tonic and nervine, prescribed for just such cases by a physician of vast experience in the diseases of women. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription has successfully treated more cases the past fifty years than any other known remedy. When you feel dull, headachy, backache, dizzy, or perhaps have "the blues," there is nothing you can accomplish, nothing you can enjoy. You can find permanent relief in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is sold by medicine dealers, or trial bottle by mail from Dr. Pierce, Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N.Y., on receipt of 50 cents, or one dollar for large box.

Dr. Pierce's Medicines are manufactured in Canada, at the World's Dispensary, Bridgeburg, Ont.

Taking Over Electric Wiring

Hydro Electric Power Commission to Enforce Act Throughout Province

TORONTO, April. 23.—Special—The Hydro-Electric Power Commission are about to enforce all inspection of electric wiring throughout Ontario.

By reference to a notice it will be observed that the Hydro-Electric Power Commission are enforcing the Electrical Inspection Act throughout the province. The commission advise that they intend appointing more inspectors, and if there are any towns that there will be no section where an inspector cannot be reached within a reasonable time, and that with the minimum of expense.

Owing to a recent amendment to the Power Act inspectors, and all electrical inspectors throughout the province, who "were formally appointed by different municipalities, will be automatically taken over by the commission so that the municipal councils will have no further responsibility in this matter. This is an excellent arrangement and one which has met with the heartiest approbation of the electrical contracting and engineering fraternity.

The Hydro Power Commission will, however, from this office control the inspectors throughout the province, and are now advising all the different municipalities regarding the nature of the act, and taking steps to provide inspectors as quickly as circumstances will permit. This portion of the work is under the electrical inspection department, situated at 53 West Richmond street, Toronto.

The electrical inspection department is in charge of Mr. H. F. Strickland, and full information can be obtained by reference to this department.

War Horse at Function.

The old war horse, ridden by Col. Denison in South Africa, was on hand at the decoration of the South African Veterans' monument in London, Ont., a few days ago, in charge of Staff-officer, Lady Betty, who is now quartered at Wolseley Barracks, her present career now being with the distinct Canadian contingent at the front. It said to be the only horse in Canada wearing an active service medal. She was brought to the ceremony in full regalia, wearing on her breast the Queen's medal with the four bars, representing her engagements in the Transvaal; at Driefontein, in Cape Colony and at Paardeburg. Though getting on in years now, Lady Betty still carries herself with the dignity befitting a veteran of the Boer war.

Letters To Hostile Countries.

Official announcement is made that private letters to Germany, Austria or Turkey are now likewise to be forwarded through neutral countries, subject to the usual conditions of censorship. Such letters must be forwarded through an agency in a neutral country, and they must be in open envelopes enclosed in a covering letter. Remittances to friends in European countries other than Great Britain, France or Russia should be made through branches of Thomas Cook & Son in neutral countries.

Alberta's Technical Education.

Technical education will receive considerable attention from the Alberta Government, and a great deal of money will be devoted to this purpose according to educationists in that province who have been conferring with the Provincial Cabinet.

Splendid Concert To 39th Regiment

Local Talent Render Fine Programme to Full House—The Personnel

A very pleasing programme was given the officers and men of the 39th Battalion by Mrs. A. P. Allen and her pupils, assisted by Miss Jean Anderson, Private Mancey, and the 39th Regiment Band last evening in the City Hall.

The girls looked charming in white middy suits, and for the different numbers added yellow and green bonnets, also soldier caps for the patriotic numbers.

The first number was a selection by the 39th Regiment Band which has been lately organized.

"The Call of the Motherland" and "Tip-Top-Tipperary Mary" were sung by Miss Lillian Sharpe. Miss Sharpe is rapidly coming to the front as one of our most popular young vocalists, and her full mezzo-soprano voice captivated the soldier boys last night.

"Why Can't a Girl be a Soldier?" was sung by Miss Helen Ketcheson. Miss Ketcheson's Australia voice and pleasing manner made all the boys wish that girls could be soldiers.

Mr. Harold Barrett and chorus sang "Soldiers of the King." Mr. Barrett has a fine baritone voice and was heard to great advantage in this number.

Miss Jean Anderson brought down the house in the Highland Fling in Highland costume. As an encore she gave a sailor dance.

Mrs. Allen is always at home in patriotic numbers, and sang with her girls "Johnny Canuck's the Boy." Mrs. Allen deserves great credit for the excellent way the young ladies were trained.

Private Manson was surrounded by sixteen pretty girls in yellow bonnets, who made him decidedly nervous when he sang "When You Wore a Tulip."

Miss Agnes Logue sang "Michigan" the girls and the soldiers joining in the chorus. Miss Logue has a clear high soprano voice and sang in a very pleasing manner.

Mrs. Allen and the girls sang "Tipperary." The soldier boys were greatly amused at their efforts at whistling.

A selection by the Band closed the programme.

Major Bywater, who acted as chairman, thanked Mrs. Allen and her talented class and the others who so kindly assisted in the programme.

Miss Edna Wallace acted as accompanist. Those taking part were: Mrs. A. P. Allen. Miss Vera Boyle, Miss Effie Miller, Miss Jean Johnson, Miss Marorie Vermilyea, Miss Phyllis Bogart, Miss Lillian Sharpe, Miss Helen Ketcheson, Miss Agnes Logue, Miss Mamie Waters, Miss Margaret Wegner, Miss Margaret McGregor, Miss Edna Wallace, Miss Marguerite Sharpe, Mr. Harold Barrett, and Private Mancey.

ST. GEORGE'S DAY.

St. George's Day will this year be observed with more enthusiasm than ever. Englishmen can to-day wear the rose with pardonable pride. We suppose it is because the rose is the emblem of England that it is worn on St. George's Day, but it is evident that the festival will never be generally observed in this manner, as the rose in April is a hot-house flower and beyond the reach of most people. On the other hand, the bluebell is as plentiful as the primrose in England, and it is probably for this reason that the bluebell is also worn on St. George's Day. "In the Garden of God" we find the names of flowers connected with festivals and saints, which are chiefly taken from Dr. Prior's "Names of British Plants"; and other writers. Under the date "April 23, St. George," we read: "Bluebell, Scilla nutans. Probably dedicated to him from the unexplained custom of wearing a blue rosat on St. George's Day."

Many legends have grown up surrounding the life of St. George, the one with which his name will always be popularly associated being, of course, his conflict with the dragon, which must be taken as symbolic of St. George destroying the enemies of Christianity. The Saint's popularity in England came from the East, and dates from the Crusades. At the Council of Oxford, in 1222, his feast was ordered to be kept as a national festival, and Edward III. adopted him as Patron of the Order of the Garter. The number of ancient churches dedicated to St. George in England is 162.

This is the occasion to remind Englishmen that their patron Saint must not be confused with a certain George of Cappadocia, as occurs unfortunately in historian as Gibbon has fallen into the error. St. George was born in 280 at Lydda, in Palestine, where his father was said to be Governor of the city, and to have suffered for the Christian faith. In early life George of Lydda entered the army, in which he appears to have distinguished himself by many feats of courage and endurance. The Emperor Diocletian raised him to the rank of Military Tribune of his Guards. It is probable that he accompanied him as one of the Imperial Guard on his brief Egyptian campaign, and that he also served under Galerius in the Persian War, which lasted two years. "It was during this sojourn," (writes a biographer) "that he found time to organize the Christian community of Urmi, the principal town of the chief province of Persian Armenia. The campaign being at an end, the Saint appears to have taken up his residence at Berytus, or Beirut, and it is believed that about this time Diocletian sent him to Britain. He sailed through the Irish Sea, now known as St. George's Channel, and landed at Porta Sistuntiorum, afterwards known as the county of Lancaster. This fact will account for more churches being dedicated to his honour in that county than elsewhere in England." St. George protested against the Imperial edicts torturing Christians and destroying churches. Foreseeing his own call to suffer he gave away all his possessions to the poor, and having thus prepared for death, made a personal appeal to the Emperor, Diocletian, who, urged by the priests of Appolo, ordered his execution.

England's Day is to have official recognition at Toronto. The special service at St. James' Cathedral will be attended by the Lieutenant-Governor, members of the House of Commons, Provincial Governments, City Council, University of Toronto, and various patriotic associations. The eyes of the whole world are turned to England to-day, that "bright little, tight little Island," which is playing such an important part in this war. It is in England where the Empire's vast military preparations are being planned; it is from England that the British navy is being controlled, which is commanding the seas in such a marvellous manner; and it is on England that the Germans are lavishing their venomous hate. To quote from "The Chant of Love for England"—

"A song of hate is a song of hell,
Some there be who sing it well.
Let them sing it loud and long,
We lift our hearts in a loftier song.
We lift our hearts to Heaven above,
Singing the glory of her we love,
England!"

HONOR BEFORE PARTY.

There can be no doubt whatever but that the action of Sir Robert Borden, in reading out of the party two members whose transactions in connection with war supplies were open to criticism, has met with general approval in the country. It is recognized that the Premier was actuated solely by a desire to preserve the honor of Parliament, and that he was reluctantly performing what he deemed to be his duty in expressing his disapproval of the conduct of the members. The following extract from an article in Beck's Weekly is typical of many which have been written on the subject:—

"Sir Robert Borden's speech last week on the Maliban purchases was one of those rare utterances which elevate the entire tone of public life. No Canadian, of whatever party, unless blinded by partisan rancor, can read it without feeling a new pride and a new confidence in his own country. It can hardly fail to have a tremendous effect upon the public opinion of Canada in the forthcoming elections; and the chief reason why it achieves that effect is that it was delivered without the slightest thought for anything else than the honor of Parliament. To Sir Robert himself that speech was neither a bid for personal liberty nor an effort to make capital for his party; it was simply a painful duty imposed upon him by a high sense of his responsibility as leader of the House, and in particular of the Conservative party. Among the many unfortunate political leaders who had no such sense of responsibility and no such courage to face its consequences, Sir Robert stands out like a giant among pygmies. It is not often that he shows us the full measure of his stature, for it takes a good deal to provoke him to wrath on exercise of authority as last week; but one result is that he does not cheapen himself. He has never been accused of being a showy personage.

The Liberal Leaders did not shine by comparison, in their treatment of the Oliver scandal which cropped up about the same time. Their haste to clear their own personal skirts was pathetic and scarcely dignified, and left them no time to bother about the honor of their party. It is true that they did scarcely rebuke Mr. Oliver as the Prime Minister rebuked Messrs. Foster and Garland, because they must have had a very fair idea of what Mr. Oliver was doing the past few years past. Mr. Oliver will, I presume, be known no more."

OLIVER'S EXPLANATION—INNOCENCE PERSONIFIED!

The Hon. Frank Oliver, late Minister of the Interior, having had his administration of the lands and coal mines of the West challenged during the last session of Parliament, has, over his own signature, made an explanation of his personal dealings in land and mines, in which, among other plausible things, he innocently and with child-like simplicity, tells his readers that

"While I acted as Minister I paid very little attention to my own private business, and the lease ran on during that period, with its lessee sometimes paying the mine on a small scale, sometimes leasing it to others, and neglect of the mine was not operated at all.

"On leaving office I naturally began to look after my own business, and then found my patent was not of sufficiently early date to entitle me to the coal rights. I at once applied to the department for a lease at the coal rights, at a time when the Hon. Mr. Rogers was Minister of the Interior, received it in due course, and had a new lease made out to the sub-lessee in accordance with the requirements of the law, which he accepted. Since then the lessee has further sub-let to two different parties, from whom he has had some difficulty in collecting the royalty due him, and I have had correspondence difficulty in collecting the royalty from him; hence my delay in making settlement with the department.

"The Minister admitted that although I was in error as to royalty the rental was paid up, so that there was no question as to the revenue of the department against me for any moneys that I might be found to owe them."

The charge was not that the royalty had not been paid, but that the royalty payable upon the coal mined was still in the pocket of the late Hon. Minister of the Interior! Had an underling done the same thing what would have been his fate?

THE RACE APPEAL AGAIN TO THE FORE.

The success of the Laurierite party in the past, has been principally by the result of race and creed appeal. At the 1911 election Ontario resented this cry, and will do so again. Honest government upon sound principles should guide the electors and not race or creed.

The Hon. George P. Graham profited by the cry at the last election, and is again reviving it. In an address to the Liberal Convention at Sturgeon Falls, Hon. George P. Graham," says a contemporary, "is reported to have 'urged his audience to work unitedly for the return of Liberal members, and called upon the French-Canadians in the constituency to support Laurier by voting for Young.' He said, 'Every French-Canadian who allowed himself to be led away to vote for a Tory was sticking his knife in their great Chief's back.' Probably Mr. Graham did not desire to have these utterances reported. He was making an appeal to French-Canadians and offering the nationality of his leader as a reason for French support. Unfortunately too many Liberal politicians adopt that method of 'putting down race and creed' in Canada."

CURRENT COMMENT

Italy is all ready for war; but the cartridge may be a blank one, as before.

Montreal Mail: "The Germans are sending men, inviting peace, into the English and French trenches in France. The war "por'age" used is a rock, to which the note is attached. This is even better than throwing hand grenades from browse sticks."

Brantford Expositor: "It must soon be determined whether King Alcohol or King George is at the head of the British nation."

Ottawa Journal: "Our guess is that members of Parliament hereafter of all parties will keep clear of dabbling with Government contracts."

The holiday of Sir Edward Grey now turns out to have been a salmon fishing trip. That kind of diplomacy is not to be despised when the big fish are running.

Montreal Mail: "More than 150,000 persons in England and Scotland have agreed to abstain from liquor till the end of the war. But there are a lot more who haven't."

Bulgarian irregulars are again making raids into Serbian territory. The raiders seemingly are bent on reminding the world that there is bound to be trouble in the Balkans in perilous times as well as in quiet times.

The Bothis forces are winning in German Southwest Africa and French arms are having further successes in the Cameroons. Germany's colonial territory is gradually and surely being taken away from her.

"In a business house disgraced when an employe steals or defaults." If not, why is a government disgraced by the operations of rascals whom it elects to protect? If dishonest officials in public service with corrupt deals cast aside, still the government is not condemned. It must review the officials and punish the thieves. No human organization can escape scandals and losses if employes, inside or outside, plunderers outside to loot the premises."—Toronto Sun.

Montreal Gazette: "A Toronto news paper fears that work on the new Union Station is likely to begin by the 1st of May. It does not seem to share very much confidence in the report. With respect to the proposed structure, the citizens of the Ontario capital seem to need convincing as much as those they serve from Missouri. The dirt will have to fly before they will believe."

Bishop Bidwell, preaching at Kingston, remarked that recent disclosures would make one think that the eighth commandment had been expunged from the decalogue. Such comment is strong, but it certainly has been made evident that there are people who ignore the divine injunction not to steal when they have business relations with the Government.

Mr. Lloyd George, speaking in the House of Commons yesterday, said there was more ammunition fired at Neuve Chapelle than in the whole of the Boer War. He added also that, if the product of ammunition in September was represented by the figure 20, that for March would stand at 388. In six months the produce has been increased over ten times.

Toronto World: "Every time you lick a war stamp, think of the Kaiser and give it another lick." Yes, we can be sure that if we do not lick stamps for King George and his myrmidons we shall have to lick them for Wilhelm and his pirates. This reflection makes it so pleasant to lick a stamp that one goes to a pile of unanswered letters with gratitude for the chance to give the Kaiser another lick.

DOGS TO SCENT GRAIN

NEW YORK, April 22.—A new breed of dogs is being trained in Germany to scent hidden supplies of grain smuggled away in bar soap and avoid seizure by the German Government agents, according to the Augsburger Post Zeitung. "A well-known dog fancier," the paper says, "has succeeded in training a number of police dogs in a short time in such a manner that they have been able to render admirable assistance to the agents charged with the control of grain and flour supplies. These dogs are able to discover flour or grain even if it is concealed many metres beneath hay stacks. The dogs have already been turned over to the authorities, and will shortly be acquired by them for use in this valuable patriotic service."

Murder Charge Against Child

Nine-Year-Old Paterson Boy Accused of Shooting Playmate

PATERSON, N.J., April 22.—As Mrs. Samuel J. Ross was returning from a shopping trip this afternoon, she saw nine-year-old George Everitt, son of George M. Everitt, a neighbor, trudging toward her pushing a wheelbarrow along the sidewalk. As the boy came abreast of her, Mrs. Ross saw that another boy lay face down in the wheelbarrow, and she stopped George to ask him what was the matter.

The small boy said that Michael Quant, an eight-year-old playmate, had been struck by an automobile, and he was carrying him to the hospital. Mrs. Ross looked at the boy in the wheelbarrow and saw there was a bullet wound over his right eye, and that apparently he was dead. Greatly excited she called for an ambulance, and Dr. Swan from St. Joseph's Hospital, said the Quant boy had probably been killed instantly by a bullet which entered his brain.

Young Everitt had run when Mrs. Ross called the ambulance, and Detective William Lord found the boy in his home. He took the child to police headquarters, where young George changed his story, and said that he and Michael, who were school mates and friends, had been playing in the street after leaving school. He had become hungry and had run home for a piece of bread and butter. On his return he found the young Quant boy dead in the road.

Captain John Tracey questioned the boy closely and young George began to add details to his story, telling how the automobile had run down his playmate and how he had tried to get him to the hospital as quickly as possible. Finally, he admitted that neither of these stories was true, and said that young Michael had died in the attic of the Everitt home. He insisted, however that he had not shot Michael and had not touched a revolver, which they had found in an old satchel.

George said they had gone to his home after school to play. They were in the attic when Michael noticed a satchel and asked what was in it. George said he had replied that it was none of Michael's business and had started down stairs with his back turned to his companion. Then he heard the report of a shot. He returned and found Michael lying on the floor. He said he could not name him, so took the boy on his shoulder, carried him downstairs and got the wheelbarrow, intending to take him to the hospital. He said he had returned to the attic after Mrs. Ross had appeared and put the revolver back in the satchel.

As the youngster talked, he grew very sleepy and when he had finished telling about the revolver, he fell asleep in his father's arms. Mr. Everitt was allowed to take the boy home on his promise to have him in court tomorrow morning, as the police have charged him with murder. There are no powder marks on the forehead of the dead boy, and the police contend that marks would have been made had he shot himself.

CONTROL OF INDIA'S WHEAT

LONDON, April 22.—Under arrangements by the Imperial Government for controlling the sale of Indian wheat, exports in the enormous amount of 2,000,000 tons will be sold under Government auspices. This is probably the largest transaction of the kind on record.

The first cargo has been sold at 67 shillings per quarter. Assuming that an average price of 65 shillings is obtained, the whole amount involved will reach about £29,000,000 ($145,000,000).

The Indian Wheat Committee, of which Lord Lucas is chairman, has issued full explanatory details of the steps taken by the Indian Government to control prices of wheat in India. This has been done by appointing the Government as the trade to be Government agents and by fixing the maximum price, which will be gradually reduced as the season advances. Any profits accruing on the sale of the above-mentioned exportable surplus will benefit the Indian revenue.

Italy seems practically to have decided upon war. Come on in Italy, the going's fine.

Mammoth Shell Contract Awarded Canadian Firm

Russian Government Places Orders in Hands of Canadian Car Co. of Montreal

OTTAWA, April 22.—Full details of the contract recently awarded by the Imperial Russian Government to the Canadian Car and Foundry Co. of Montreal and Amherst amounting to a total of $83,000,000 calling for five million shrapnel and howitzer shells at an average cost price of $17.85 are now available. The contract is the largest which has been let in this continent since the outbreak of the war.

The Canadian Car and Foundry Company cannot of course begin to manufacture the full contract and subcontracts have already been let to the extent of $21,724,000 to some 37 American shell and powder concerns. Four other contracts totalling in value $30,104,320 are pending. The remainder of the contract will be filled by the Canadian Car Company at its Canadian plants.

The Canadian Car and Foundry Company, it is understood has also assumed the option on the future orders of the Russian Government for war orders on this continent and the privilege to take up the order itself. Under the terms of the agreement the Russian Government is to make advances to the Canadian company in cash from time to time of sums varying from $750,000 to four million dollars and in one or two instances may receive as much as $10,000,000 which funds are to be used, it is stated, for the extension of the company's plant.

The most important contract which has been sublet by the Canadian Car and Foundry Company this far is given to the Recording and Computing Machine Company of Dayton, Ohio, amounting in value to $6,000,000. This contract calls for the delivery of the major portion of the time fuses to be used on the shells. Other large American contracts are to the Michigan Brass and Copper Company of Detroit, Federal Pressed Steel Company of Milwaukee and Barney and Smith Car Company, Dayton, O., American Locomotive Company, Pressed Steel Car Company and United States Cartridge Company will also likely participate in the order. Senator N. Curry, President of the Canadian Car and Foundry Company is credited with having obtained the order. It is not likely that there can be many sub-contracts let in Canada as most Canadian firms which would be in a position to fill orders have all they can handle with English contracts.

WHAT KINDNESS DOES FOR CHICKENS

During the last months of the expiring winter, subscribers frequently write to The Farmers' Advocate and ask why their hens die when apparently in good health. They often complain of the foul dropping dead when picking up their feed or the birds may drop from the roosts at night. All the explanations indicate that death is sudden and it is hard to understand how the heart of a hen should become disturbed. It appears to be a peculiarity of the human race alone, and a trouble discovered chiefly for remedies and the medical profession. Such accident deaths in the flock are traceable, in most cases, to over-feeding and indigestion. Many times corn is given liberally, yet the hens are not obliged to work for their feed. The corn kernel is large, easily seen, and obtained by the bird without much effort. The result is liver trouble and sudden death or the fowl become too fat and die of apoplexy.

Mortality in the flock may assume the appearance of an epidemic, yet this trouble should not be confounded with tuberculosis, which is contagious, and may result in a scourge. The losses from tuberculosis may be as numerous but they are not suddenly as those from over-feeding of rich and heating foods. Above all, the hens should have plenty of exercise both summer and winter and when confined they should be obliged to scratch for their grain. Green feed such as sprouted oats, mangolds, cabbage, apple or potatoes will tend to maintain an equilibrium in the system and encourage health. The nearer feed conditions resemble those of the summer time the better will be the condition of the birds and the better they will lay.

Northern Liberal Praises Government

Thinks Ontario Temperance Legislation Is Best Province Has Had

SOUTH PORCUPINE, April 22.—At a luncheon tendered Premier Hearst, Hon. G. Howard Ferguson and Hon. Frank Cochrane by the Board of Trade here on Mar. 31, C. Jay, a staff artist Liberal, who seconded a resolution of welcome, said that he regarded the recent temperance legislation of the Hearst Government as the most important advance towards temperance ever made in the Province. The personnel of the Provincial Commission, two members of which were known to him personally, was evidence that the Government intended to deal with the matter apart from politics, and in the public interest. He was satisfied that great and beneficial results would come from the change in the administration of the law. A number of matters of local interest were discussed with the Ministers on the spot, and with the facts of the situation immediately available satisfactory solutions were reached. A stop was made at Matheson, and a public conference was held with the Board of Trade, Mayor Dan Johnston presiding and Mr. William Douglas presenting a request for a Government guarantee of $14,000 bonds for a waterworks system. Having regard to the circumstances, Premier Hearst spoke sympathetically of the needs of the locality and asked that a full statement of the case be sent to the Government. This would receive its best attention.

OPERATIONS SUSPENDED

LONDON, April 22.—"The Russians everywhere have suspended operations since the spring floods have subsided, and conditions are favorable for manoeuvering," says the Daily Telegraph's Petrograd correspondent.

The correspondent says General Ruzkievitch, the victor of the siege of Przemysl, who has returned to Petrograd, has paid a tribute to the sportsmanlike conduct of the Austrian garrison.

"I consider it desirable to point out," General Ruzkievitch is reported as having said, "that while the discussions of the surrender of the garrison were in progress no stores were set on fire and no ammunition was blown up. Such explosions as occurred were the result of fires lighted before the discussions began.

"It is incorrect to say that Przemysl was forced to surrender owing to starvation, as stocks sufficient for two weeks were found there. The surrender was due simply to the Austrian Army's conviction that further resistance and sacrifice were useless. The men of the garrison suffered most severely from demoralization, which incapacitated thousands of them."

Woman Fifty Years Old—Coughed More or Less Since Childhood—Found No Relief Until She Got Vinol.

Dayton, Ohio.—"I want everybody to know what Vinol has done for me. I was fifty years old and ever since I was a young girl I have had a cough most of the time, and sick headaches which left me weak and with no desire for food.

"I took all kinds of medicines but nothing seemed to do me any good. Finally my druggist asked me to try Vinol, saying that if it did not help me he would refund my money. I felt so much better after taking one bottle I bought more. Now my cough is entirely cured. I have no more sick headaches. I have a good appetite and feel better than I ever did in my life, and gladly recommend Vinol to the afflicted."—Mrs. J. C. SCHNEIDER, Dayton, Ohio.

Vinol is not a secret nostrum, simply a combination of the medicinal elements found in cod livers, together with tonic iron, contains no oil and is delicious tasting. We ask every man of woman in this vicinity suffering from chronic coughs, colds or bronchitis, and every weak, run-down person to try Vinol.

Brakeman J. J. Carter Presented With Albert Medal by the Duke of Connaught

MONTREAL, April 22—An act of courage receiving fitting recognition yesterday afternoon at the hands of H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, who personally presented the Albert medal of the second class to J. J. Carter, freight brakeman of Havelock, for having at the risk of his life saved a little girl from being crushed to death. The presentation was made at Lady Strathcona's residence.

The gallant act which earned this highly-prized medal occurred at Tweed, Ont., in May of last year, Carter was on the fireman's side of the locomotive of a train running eighteen miles an hour. The semaphores were set in the clear position, but the little girl had got on the track by crawling through the fence. Shouting out "Stop!" to the engineer, Carter hurried out through the front window on to the running board, and so on to the pilot. The engineer put on the brakes, but could not stop in time, so that the train was still running eight or ten miles an hour when they reached the child. Just as they came to the spot Carter jumped ahead of the engine, and by grabbing the child with his right hand pulled her along with himself into a ditch clear of the track. The eighth car had reached the spot before the train was brought to a standstill.

In his report the engineer said: "I consider Carter took a desperate chance in doing as he did, as a misstep would have cost him his life."

J. A. Culverwell Dies in Toronto

Was Leading Figure in Development of Trent Canal Power

A prominent figure in the life of the Midland counties of Ontario passed away after a short illness at the home of his sister, Mrs. G. A. Brayley, 92 Hinscarth road, Toronto, Wednesday night, in the person of John Alexander Culverwell, a hydraulic electrical engineer, whose name has been for years closely associated with the development of the Trent Valley Canal.

Mr. Culverwell was in his 69th year. He was born at West Raynham in 1867. Deceased was the son of the late John T. Culverwell and Mrs. Culverwell, the latter still living at Colborne in this city. He was a grandson of the late Samuel Treat, Somerset, England, and was educated at the Public School and Upper Canada College, Toronto. In his early years he was connected with the Provincial Natural Gas company through the Hon. Peter McLaren.

Later he went to the Edison Company as Canadian representative, for that firm. Some fifteen years ago Mr. Culverwell became deeply interested in the development of the Trent Valley Canal, and made this his main interest for several succeeding years. In connection with the Northumberland and Durham Power Company and the Central Ontario Power Company he did much work in the development of electric power in centre and eastern Ontario after the Government had undertaken to extend the canal. He was a life member of the Engineers' Club, Toronto, and a member of the Deep Waterways Association of Canada.

Mr. Culverwell was an Anglican and greatly interested in Church unity. To-wards the end he was a member of choirs, both of his own and outside churches. Mr. Culverwell in 1902 married Jessie Houghton, daughter of James L. Hill, of New York, who survives him. Since his marriage deceased resided in Port Hope, and took an active interest in the welfare of the lake shore towns.

Interment takes place in Toronto on Saturday.

MORE MONEY, LESS HOURS

DETROIT, Mich., April 22.—Announcement of a sweeping advance in wages and reduction of working hours for all employees of the Ford Motor Company, Limited of Canada, was made here today by G. M. McGregor, general manager of the concern. All employees who have been in the service of the company six months or longer are to receive a minimum wage of 50 cents an hour or $4.00 a day, the working hours reduced to eight hours a day or 48 hours a week.

The company employs about 2,400 persons at its factory at Ford, Ontario and its sales factories located in the principal cities of Canada. It is estimated this advance in wages will distribute approximately $600,000 in Canada, in addition to the wages they already receive, about $600,000 a year.

CHAPTER

His Story.

"Clare," I said, "if wish that we had brought some better clothes, if it were only one frock. You look the oddest figure."

And she did. She was lying head to head with me on the thick moss that climbed one part of the river bank. Behind us the ground rose in a steep slope, and there, above the trees, grey tits in bevies were playing with fieldfares. Little more than a mile higher up was the watershed, where our river, rustling away with twinkling, a fine thought of going down the farther slope toward Ilyberry, parted from its twin brother, who was thither bound, with scores upon scores of puny, green-backed riddles; and instead, came down our side gliding and swishing and swirling faster, and deeper and wider every hundred yards to Bristolen, full of red-speckled trout, all half a pound apiece, and very good to eat.

But they were not so sweet or toothsome in our stolen tastes as the tawny-orange "doubleheads" which Clare and I were eating as we lay. So busy was she with the luscious pile we had gathered that I had to wait for an answer. And then, "Speak to yourself," she said. "I'm sure you look like a short-tailed baby. If it comes very up the river, too. Munch, munch, munch!"

"Who is you impertinent, greedy little thief?"

"Oh, you know!" she answered. "Don't you wish you had your gray plush here, Babs?"

I flung a lump of calm disdain at her; but whether it was the berry juice which stained our faces that took from effect, or the fine mountain air which, I have always said, the foundation of despotism, "that made her callous, at any rate she only laughed horribly, and got up and went off down the stream with her red, leaving me to finish the clotted berries, and then to wash my face in snow-patches on the hillside—which somehow put me in mind of the grayplush—and follow or not, as I liked.

Clare had a wicked story of how I gave in to papa, and came to stay without anything but those rough clothes. She said I was mad—Jack Buchanan has told me that lawyers put no faith in anything he says she says, or she says he says, or he proves how much truth there is in this—that if Bab took none but her oldest clothes, and flitted all day, and had no one to run upon her errands—he meant Jack and the others, I suppose—she might possibly grow at last to Norway. Just as if I want to grow an inch! An inch indeed! I am five feet one and a half high, and pap, who puts me up inch short, says I'm pretty nearly done with the world. As for Miss Clare, she would give all her inches for my eyes. So there.

After Clare felt it began to be dull and chilly. When I had pictured to myself how we would be back at home for dinner again, and chosen the frock I would wear upon the first evening, I grew tired of the snowpatches, and started up stream, stumbling and falling into holes, and clambering over rocks, and only caring to save my red and my face. It was no occasion for the gray plush, but I had made up my mind to reach the wood that day, I knew, a little above the; having filched a yellow-bladed fly from Clare's hat, with a view to that particular place.

One did the same things things herabouts—pleased to be so young, I suppose. It was not a great churning stream, nor snow-white, roar and milky, such as we had seen in some parts—streams that affected to be always in flood, and had the look of forever the rocks asunder and clearing their path, even while you watched them with your fingers in your ears. Our river was none of these; still it was swifter than English rivers are wont to be, and in parts deeper and transparent as glass. In one place it would sweep over a ledge and fall wreathed in spray into a spreading lake of black, rock-bound water. Then it would narrow again until, where you could almost jump across, it darted smooth and unbroken down a polished shoot with a swoop like a swallow's. Out of this it would flurry afresh to brawl along a gravelly bed, skipping jauntily over first one and then another ridge of stones that silted up weir-wise and made as if they would bar the channel, but left the ice of these there were lovely pools.

To be able to throw into mine, I had to walk along the ridge, on which the water ran shallow, yet sufficiently deep to cover my boots. But I was well rewarded. The "forellie"—the Norse name for trout, and as prettily as their girl's wavy fair hair—were rising so merrily that I hooked and landed my first five minutes, the fly falling from its mouth as it touched the stones. I hate taking out hooks, I used at one time to leave the fly in the fish's mouth to be removed by papa in the weighing house; until Clare pricked her tongue at dinner with an almond, one, red flash, and was so mean as to keep it, though I remembered then what I had done to her, and was certain it was mine—which was nothing less than dishonest of her.

I had just got back to my place and made a fine cast, when there came—not the hard leap, and splash, and run which announced the half-pounder—but a deep, rich gurgle as the fly was gently sucked under, and with a growing strain upon the line, which began to move away down the pool as I struck made the winch spin again and filled me with mysterious pleasure. I was not conscious of thinking or of anything but that I had hooked a really good fish, and clutched the rod with both hands and let my feet go as tightly as I could upon the slippery gravel. The line moved up and down, and this way and that, now steadily and as with a purpose, and then again with an eccentric rush that made the rod bend to real spring and bend so that I looked for it to snap each moment. My hands began to grow numb, and the landing net hitherto an ornament, fell out of my waist-belt and went I know not whither. I suppose I must have stepped unwittingly into deeper water, for I felt that my skirts were adhesive, and altogether things were going shrewdly against me, when the presence of an ally close at hand was announced by a sheery shout from the far side of the river.

"Keep up your point! Keep up your point!" someone cried briskly. "That's the better!"

The unexpected sound—it was a man's voice—did something to keep my heart up. But for answer I could only shriek, "I cannot! I shall break!" watching the top of my rod as it jigged up and down, very much as it was in the fashion of Clare performing what she calls a waltz. She dances as hastily as a man.

"No, it will not," he cried back blandly. "Keep it up, and let out a little line with your fingers when he pulls hardest."

We were forced to shout and scream. The wind had risen and was adding to the noise of the water. Soon I heard him wading behind me. "Where's your landing-net?" he demanded, with the most provoking coolness.

"Oh, in the pool! Somewhere about. I am sure I don't know," I answered wildly.

What he said to this I really not exactly, but it sounded rude. And then he waded off to fetch, as I guessed, his own net. By the time he reached me again I was in a sad plight, feet wet, face, and hands benumbed, with the wind, and rain, and hail, which had come down upon us with a sudden violence, unknown, it is to be hoped, anywhere else were mottling my face all sorts of unbecoming colors. But the line was taut. And wet and cold went for nothing minutes later, when the fish lay upon the bank, its prismatic sides slowly turning from red and hill, and I knelt over in pity and hail in triumph, but wholly forgetful of the wind and rain.

"You did it very pluckily, little one," said the on-looker. "but I am afraid you will suffer for it by and by. You must be chilled through."

Quickly as I looked up at him, I only met a good-humored smile. He did not mean to be rude. And after all, what I was in such a mess, I was not possible that he could see what I was like. He was wet enough himself. The rain was streaming from the brim of the soft hat which he had turned down to shelter his face, and trickling from his chin, and dripping his shabby Norfolk jacket darker shade. As for his hands, they looked red and shrunken enough, and he had been walking almost to his waist. But he looked, I don't know why, all the stronger and manlier and nicer for these things, because, perhaps, he cared for them not one jot. Why? I looked like myself, I guessed not think. My skirts were as short as could be, and they were soaked; most of my hair was unbidden, my gloves were split, and my golden boots were out of shape. My face, too, to shiver and shake with cold, which was provoking till I knew it made me seem half as small again.

(Beck's Weekly

The decoration of Talbot Papineau for distinguished bravery in the field must be, to Montrealers, one of the most pleasing incidents that the war has yet developed. Although a most unassuming personality, he is probably more widely known and beloved in both French and English circles than any other of the younger generation of French-Canadians; for his interests have always been extraordinarily wide and varied, and wherever they touched him—athletics, the law, literature, the Canadian Club, military work, a dozen other fields—his intelligence, and charming disposition have made him friends.

"If history had left us any doubts as to the powerful character of that grand old "rebel," Louis Joseph Papineau, the achievements of his descendants would have enlightened us. Blood will tell, and the stock of old Papineau has made an everlasting impression upon the heart and mind of French and English Canada. The Papineau strain takes different expressions in different men, but in all the day may come when French-Canadians will feel that, as between the contribution of Henri Bourassa and that of Talbot Papineau to the progress of their race and country, that of the soldier who fought for Britain, France and Liberty was not the less important.

$5,000 For Boy Who Lost a Foot

Jury Does Not Signify Which Defendant Has to Pay It

TORONTO, April 22.—The jury in the action brought by Jack Metherall sued the Canadian National Exhibition Association, Con. T. Kennedy and the Con. T. Kennedy Carnival Company for $10,000 damages for the loss of a foot by his son sustained last fall when the boy stepped into an unprotected hole in the "Cave of the Winds," at the Exhibition, was out but a short time after the case closed today. The verdict awarded the plaintiff, John D. Metherall, $500 with the boy, $5,000, but there was no statement as to which of the defendants was to pay the sum.

Mr. Justice Clute, in summing up the case brought by Mr. Frederick Metherall, father of his son, John D. Metherall, who lost a foot in the exhibition Grounds on Children's Day last September, against the Canadian National Exhibition Association, Con. T. Kennedy and the Con. T. Kennedy Carnival Company, claiming $10,000 damages, pointed out that the latter defendants had been granted a license, not a lease, by the association. Whatever profits might be found, retained to themselves the control of tickets, and money and the right of supervision. What was the duty of the association to the public, whom it had invited to see shows the license of which had been granted to Con. T. Kennedy. It was for the jury to decide.

HOW THE LEPERS LIVE IN INDIA

At the regular monthly meeting of the Women's Auxiliary Mission to Lepers held at Toronto Bible College, Mrs. Glover, 1st Vice-President, presided, in the absence of Mrs. Trees. Miss Mullin read the secretary's report and Miss Lila Watt the treasurer's, which showed that $237.61, had been received from Toronto since the beginning of the year.

Miss Margaret Patterson, who had lately been Medical Superintendent of the Leper Asylum near Allahabad, India, in the course of a most interesting address, gave a good reason for the neglect shown by the natives of India towards lepers, that they were contagious. Leonard Tucker instructed the secretary of the board to notify the unanimous election of the selection entitled "Deutschland uber alles."

From the Indian Witness.

Cholera is absolutely unknown in Kashmir, and the people are free from many of the diseases which afflict the rest of India. Kashmir is a land of mountains, lakes and streams, and the climate is delightful. They are often found carefully crawling towards it, hoping not to be seen.

Each leper at Allahabad Asylum is given a small piece of ground to cultivate, a banana tree to plant and tend and enjoy the fruit thereof. He is allowed thirty-three cents a month, out of which he (or she) sets aside his tenth, and enjoys spending the remainder at their own little store for groceries, clothing, etc., often depriving himself of some of these to help his less fortunate brother.

STOCKBROKERS OF PARIS.

When They Fail They Are Invariably Treated as Criminals.

An agent de change (Paris stockbroker) can under the rule of the code of commerce never be adjudged bankrupt pure and simple, his insolvency always involving more or less criminal responsibility. In the absence of fraud the penalty is hard labor for a term, but in case of fraud the punishment is no less than hard labor for life.

The public, however, never suffers from the insolvency of an agent de change, because his liabilities, no matter what they amount to, are always taken care of and liquidated in full by the other members of the syndicate; who contribute obligatorily each year to a sort of insurance fund or reserve for the purpose. Besides, each of them must before being appointed make a deposit of from $2,000 to $20,000 francs at the treasury, which allows them an interest of 5½ per cent.

An agent de change, according to section 85 of the code of commerce, must not transact any commercial or banking business for his own account. He must have no financial interest in any commercial enterprise, whether in his own name or under an assumed name. He cannot even receive payment on account of any debt in favor of his clients. The penalty for the violation of this law may be a fine of 1,000 francs and eventually the dismissal of the offender.—Exchange.

Wires Near Houses.

The sight of a man trimming a tree suddenly falling on a house, killed by a shock from an electric wire against which the branches were resting, Phillip H. Edelman is to suggest in the Scientific American that not nearly enough attention is paid to stringing high power wires to keep them far away from trees, barns and houses. Mr. Edelman says that every municipality should require high voltage wires to be separated from all neighboring objects by a distance of not less than eight or ten feet.—New York World.

Gold Quartz For Building.

Gold in the walls of the first temple of the Latter Day Saints to be erected on British soil at Cardston will be worth something between $25,000 and $50,000. The granite for the walls is being shipped from the quarries near Nelson, B.C., where the rock assays $8 of free gold per ton. Five thousand tons of this stone will be used.

LINENS OF ALL KINDS WILL BE DEARER

While Scotland and Ireland furnish the English-speaking world with linens of all kinds, from linen thread to the finest household linens, the flax or raw material from which these linens are made is grown almost entirely in Belgium, Austria and Russia, with the finer grades of flax coming exclusively from Belgium.

These facts will readily explain why the advances in linen goods have been greater than any other line in connection with the dry goods trade. In the face of these great advances we are pleased to be able to announce that never before had we such a splendid reserve stock of Linens of all kinds, including Table Linens and Napkins, Towels and Towellings, and Fancy Linens of all kinds, and we offer these goods at the most attractive prices under present conditions.

STOCKS, BONDS AND GRAIN

Smuts and fusts of Grain Crops.

It is estimated that the losses sustained from smuts in Ontario grain crops amount to $2,720,000 annually, about two-thirds of which occur in oats, wheat being the next greatest sufferer. To cope with this danger Bulletin 229, entitled "Smuts and Rusts of Grain Crops," prepared by J. E. Howitt and H. B. Sifton, has been issued by the Ontario Department of Agriculture, for free distribution to those who may apply for it. This very practical bulletin goes fully into the cause and cure of smuts and rusts, and gives a number of ways of treating seed grain in order to avoid or lessen injury to grain crops from these causes.

Bad Weather Hit Oats.

There was an increase of nearly 125,000 acres in the area devoted to oats, owing to the unfavorable season, the average yield was decreased by 5 bushels to the acre, and the aggregate crop was over 19,000,000 bushels less than a year ago The figures show that the unfavorable, climatic conditions were even more injurious than the crop than to the wheat; this is, no doubt, due to the fact that oats were sown at a later date than wheat, and, therefore, did not receive the benefit of the early spring rains. The same remarks hold good with regard to the shrinkage in the yield of barley.

Canada's Overseas Trade.

The re-establishment of a steamship service between St. John, New Brunswick, and Cuba is announced. This will give the farmers of the Canadian province a good market for their produce, chiefly dairy products, and will also open up opportunities for other trade to and from the Dominion.

A Foolish Theft.

"You are charged with going through the pockets of a man who lived your cuticle."

"Guilty, your honor."

"A very foolish robbery. Why weren't you content to get his money in the usual manner?"—Pittsburgh Post.

Byron at Ostend.

At one time Count Gelcard was a great fort, ress looking out over the North sea through her unsearing loopholes upon the salts of Victoria. Here, indeed, Byron made his memorable flight, not from, but to Ostend, in terror of vocal bailiffs who were laying siege to his mansion in Piccadilly. The poet made the journey to Dover in his magnificent £200 coach, but had to wait until a storm abated before the mail packet felt it safe to sail. Then Byron was far, from secure, even in his steaming "Childe Harold's Pilgrimage" castiles.—London Standard.

STEAM MOTIVE POWER.

It Had Been Used Long Before the Time of Watts and Fulton.

The Marquis of Worcester while imprisoned in the Tower of London in 1606 invented and constructed a perfect steam engine and had it publicly exhibited the same year at Vauxhall in successful operation.

Thirty-four years later, in 1640, Denis Papin added the piston to the marquis' discovery. In 1698 Captain Savary devised and built a steam engine different in many details from those made by Worcester and Papin, and in 1705 Newcomb, Cawley and Savary conjointed their celebrated atmospheric engine, which was complete in every detail.

The above array of historical facts notwithstanding, James Watt, who was not born until sixty years after those great men had given the steam engine to the world, enjoys the distinction of being the veritable inventor, originator and author of the most useful contrivance of the present day.

Fulton, who lived and worked in the early part of the nineteenth century, is given the credit of being the man who demonstrated that steam could be applied to navigation—this, too, in face of the well known historical fact that De Gary propelled a vessel by steam in the harbor of Barcelona in 1543.—St. James' Gazette.

British Strategy.

Describing the capture of a line of trenches in the north, a British naval officer writes home of an unusual piece of strategy:

"The evening before there had been a heavy fall of snow," he said, "and the bright moonlight showed up every object with extraordinary clearness against the white background. The 125th infantry which had planned a raid on the enemy's trenches, only 20 yards away, found its project compromised, but a corporal was struck by a brilliant idea; every man pulled his shirt on over jacket and vest; thus they crept through the snow up to the edge of the German trenches without being seen and carried the entire line."

Creamed Potato Pie.

Cut enough cold boiled potatoes into dice to fill a pint measure. Put one ounce of flour and the same quantity of butter in a saucepan with a seasoning of salt and pepper. Cook it till thoroughly mixed; then add one breakfast cupful of milk and stir till smooth and thick. Add the potatoes and simmer for five minutes; then pour into a shallow baking tin previously well buttered. Mix a cupful of breadcrumbs in melted butter and spread over the potatoes. Bake till the crumbs are a golden brown. Serve hot.

CAREFUL DOCTOR

Prescribed Change of Food Instead of Drugs.

It takes considerable courage for a doctor to deliberately prescribe only food for a despairing patient, instead of resorting to the usual list of medicines.

Some truly scientific physicians recognize the value of consulting cases as they are and should be treated. Here's an instance:

"Four years ago I was taken with severe gastric fever, nothing would stay on my stomach, so that I was on the verge of starvation.

"I heard of a doctor who had a summer cottage near me—a specialist—and in a last resort I called him in.

"After he examined me carefully he advised me to live on Grape-Nuts and cream-Nuts at first, then as my stomach became strong to eat more.

"I kept at it and gradually began to take back color in my cheeks, memory became clear, where before everything seemed a blank. My limbs grew stronger and I could walk. So I steadily recovered.

"Now after a year on Grape-Nuts I weight 152 pounds. My people were surprised at the way grew fleshy and strong on this food."

I.O.O.F. Anniversary

Stirling Lodge Accompanied by Visiting Brethren Attend Service in St. John's Church

The ninety-sixth anniversary of the founding of the Independent Order of Oddfellows was celebrated in Stirling on Sunday last, when Stirling Lodge No. 221, I.O.O.F., attended Divine Service at St. John's church at 2.30 p.m. The day was all that could be desired and Brothren from Tweed, Belleville, Campbellford, Madoc and Frankford, were present, the total number being 123.

The service was hearty throughout, the singing excellent, the hymns most appropriate and the Anthem "Why Seek Ye the Living among the Dead" most feelingly rendered.

The Rector spoke on the parable of Dives and Lazarus, the great sin of omission which was certainly in evidence among many professing Christians who loved pleasure and luxury above all other things, that the teachings of Jesus Christ perhaps seldom entered their minds and if so they were banished immediately as his teaching and their ideas were antagonistic. The aim of Oddfellowship was to level class distinctions and to teach man the Commands of Jesus as set forth in Brotherly Love.

The following from 0ut of town were present: S. B. Rollins, Sam McKee, R. Trumbour, E. Wright, F. A. Klinck, G. S. Brawshaw, G. A. McNaught, R. Murray, John McNaught and Sam McCrea, R. Ashton, and Ralph McGuire, Tweed; B. O'Hara, E. Harden, G. Alcombrack, R. Richmond, E. Wannamaker, R. Ilsen, C. Sills, J. Bentley, M. R. Wallace, E. Morrison, W. S. McBain, B. Bailey, B. B. DEATH OF A FORMER RESIDENT OF ASPHODEL

Mr. M. R. Elmhirst received the sad intelligence of the death of his eldest brother Joseph Elmhirst, of Michigan, on April 9th, after a month illness, of catarrh of the stomach. The end came with a paralytic stroke on the 9th. He died on the 26th without regaining consciousness. He was 71 years old, being the eldest of a family of 13. All the others are living, he being the first to break the family tie. He went to Michigan some 27 years ago, and has resided there until his death. He is survived by his wife, who was Miss Sarah Speer of South Dummer, (she being a sister of the Rev. J. C. Speer of Toronto) and also by a grown up family.—Norwood Register.

Appeal Against Temperance Vote

SHERBROOKE, Que., April 22.—The hearing of the petition in the case of Beaudoin against McIntosh and others in connection with the temperance vote in Stanstead County, commenced in the Superior Court yesterday before Mr. Justice Globensky. Petitioner seeks to set aside the vote on the Canada Temperance Act which took place on August 6 last and which resulted in a majority for prohibition. The special reason alleged for setting aside the proceedings is an illegal defect regarding the ballot paper.

New Regulation On Contraband

BERLIN, via London, April 2.—Amendments to the prize rules governing the operations of the German navy, signed by Emperor William and Admiral von Tirpitz published in the Reichs Anzeiger, were designed as "a reciprocal for the decision by England and her allies contravening the declaration of London of February 26, 1909."

Under the new order field glasses, nautical instruments, pig lead, aeroplanes, coal and coke are made absolute contraband. Several other commodities are added to the list of conditional contraband, including wool, rubber, iron and several other ores. The regulation prescribes that these articles shall be assumed conditional contraband destined for the enemy if consigned "to order or to a person whose name does not appear in the ship's papers or a person in the enemy's territory." In such cases it is provided that a ship shall be liable to capture even if bound for a neutral port.

The order directs also that conditional contraband may be confiscated without regard to the consignee when a ship is destined for a neutral country from which the nations at war with Germany obtain articles of the kind in question.

WOMEN PUT AID ON GIRL'S FACE

CONNELLSVILLE, Pa., April 22.—Bertha Schultz, the fifteen year old daughter of a well-to-do farmer, was attacked on Tuesday by two masked women near a coke plant in the oil shirts of Connellville. One of the women held Miss Schultz while the other pressed on each cheek the uncorked neck of a bottle filled with acid. Her face was badly burged, and she was then allowed to go. Several weeks ago Miss Schultz received a letter ordering her to place $1,000 and a gold watch in a secluded spot. She ignored the letter.

SYNOPSIS OF COAL MINING REGULATIONS

Coal mining rights of the Dominion, in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Yukon Territory, and in a portion of the Province of British Columbia, may be leased for a term of twenty-one years at an annual rental of $1 an acre. Not more than 640 acres will be leased to one applicant.

Application for a lease must be made by the applicant in person to the Agent or Sub-Agent of the district in which the rights applied for are situated.

In surveyed territory the land must be described by sections, or legal subdivisions of sections, and in unsurveyed territory the tract applied for shall be staked by the applicant himself.

Each application must be accompanied by a fee of $5, which will be refunded if the rights applied for are not available, but not otherwise. A royalty shall be paid on the merchantable output of the mine at the rate of five cents per ton.

The person operating the mine shall furnish the Agent with sworn returns accounting for the full quantity of merchantable coal mined and pay the royalty thereon. If the coal mining rights are not being operated, such returns should be furnished at least once a year.

The lease will include the coal mining rights only, but the lessee may be permitted to purchase whatever available surface rights may be considered necessary for the working of the mine at the rate of $10.00 an acre.

For full information application should be made to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, Ottawa, or to any Agent or Sub-Agent of Dominion Lands.

W. W. CORY,
Deputy Minister of the Interior.

N. B.—Unauthorized publication of this advertisement will not be paid for.—3626.

Nagging at Britain U. S.'s Attitude

Hon. Arthur Meighen Sharply Criticises President Wilson's War Policy

OTTAWA, April 22.—Adressing the Laurentian Club here, Hon. Arthur Meighen, solicitor-general for Canada, offered sharp criticism of the policy of President Woodrow Wilson toward the war, declaring that the United States appeared to care more for party politics and dollars and cents than for principles of justice and freedom and the cause of humanity.

Referring to President Wilson's New York speech, claiming glory for a position of magnificent neutrality, he said all the world knew Britain was fighting a battle to save humanity, fighting to save the United States as well as the rest of the world from a tyranny which would have overwhelmed all. Instead of moral assistance the United States was continually nagging at Britain.

JUMPS FROM WINDOW TO ESCAPE POLICE

TORONTO, April 22.—When the police yesterday afternoon, broke into offices on the third floor of the Yonge Street Arcade, where Charles Jones was alleged to be conducting a handbook business, Jones made a daring escape by means of the window, in two drops of 20 feet, and made a clean getaway. Detectives had to break a second and inner door to get into the office, and Jones was evidently warned by telephone, as when the police entered the room he made a dash for window and seized a rope attached to the window sill. Hand over hand out of the hands of Plaintofthesman Massey, however, and Jones was buried to the roof of a shed, 20 feet below. From there he jumped to the yard and escaped away.

A search of the neighborhood was made by Detective McKinney, but no trace of Jones was found. Papers gathered up by the police are said to show that Jones had been doing a big handbook business.

SOLDIERING IN THE WEST.

Maj.-Gen. Steele's Reminiscences Full of Quaint Incidents of Service.

The newly-published reminiscences of Major-General S. B. Steele, C.B., M.V.O., Inspector-General of the Western Division of the Canadian Militia, brings most vividly to our attention the mightier deeds linked up with the progress of the North west, from the time of the first Riel rebellion up to the present day. Gen. Steele, in Toronto recently and his unfortunate accident while there, brings him and his book to our attention.

From the days when the West was a prairie barren of all save Indians, buffalo, and traders up to the time when he left it to go to the Klondyke to handle the gold rush of '97, Gen. Steele takes us through a series of adventure more thrilling, more tremendous than the fiction written for the purpose of garnishing for us an undeserivous existence. He has seen vast herds of buffalo and wandering shy bands of Indians on the site of what are now great cities, and the wheat-laden sources of great wealth.

Gen. Steele was born at Purbroke, Simcoe County, in 1849. At the age of 16 he enlisted as a soldier to fight the Fenians, and he secured a commission in the Leicestershire Regiment. "At the age of twenty, he joined the 1st Ontario Rifles to go to Red River at the first Riel uprising in '69. Of his fight through the campaign, of his joining the Northwest Mounted Police on its formation in 1874, of his work in it from Winnipeg to the Rockies for many a long year is a fascinating story. He is the Riel Rebellion in 1885, of his work in the Klondyke, and finally as commander of Strathcona's Horse in South Africa—all these things tell a lively tale of his making of Canada. And now Gen. Steele is mentioned as commander of the second Canadian contingent!

As a boy of twenty, he describes the long journey over wilderness trails to Fort Garry under Col. Wolseley in 1869.

"On the portages," says one passage, "many heavy burdens were carried. One officer of the 60th, Ensign St. Maur, (now the Duke of Somerset), a tall, handsome young man nicknamed 'Arak' because of his great strength, frequently packed two barrels of pork on his back, 400 pounds, and Col. Redvers Buller (later Sir Redvers) always took 200 and sometimes 300 pounds at a trip."

The Winnipeg of that day was situated about half a mile north of Fort Garry, and consisted of about 12 houses of every shape and size, lining the Stone Fort trail for about half a mile. That old road is now the beautiful main street of Winnipeg. There was one fairly good hotel kept by a Mr. Davis, who was later on Premier of the new Province of Manitoba. Nine stores, three chemists shops, one bakery, one hardware store, and, of course, several saloons, with such names as Hall's Corner, "The Red Saloon," etc., were situated in the village."

Speaking of the social life of the West at that time, Gen. Steele writes:

"To be a good jig dancer required much speed and endurance. When the first surveyors arrived, a dispute arose as to the distance to Sturgeon Creek, about six miles west of Winnipeg. In order to settle it, they agreed to send one of their dog drivers to the Creek and back with a pedometer in his pocket. This was at night, and before bed came back the surveyors were in bed. Next morning their dog driver produced the pedometer, and to their astonishment it registered sixty miles. On being questioned, he said he had gone no further than Sturgeon Creek, but when he had arrived there a dance was in progress at which he had danced all night, walking home in the morning!

"In 1870-71 the buffalo were about 200 miles west of Fort Garry, and nearly half the people lived by hunting them."

Many Relations at the Front.

Five brothers and three brothers-in-law of Mrs. John Taunton, of Montreal, have gone to the front. Soldiers, two Australian cousins are in Egypt with the Australian soldiers; a cousin from India has gone to England to enlist, and two boys whom Mrs. Taunton's sister adopted have enlisted. Of her five brothers one has died since going to the war, and another is a prisoner in the hands of the Germans. Mrs. Taunton comes of a fighting stock, her father being a veteran of the Soudan and Egyptian campaigns, an uncle was with Lord Roberts on the historic march to Candahar, and a grand-uncle fought in the Crimea.

BRILLIANT CHARGE BY CANADIAN TROOPS

Canadians Fall Back and Lose Four Guns, But Recapture Them After Brilliant Advance—Many Prisoners Taken

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, April 24.—The war office has given out the following: "The fight for ground in which the Germans penetrated between Steenstrate and Langemarck still continues. The loss of this part of the line laid bare the left of the Canadian division, which was forced to fall back in order to keep in touch with the right of neighboring troops.

In the rear of the latter there had been four Canadian 4.7 inch guns, which thus passed into the hands of the enemy; but some hours later the Canadians made a most brilliant and successful advance, recapturing these guns and taking a considerable number of German prisoners, including the Colonel.

The Canadians had many casualties, but their gallantry and determination undoubtedly saved the situation. Their conduct has been magnificent throughout.

NORTH SEA FIGHT IS STILL UNCERTAIN

Naval Activity is Evident, But Mystery Veil is Drawn

LONDON April 24.—(Special.)—The predictions of a naval battle in the North Sea, which are based on reports from Scandinavia of activity by the warships, the prohibition of shipping between England and Holland by the British admiralty and the announcement from the German admiralty that the German high seas fleet has several times lately been out in the North Sea without encountering British ships are incidents of the war that are calling forth much discussion.

The only news from the Aegean Sea comes from Athens and the Greek Islands. It is to the effect that firing is heard at times in the vicinity of the Dardanelles and Smyrna, and also in the Gulf of Saros, where, it is declared the allies have made a landing in the vicinity of the Turkish port of Enos.

NEW REGIMENT OF FRENCH-CANADIANS

OTTAWA, April 23.—A new French-Canadian regiment will be authorized shortly. There are already two solely French-Canadian regiments, one stationed at Amherst, N.S., and the second at Quebec. When the second was raised there was an astonishing answer to the call for men and nearly double the number required offered their services. There will be no trouble in recruiting the third regiment.

When the war broke out the French-Canadians were possibly a little slow in enlisting, but as the meaning of the struggle has been brought home to the habitants, there has been as ready and as enthusiastic a response as from any part of Canada. The second French-Canadian regiment was largely composed of river drivers, lumbermen, lately woodsmen and north men. They should make as sturdy a regiment as has been raised in Canada.

A training depot for engineering officers for reinforcements for the First and Second Contingets has fee established at Ottawa. Engineering officers take a long period of training, owing to the technical nature of the work.

Will Make a Thorough Probe

Manitoba's Royal Commission is Given a Free Hand

WINNIPEG, April 22.—The Royal Commission to probe the Kelly contracts on the Parliament Buildings was formally organized this afternoon, and the warrant of appointment goes to show that the inquiry will be of the widest possible scope. An order was issued for all documents and evidence taken before the Public Accounts' Committee.

C. P. Wilson, for the Liberals, stated that it was desired that Architect Simon, of Liverpool, whose plans were adopted by the Government, should be brought before the commission, and A. J. Andrews, for the Government, stated that the Government would pay his expenses across. The commission decided to cable the architect.

Mr. Wilson then mentioned the names of William Salt, now of the United States; J. B. Syncox, last heard of at Black Fox, New Ontario; and Leonard Easton, who is now with the Hudson's bay Railway in the North. All these witnesses were not available at the time of the session of the Public Accounts' Committee, and nothing had been heard of them.

Preliminary issuance of subpoenas will be made tomorrow morning, and it is expected that the taking of evidence will commence Monday morning or, at the latest Tuesday morning.

DISTRESS IN JERUSALEM

Many Deaths From Starvation Reported—Plague of Locusts

ALEXANDRIA, April 23.—Seventy Jews, who arrived yesterday from Jerusalem on an Italian steamer and with purpose emigrating to America and Australia, describe the economic situation as terrible.

Flour costs $15 a sack. Potatoes six times the ordinary price. Sugar and petroleum are unprocurable and money has ceased to circulate. Many deaths from starvation have occurred.

Locusts recently appeared in huge swarms, accentuating the distress.

General Election Decided Tuesday

Question Will be Taken up When Ministers Return to City the First of Next Week

OTTAWA, April 23.—Only a bare quorum of Ministers are in the city this week, but most of them will be here on Monday or Tuesday, when the question of holding a general election will be considered.

There are influences both in favor of and against the idea of an immediate dissolution. The opinions of the Cabinet is believed to be divided and while the chances are regarded as favoring an appeal to the country in the near future and preparations indicate its probability, there has been no actual decision one way or the other. So far as can be learned, it has not been discussed in any formal or official way.

An election requires that the party house be put in order as a preliminary, and there are always questions of internation moment which have to be regulated. If dissolution is to occur, now or two changes in the Ministerial ranks are quite possible.

RUSSIA TO PUNISH "APACHE" AIRMEN

PETROGRAD, April 23.—Russia is to institute reprisals in some form against the Germans for the bombdropping upon undefended towns of Poland. Announcement to this effect was made yesterday at the general headquarters, which denounced the German aviators as engaged in "apaches." It is hinted that all such men who may be captured will be tried by court martial, and if it is shown that they wantonly brought death to inoffensive civilians they will be executed. There is special interest in the statement because a Taube was brought down near Cambrai Wednesday, and the two men aboard made prisoners. They may be the first to be brought to trial.

In a statement the general staff says:

"Though the German air raids are becoming more frequent, they cause practically no damage, except that the bombs fall among a dense population. Our aviators confine themselves to bombardment of military works."

Fifty Miles In Fifty-Five Minutes

Cecil Cornelius' Pigeons Fly From Belleville to Kingston in Fast Time

KINGSTON, April 23.—Flying from Belleville to Kingston, which is approximately fifty miles, in fifty-five minutes was the fast accomplished by two homer pigeons, owned by Cecil Cornelius, Main St. The birds were sent up to Belleville and released at 11.05 a.m., and they arrived in their loft at noon sharp.

The flight is considered a remarkable one inasmuch as the birds have not been trained much. The young man is a fancier of the birds and has joined the Homer Pigeon Association and expects to enter into some of the races this summer.

How Colonel Farquhar Went To His Death

Germans Were Only 75 Yards Away When Bullet Laid Him Low

TORONTO, April 23.—How Colonel Farquhar, commanding officer of the Princess Patricias, met death, is told by one of the members of the regiment George E. Pearson, in a letter to Mr. G. D. Davis, of this city.

"The regiment had been relieved but he stayed on, as usual, until all had gone, indefatigable in the pursuit of his duty," the letter says. "He left the cellar fifty yards behind our advance trenches that he used as a headquarters in the company of the C.O. of the relieving regiment to show how to finish up a communication trench over a very nasty piece of ground, a regular death trap, leading from our line to a detached trench 100 yards in front.

"He had been standing on the parapet of the trench when a German flare shot up. We lay down, as the enemy was only 75 yards away. Before the flare had died down the C.O. rose to his knees, talking and pointing with his long stick. Then he collapsed for about a half a minute, motionless, and lay down, but it was long enough for him to be spotted by a German sentry. The next moment several shots whistled directly at us. One of them got him. He died a couple of hours later."

INTRENCHING TO STOP DARDANELLES LANDING

PARIS April 23—The Havas Agency has received the following dispatch from Athens:

"The Turks have intrenched themselves strongly along the coast of the Gulf of Saros from a point near Enos on the mainland, with particularly formidable works opposite Bulair, (Peninsula of Gallipoli.)

"The allied fleets yesterday bombarded Turkish encampments near Bulair, the position of which had previously been indicated by aviators.

"An allied aeroplane dropped bombs Monday on Tchesme, in the Gulf of Smyrna.

"A British torpedo boat bombarded a Turkish camp at the village of Kato-phanaria, near Smyrna.

"Information received at Piraeus is that a Greek sailing ship which sailed for Salonica two days since struck a mine in the Aegean Sea and was blown up. The Captain, his wife, and nine members of the crew were killed. The Mine is supposed to have drifted from the Dardanelles."

Another Havas dispatch from Athens says that the bombardment of Turkish positions on the Gallipoli Peninsula continues without interruption.

Finnish Steamer Sunk in Baltic

The Vessel Carried Cargo of Iron Ore—Crew Believed to be Saved

(Canadian Press Special)

STOCKHOLM, April 24.—The Finnish steamer Frack has been torpedoed and sunk in the Baltic by a German submarine. It is believed the members of the crew were saved. The Frack carried a cargo of iron ore and was on its way to Abo, Finland.

SCHOOL FEES ABOLISHED

COBOURG, April 24.—Special—At a special meeting of the Town Council held last night, a motion was carried by a vote of 6 to 3 to abolish the fees for Collegiate Institute pupils.

Oshawa Woman Shot Down

Hit by Stray Bullet While Standing at Her Own Back Door

OSHAWA, April 22—Mrs. Harry Brown of Burke street was hit by a bullet in the forehead while standing in the back door of her kitchen, and fell bleeding to the floor unconscious. Where the bullet came from no one seems to know. Evidently it was a stray shot from the gun of some careless hunter. Had it hit Mrs. Brown directly, she would surely have been instantly killed, but it struck her at an angle, and glanced off. However the bullet left a deep gash over the eye and hit her so hard she was unconscious for some time. Her eye is badly swollen from the wound, and she is ill from the shock.

BERLIN AND PARIS REPORTS DIFFER

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, April 24.—(Official statement)—Attempts made by the enemy to recapture the last ground in the north and northeast of Ypres failed. French and British attacks broke down under the German fire. Two number of prisoners. French, English and Belgian, rose to 2,470. The pieces of cannon captured total 35. In addition a large number of machine guns and rifles, and much ammunition and other war material were taken by the Germans.

Paris, April 24.—(Official statement)—Supplementary reports furnish fuller particulars of the way the Germans succeeded in forcing our lines back during Thursday evening to the north of Ypres, between the Ypres canal and Boesepelle road. A thick yellow smoke emitted from the German trenches and driven by northerly wind, produced the effect of complete asphyxiation among our troops which was felt even in our second line positions. Counter attacks made yesterday already have enabled us to regain part of the ground lost. Our situation has been completely consolidated and our action is being carried out under good conditions, with the support of British and Belgian troops.

"The enemy made an attack at Les Eparges and another at Lorenbach, in the forest of Apremont, both of which were repulsed.

"The German attack to the south of the forest of Parroy, and further attacks on Reich Ackerkopf, were stopped by our fire. The enemy suffered heavy losses.

GERMAN STEAMER SUNK BY BRITISH

LIMA, Peru, April 24.—Special—A dispatch to La Prensa last night states that the British cruiser Orama has sunk a German merchant steamship now Bayonne. It is also stated that the British cruisers Clyde and Orama have received coal from the British steamer Eggesford at the port of Bayovar.

The last report received from the Orama was to the effect that she had put into Montevideo February 16 from Valparaiso. It is possible that since then she has been armed and sent back to South American waters.

WASHINGTON, April 24.—The German embassy announced today that it had information "from a reliable source" that a British battleship was severely damaged in the last Zeppelin attack over the Tyne.

DESPERATE BATTLE NOW RAGING IN FLANDERS

After Stupifying Men With Deadly Gases Germans Forced Back Allies Who in Counter-Attack Recovered Part of Ground

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, April 24.—Over an area like front in Belgian Flanders, which is roughly ten miles long, from the region of Bixschoote in the north, to St. Eloi in the south, French, British and Belgian troops are locked with the Germans today in a series of engagements which recall the fighting of last October.

Driven from Hill No. 60 to the south of Ypres, and failing to retake it by counter attack, the Germans launched a sudden advance northeast of the town, and, after stupifying and killing the men in the first trenches with deadly gases, according to British official reports, they drove a wedge of infantry forward, forcing the French and Belgians back toward, and at some points, apparently across the Yser (Ypres) canal. The manoeuvre at the same time compelled the British line north of Ypres to fall back to conform with the French.

Although the advance of the German was considerable, extending, according to despatches, over a front of five miles, the Allies immediately initiated a counter attack, the result of which was to compel the Germans to give up some ground they had taken, and force them in a northeasterly direction toward Langemarck, from which place the attack started.

By this time the British are presumably strengthened and have consolidated their position on Hill No. 60. The hardest fighting, consequently, is expected north of Ypres.

RECOVERED FROM GAS FUMES... FRENCH SCATTER THE GERMANS

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, April 24.—Asphyxiating bombs used by Germans in their attack near Ypres on Thursday were thrown at numerous points along the front of three miles, according to information brought to Paris. The contents of the missles were chloride mixed with other chemicals.

The Germans threw these bombs when the wind was blowing from them in the direction of the French trenches. The fumes caused uncomfortable breathing and smarting of the eyes at a distance of nearly two miles behind the trenches, and then were so powerful that the Germans had to wait themselves a considerable time before they could occupy the evacuated trenches.

Many men during this delay in touch recovered from the effects of the fumes and delivered a counter attack and regained most of the ground lost. The German supply of chloride bombs has apparently been used up in their first advance. They had no more, to throw and gave way before the resolute counter attack of the French. The bombs are thrown by means of a hand sling such as boys use for throwing stones.

GUELPH TROOPS GO UNDER CANVAS

GUELPH, April 24.—(Special.)—Lieut.-Col. L. W. Shannon, officer commanding the first divisional area, accompanied by Lieut.-Col. H. D. Smith, chief staff officer paid a visit to this city today for the purpose of looking over camping ground for the 34th battalion. Col. Shannon was met by the civic officials and Col. Oliver, O.C. the 25th battalion and Captain Martyn, quartermaster, and the party motored out to inspect the camp located on the outskirts of the city, owned by the Guelph Realty Co., which has been chosen. The ground is well drained, but with city water and electric light very convenient.

Col. Shannon reviewed the 34th battalion while here.

WHITE HOUSE DOOR CLOSED TO HUERTA

WASHINGTON April 24.—Special—Victoriano Huerta will not be received at the White House should he apply there to-morrow. This information was received today from an authoritative, but unofficial source.

Huerta was severe in his personal comments on the President, according to the diplomatic advices received confidently at the time Huerta was in control in Mexico and Mr. Wilson is thought to have resented this. There has been no application made to the White House yet for an interview by anyone representing Huerta. If anybody asks that the President see the former Provisional President of Mexico, the request will be denied.

FREDERICTON, N.B., April 24—In the Legislature today the liquor license act was amended, upking the hours that bars may sell from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. daily, except Saturdays, when closing is at 4 p.m. It was also made illegal to sell liquor to soldiers or officers in uniform or party in uniform.

DEATH AND HAVOC IN TEXAS FLOODS

AUSTIN, Tex., April 24.—(Special.)—The bodies of 14 persons, drowned last night in the flood here, have been recovered. Eleven persons are thus far known to be missing. Rescuing parties are still searching among the ruins of 200 homes that were swept away by yesterday's rain and windstorm. Citizens of Austin today began a systematic plan for the relief of the sufferers. Property loss is estimated at $500,000. Temporary quarters have been provided for all whose homes had been swept away or not habitable and food and clothing are being furnished.

SARNIA, April 23.—Gordon Clysdale, a young farmer, living in Moore Township, a few miles from Sarnia, was instantly killed last evening while driving home from the field in which he was working during the day. He was badly injured internally, and also externally, and died a few minutes later.

KILLED BY A HORSE KICK

BROCKVILLE, April 24.—Special—Wilfrid Moore, residing at Mcdiash Mills, was instantly killed yesterday by a kick from a horse which he was leading to water. The animal's heels landed squarely on Moore's stomach, and when picked up he was dead.

In Germany now they are using wooden tires on automobiles. The Germans are having a bumpy time of it all the way 'round.

GLORY FOR THE CANADIANS IN BELGIAN HILL CHARGE

LONDON April 24.—(Special.)—The Daily Mail's correspondent, wiring from Northern France at a late hour last night, says that in the fighting at Hill 60 the Canadians especially distinguished themselves and have been commended by Sir John French for the speed and precision with which they dug themselves in after charging in considerable force and in a very hot corner. Their trench and sandbag work was so good that they suffered only six casualties.

GREAT GERMAN FORCE NOW ATTACKING ALLIES

LONDON, April 24.—(Special)—The London Daily Mail has a despatch from Rotterdam dated Friday saying that the German attack on the line, in which they would appear to have scored an initial success, is still progressing, and great masses of troops are being poured through Brussels for the front. The Germans are throwing every available man against the north of Ypres, while the allies are attacking in strong force to the south of Ypres. The enemy's losses during the last few days have been tremendous.

Standing at the most southerly point of the Dutch frontier one of my correspondents reports that during the last three days he has clearly seen German troops marching into Belgium as they marched at the beginning of the war, the only difference being that their guns were not so numerous as in August. The troops came from the direction of Aix la Chapelle, and yesterday afternoon he made careful notes and calculations, and he estimates he saw 80,000 men pass. It was the greatest luck I have ever seen. "The men were as closely packed as growing corn," is how my correspondent describes the scene.

KINGSTON

Corporal Aldrich of the R.C.H.A. has just passed the prescribed examination has been appointed sergeant in the artillery clerks section.

Yesterday the Northumberland Fusiliers who are in the trenches wore the rose in honor of England's patron saint. It is the only regiment in the British service which enjoys this distinction.

It is said that all the preliminary training of the artillery of this division could be conducted within the confines of Barriefield camp, and it would be convenient to Petawawa, where the batteries could do their shooting.

Lt.-Col. Etherington now has the whole of Queen's College Hospital Corps in uniform. The corps is drilled every day on the college campus in stretcher-bearer work, and is using an old ambulance waggon from Fort Henry.

A schedule of sports are being arranged for the 21st Battalion on Wednesday and Saturday afternoons. The sports will consist of baseball, football, jumping, racing and other things in which the boys excel.

Sergt. Wolfe pulled down the storm flag on the pole at Tete du Pont barracks yesterday morning and put up the best flag in the barracks in honor of St. George's Day.

An order has been issued that all officers in charge of armouries must see to it that no dilapidated flags are permitted to fly over the building in their charge.

The commanding officers' parade of the 21st Battalion at two o'clock yesterday was a special one in honor of the patron saint of England. The parade was followed by a band concert in artillery park by the band of the 21st.

Handcuffed Boy on the Streets

Little Fellow Was Crying Bitterly—Passerby Sympathetic

TORONTO, April 23.—Handcuffed to one of the inmates from the Blantyre Industrial School and in charge of the attendants, a 13 year old foreign boy who appeared in the Juvenile Court today, on a petty charge of theft and was remanded until Monday, aroused the compassion of passers-by as he was led along Bay street at noon expressly. The poor little fellow evidently felt his position keenly, and all the way from the City Hall to King street, where he was placed on a street car, he sobbed pitifully. The youth he was handcuffed to appeared to be many years his senior and was at least six inches taller. The attendant was a burly fellow, capable of looking after at least half a dozen lads of the calibre of the youthful delinquent. The whole procession appeared farcical and passers-by were not slow in voicing their opinion.

While officials of the Juvenile Court refused to disclose the boy's name, they admitted that the charge against him was not only a petty one, but that he looked rather rough, and it was thought wiser to handcuff him to one of the inmates from the Industrial School so as to guard against trouble. The other boy had been specially brought to the city for this purpose.

Convention Showed Good Condition

Receipts Increased $169 Over Last —Five New Mission Bands are Formed—Officers Elected

KINGSTON, April 23.—The annual convention of the Women's Missionary Society of the Kingston Presbyterial held in Chalmer's Church, closed with reports of the secretaries, which showed that excellent work had been done during the past year. The treasurer's report showed an increase of $169 over last year.

During the year five new mission bands were formed, one in Newburg, one in Tamworth, two in Cooke's Church and one in Chalmer's. Seven bales of clothing were sent to the Synod of the Northwest. Three auxiliaries were organized at Sand Hill, Tamworth and Trenton.

The president, Mrs. Russell, of Belleville, gave a very interesting and helpful address. During the meeting a paper entitled: "Methods I Have Found Helpful in Mission Bands," written by Mrs. McGee of Stirling, was read by Miss Hume.

The following officers were elected: President, Mrs. S. Russell, Belleville; 1st Vice, Mrs. E. C. Currie, Belleville; 2nd Vice, Mrs. M. Macgillivray, Kingston; 3rd Vice, Mrs. Hume, Burnbrae; 4th Vice, Mrs. Spence, Sand Hill; 5th Vice, Mrs. McGregor, Napanee; Corresponding Secretary, Miss Connor, Kingston; Recording Secretary, Miss Mowatt, Kingston; Supply Secretary, Mrs. H. A goose sold at $1.50 and $2.00 per pair. The ruling prices for potatoes were 65c. and 75c. per bag.

SOLDIERS MARQUEE MEETINGS

The man in khaki is very often looked upon as one who does not require many serious thoughts. His playfulness and light-heartedness, when off duty, is so marked that almost unconsciously he is known as the "Soldier Boy." But the soldier boy can be serious, too, and he meets the serious things of life with just as much grace as he does the frivolous. On Tuesday and Friday evenings of this week, the meetings at the Y. M. C. A. marquee were given a religious turn, and beyond doubt the appreciation on these occasions was just as genuine as on those when the concerts were purely "popular". On Tuesday evening the excellent ladies' quartette of the Tabernacle church, provided the musical part of the programme, and Rev. Mr. Clarke of the same church, addressed the men. Perfect attention, which is the truest form of applause, marked all their efforts. The same attention was shown last night, when Rev. Mr. Hubly spoke, and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Chapman led "the boys in chorus singing. "Johnny Canuuck" is not all stupidity, what we see on the streets.

There was a large number present and the programme provided was in keeping with the Englishman's natal day. Rev. W. G. Clarke, pastor of the Tabernacle church, was present and filled that position in a most satisfactory and efficient manner. The programme was as follows: In the chair, Rev. Mr. Clarke; recitations, readings and songs, and all were patriotic in sentiment. Col. Ponton gave an address in his usual affable and florid manner, referring especially to the deeds and valor of Englishmen and citizens of the British Empire. Rev. C. G. Smith, pastor of the Baptist church, gave an interesting address. Two recitations by Master Sankey were of a patriotic nature and heartily enjoyed. During intermission refreshments were served.

Pact Said to Exist Between Roumania and Italy

COPENHAGEN, April 23.—An Italian correspondent of the National Tidende sends to his newspaper an interview had at San Remo, with a former Rumanian minister. The minister is quoted as having said that Rumania demanded certain cessions of territory from Austria, in return for remaining neutral in the war, but that Austria refused to acquiesce.

The minister, according to the correspondent, added that there exists a defensive alliance between Rumania and Italy and that Italy would not only be able to offer Rumania aid, but having received the sanction of Rumania.

Destroyers Ran The Submarines

Then Return to Have Bows Repaired, but Nothing Is Said —Their Menace Fading

(Montreal Gazette)

That a new and more work is being done in the way of converting existing submarines into permanent ornaments to the bottom of the sea than most people imagine is indicated by a letter received yesterday from a Canadian marine man, who is at present occupying a responsible position at Liverpool. Although his identity cannot be disclosed several of his previous letters have appeared in the Gazette, and have thrown considerable light upon the shipping end of the war, so far as it concerns Liverpool. In his present letter this official indicates that the British torpedo destroyers are being used as submarine destroyers, hunting them up and ramming them, but that little information is allowed to leak out. In fact all that is known is when some destroyer creeps into dry dock with her bows stove in, and other marks of having done for a submarine.

This official's letter says: "We are still very busy in Liverpool, but I regret to say that the work is a long way ahead of us, and in spite of our efforts the number of vessels awaiting berths for an opportunity to discharge is steadily rising. Just now there are 68, and it has been around that figure for some time.

"The dock laborers in Birkenhead have been on strike at times, and still it seems as though nothing would induce them to go back. They are an unreasonable lot, and vessels are mainly at the bottom of one half of the trouble. The men are making so much money that they have far too much to spend on drink—hence all the trouble.

"I am not in favor of prohibition, but the pubs are open far too long in this country. However, this week they only open at 10.30 a.m., and close at 10 p.m. Before long they will close at 9 p.m., and the sooner the better.

Submarines not Effective

"Reports issued in the papers here ships as usual in spite of the old submarines, and if Germany thinks she is going to keep up such fees she is very well mistaken, and, like her commerce raiders, who shall be rit her submarines before long. They will get such a time that they will be glad to get back to where they came from, along with their rotten old barnacle covered fleet in the Kiel Canal.

"There have been a good many more submarines sunk already than the man on the street has any knowledge about. In the grey dawn, when very few people are about a destroyer glides into the river and slips quietly into graving dock, and only the experienced seaman guesses why she is down at the head and would say 'I thought so.' If he could see her out on in the dry dock, with her bows busted in. But nobody is allowed to see that, at least not the general public, and it is never printed in the newspapers. However, there is no doubt that we have a ruthless and tough customer to deal with, and a long way to go yet, unless something unexpected crops up.

"I do not doubt that we shall force the Dardanelles, but it is a tough job and must be carried out systematically. I have been through them often and know them well, and I assure you they will be no light task. But, given good weather, we should be through them about the middle of May and that will open up the Black Sea trade again and make a vast difference all round in many ways."

Advertise in The Intelligencer,

Roosevelt as a Political Missionary

SYRACUSE, N.Y., April 23.—During the second day of his cross-examination in the Supreme Court here today Theodore Roosevelt said he had regarded William Barnes as a "sort of Dr. Jeykll and Mr. Hyde, who like other politicians, had his good sides and his bad sides."

The Colonel pictured himself as a missionary of politics, trying to make them to what he considered was right. He said he did not, as suggested by William Barnes, jr., the cross-examiner, try to sever the ligaments between "these Siamese twins of politics." Quite on the contrary, he declared, he endeavored to have the "Dr. Jeykll" in them absorb the "Mr. Hyde."

It was the Colonel's fourth day on the witness stand and he seemed to be as fresh as he was on the first day. More letters, tending to show the friendly relations between himself and Mr. Barnes, were introduced into the record.

The Colonel admitted that he had compiled with many of the suggestions made to him by Mr. Barnes regard to the filling of offices in the State Government during the two years he was Governor.

RAIN IN MANITOBA

WINNIPEG, April 23.—A soaking rainfall, which has been general all over southern and central Manitoba, has given the young wheat crop a big start. More than 20 points throughout were reached by long distance telephone last night, and it was reported over a wide area that the splendid precipitation has come just as the farmers have about completed seeding wheat. In many places the green blades are showing above ground.

Not only has there been heavy rain in the south, central and western sections of the province, but there were indications last night at many points that still heavier rainfall would continue for several hours.

In the northern parts of the province there has not been much rain, but heavy showers are reported to have fallen on Tuesday night, with lighter showers on Wednesday night. The sky last night was heavily overcast over the whole north country, and there is every prospect of rain—or snow, for the weather is reported to be turning very cold.

In Alberta, however, there was snow, and light rains in parts of Saskatchewan, with promise of more. The crop is nowhere suffering, however, though Saskatchewan farmers would be glad to see a general rain.

CANADIAN LABORERS FOR SOUTH AFRICA

TORONTO, April 23.—Enlistment has so depleted the labor market in South Africa that Mr. C. F. Rand, Lord, interested in mines there, has come over to Canada from London to find twenty-five men here to send to South Africa. He will pay over what wages he was offering but he should be flooded with applications from untrained men. It is generally the opinion that his visit might be but the first indication of a large movement to shift labor from the congested centres of the Empire to places where the war was making a great scarcity, as in the South African mines.

Asked if he were any relation of Lord Charles Beresford, Mr. Beresford at first evaded the question and, when it was pressed, replied politely that that had nothing to do with the matter under discussion. He registered at the King Edward Hotel.

GERMANS CHAINED TO GUNS FOUND BY THE CANADIANS

OTTAWA, April 23.—A letter from Mr. Alfred Quistal, Ottawa, who was with the Canadian troops at Neuve Chapelle, states that when the German prisoners were taken some of the German artillerymen were found chained to their guns in order to keep them from running away. He also says that there was no evidence of the Germans being scarce of food. In their trenches were found large supplies of bread, sausages and canned milk.

Hospital Block Day Coming!

The W. C. A Make Their Annual Appeal on Behalf of General Hospital

The Woman's Christian Association again bring Block Day for the Hospital before the citizens of Belleville—May 6th being the day set.

As this has become an annual affair to our people, it needs little explanation. The war has aroused the patriotic spirits among the citizens to the extent that they have given very liberally to the patriotic fund, and have also faithfully supported the Red Cross Association in its work. We now ask that every one will consider this appeal of our own institution as kindly as the ones just mentioned.

Owing to the public wards now 16 use being greatly over-crowded, increased accomodation has been required. It has been absolutely necessary to equip the public wards on the third floor. This part of the Hospital has never before been used for patients. But owing to the epidemic of typhoid at Point Anne, the patients that came from the military camp, and a great deal of sickness generally, this part of the hospital had to be furnished.

Bathrooms had to be fitted up, beds, mattresses and floor covering, etc., provided, which has been a great deal of extra expense that the Association have been compelled to assume; while the income from this department of the Hospital is very small in comparision to the maintenance.

Therefore, we ask our friends to be as liberal as possible when the envelopes are given back to the collectors on the 6th of May, and we also hope that every one who can will contribute some amount.

By providing the necessary equipment we are doing our part to help the doctors and nurses, and relieve the sick and suffering patients in our Hospital.

Iron Workers Go On Strike

Satisfied With Wages and Conditions But go on Strike in Sympathy With Others

While satisfied with the wages they are getting and the number of hours they have to work, between 40 and 50 men, members of the International Brotherhood of Ironworkers, at Montreal, walked out on strike yesterday morning.

These men are engaged in the erection of three large oil storage tanks on the Tarte pier for the Petroleum Iron Works. Early in the year ironworkers in Oklahoma, Texas, declared a strike against the Petroleum Iron works and six other companies following a declaration by these firms of the "open shop" policy. An appeal for a sympathetic strike was sent throughout the various centres of the United States and Canada.

The tanks are to be ready by May 8. A steamer from Mexico is expected on May 15 with 10,000 barrels of oil. Two of the tanks have a capacity of 37,500 barrels and the third is slightly smaller.

Canucks Again On Firing Line

OTTAWA, April 23—The heavy list of casualties reaching the Militia Department these days indicate very clearly that the Canadian division has been again in the thick of the fighting around Ypres and that the character of it has been desperate.

Within the past two days the list records twelve killed and forty-five wounded. The death-toll of the Canadian division now reaches the total of 329 and the list of wounded is upwards of a thousand.

Some of the heaviest losses have been sustained by the 7th Battalion, recruited in the West, and comprised many men who had previously seen active service.

Millions to Canada From Tourists

OTTAWA, April 23—Commissioner J. H. Harkin, of Dominion Parks, reports that information coming from the railways and elsewhere indicates that the number of tourists to the Canadian Rockies this summer will probably eclipse that of any previous year. American tourists travel to Europe in cut off by the war and the Panama Pacific Exhibition turns it to the Pacific Coast. The large proportion of these from the Eastern States and from Eastern Canada will go or come by the Canadian route and many will stop off in the Rockies. The fact that Americans tourists annually spend some $400,000,000 abroad shows the desirability of tapping such a source of revenue to this country. A novel device that will be used for fire preventing in Rocky Mountain Park this year is a light gasoline engine and pump with 10,000 feet of hose to be carried quickly by motor truck along the roads or trails. The numerous streams are believed to make the idea practicable.

Girls at Drill Toe the Line

Bevy of Belleville Girls go Through Interesting Programme of Calisthenics

Active and healthy girls to the number of fifty, occupied the gymnasium of the Y.M.C.A. last night and entertained a large company to a display of calisthenics. It is the first time that such an exhibition has been given, and it was greatly appreciated by all present. The girls, prettily attired in comfortable costumes of white "middies", dark blue bloomers and stocking with blue or red ties, had a very strenuous time. They executed a number of drills with commendable smartness, and went through some effective marches under the leadership of Mr. R. J. Faulkner, physical instructor. Miss Doris Vermilyea ably presided at the piano. An interesting incident occurred at the close of the exercises, when the girls took hands in a circle and started singing "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow," in honor of Mr. Faulkner, who was informally presented with a club bag.

An exciting game of basketball followed between the High School girls team and the girls who attend the six o'clock class. At half-time the High School led by five points to four, the game ending in favor of the High School by eleven points to eight. The teams were composed as follows:

High School—Defence, Miss Sinclair and Miss Collins; centre, Miss Yeomans; left forward, Miss Manley; right forward, Miss Kate Sinclair.

Business Girls—Defence, Miss McBride and Miss Ketcheson; centre, Miss Jones; left forward, Miss Knight; right forward, Miss Rizer.

Referee—Mr. Webb.

This winter girls have been allowed the use of the gymnasium and swimming pool twice a week, and the boon is greatly appreciated. The three classes at 2.30, 4 and 6 o'clock have been well attended throughout the season.

Premier Borden Is Indisposed

Slight Indisposition Result of Unusually Heavy Administration Worries

OTTAWA, April 23.—Premier Borden is confined to his house with a slight illness, following the unusual strain of the last few weeks of heavy administration and parliamentary work.

Most of the other members of the Government are absent from the Capital, but a number are expected back next week, when important sittings of council will be held. The decision of the Government with regard to the holding of a general election this year is expected before many days.

LABORERS GO TO ALASKA

WASHINGTON, April 23.—Reports of an impending stampede of labor to Seward, Alaska, in search of work on the Government railroad, from Seward to the interior, called forth a warning today from the Alaska Engineering Commission that no large numbers of men would be needed there this year.

"It is much to be regretted that large numbers of laboring men are flocking to Seward, seeking work on the proposed Government railroad," said a statement by Chairman Edes. "No construction work is going on at present, nor is there any possibility of work being started for several weeks. Most of the work will be let out to contract men, who will do their own work and who will require a little capital to begin with. Not more than a few hundred men will be needed this season, and it is probable there are sufficient numbers there now.

"No man should go to Alaska without money enough to return to the States in case he does not find work. At present the opportunities for employment in Alaska are very few."

WOMEN AND THE WAR.

The women of Canada are behaving in this crisis in a manner which must command general admiration. The love of peace is naturally strong in the female breast; but Canadian women realize that there is something far nobler than the "peace that only cowards crave," and they allow their patriotic feelings to triumph over their sentimental instincts. General Hughes has said the women of Canada have been the army's best recruiting sergeants. They have given up cheerfully in the Empire's cause all they love the best; and have worked with rare devotion to make the lives of the soldiers in the field as comfortable and as bright as possible.

The message from Canada to the International Congress of Women at The Hague is an inspiring document. It breathes the spirit of true patriotism. When letters were received by the leaders of women's organizations in Canada, asking them to take part in the peace movement, not one of the invitations was officially accepted. An excellent letter was prepared by the Executive of the National Committee of Patriotic Service, signed by Mrs. A. E. Gooderham and Mrs. Plumptre, and circulated among the women of Canada. It set forth the reasons why the women of Canada could not as yet share in the movement to bring about peace, and contained the following eloquent passage: "When Germany has learned that right is stronger than might; when the mailed fist no longer threatens Europe, then may we hope for peace which our children's children may inherit. And with such a peace, we may hand on, unbroken the great traditions of our Empire—honor unstained, liberty safeguard d, justice vindicated."

This open letter was heartily endorsed by the various organizations; and in the message just despatched to Amsterdam, signed by Mrs. Adelaide M. Plumptre, as secretary, she points out that none of the Canadian societies of women has felt able to accept the courteous invitation to attend the Peace Congress, because they believe that the time for peace has not yet arrived. "We speak often of the horrors of war," says the letter, "but there are also horrors of peace. . . . . We would ask you once more the old question, 'What shall a man or a nation give inexchange for his soul?' The soul of any nation is the value that it places upon the defence of the weak, the freedom of the many, and the keeping of its plighted word. It is to preserve our soul as an Empire that we are at war." These are truly noble sentiments; and it is a source of intense satisfaction not only that these women's organizations are actuated by these feelings, but also that they have at their head ladies who can express these opinions so ably. All honor to the women of Canada!

LIBERALS PRAISE THE ONTARIO GOVERNMENT.

The License Commission.

The Ottawa Free Press, the leading Liberal newspaper in Eastern Ontario, thinks that the five men appointed to the Provincial License Commission are above reproach, and that under them central control of the liquor traffic will be given a fair trial. It notes that all have studied the problem and it believes that all will seriously endeavor to find a satisfactory solution. The Free Press is hopeful that under the Flavelle-Dingman Commission, the liquor license system will be freed absolutely from party politics and administered in such a way as to remove the main evils of the trade.

At the other end of the Province, the Windsor Record, also staunchly Liberal, declares that Premier Hearst has selected a highly capable Board. The Hamilton Herald, representing independent journalism in Central Ontario, says: "Perhaps the most heroic thing ever done by the Whitney Administration was the determination to place the regulation of the liquor traffic entirely in the hands of a commission consisting of men of the highest available type, who would act fearlessly and independently as the railway or the Hydro-Electric Commission. We say the Whitney Administration, because it is well known that Sir James Whitney looked forward to the inauguration of the new regime, and only awaited the right moment for its introduction."

The Herald notes that the Commission necessarily consists of Conservatives because the Government will be held responsible for its acts. "It was also necessary that the men should be men with so lofty an idea of their duty that they would not be amenable to the influence of men engaged in active political organization and warfare." The Herald appears to think that this condition has been absolutely fulfilled, for it says that even the slightest connection between "the trade" and practical politics has disappeared and that "all interested in the cause of social reform will hail the advent of the new regime as the greatest single step in the path of their desires that has been taken for many a day."

Will not the Toronto Globe, the Spences of the Temperance Alliance, and the few raving Clericals read these newspapers out of the Liberal party for daring to approve of the policy of the Hearst Government in its attempt to control the liquor traffic?

A GERMAN'S RAVINGS.

Aired by "General" Pearson, Boer Lecturer, Before Audience at Buffalo Theatre.

This "General Pearson," whoever he is, has been raving in Buffalo, N.Y. On April 20th he addressed a crowd of anti-English. Predicting that Germany and Austria will win the European war by September, that London will be attacked and burned by a fleet of Zeppelins and advising that the United States issue an ultimatum to Canada that the Dominion must declare herself independent of Great Britain within twenty-four hours under penalty of invasion and annexation to the United States, Gen. Samuel Pearson, reputed to be formerly of the Boer army, won enthusiastic applause from a large audience at the Majestic theatre.

The Boer veteran, a big, emphatic, fluent-speaking soldier in uniform, made no effort to conceal his admiration of the German military system and his contempt for the English. He declared the present conflict is between "science and ignorance," that the Germans have the science and are certain to conquer.

Every few minutes in the course of his address, Gen. Pearson shot out some vehement criticism of England or appreciation of the German cause that caused an outburst of applause. He spoke under the auspices of the Buffalo Chapter of the American Truth Society, (?) officers of which are John T. Ryan, president; Joseph M. Scheffeli, Dr. Gustav A. Hitzel, Henry W. Breiholdel, Herr Von Nettelbladt, Wm. P. Kilcauley, Charles A. Zinkert and Joseph J. Eltges, vice-presidents; Daniel J. Riordan, secretary, and William J. Numan, treasurer. The names are suggestive of what they are.

The government of the United States should give the Canadian government twenty-four hours in which to declare itself an independent republic. Then, if Canada refuses "to accede to the ultimatum, we should go over there and annex it. And I am one who would help do it." Come on, General, and you will receive a warm reception.

Gen. Pearson predicted that the European war will end by September, and that the German arms will be victorious.

"Russia will surrender first," he said. Then France will surrender. But Germany will not make peace with England. In my opinion, Sweden will join Germany and take Finland, and South Africa will free itself."

"I know what I am talking about. Eight or ten Zeppelins will fly over London soon. Perhaps the number will be greater. They will attack London, and probably each Zeppelin will drop a ton of explosives. It is coming, you may rest assured of that; London will be destroyed."

"There has been a great campaign of vilification of the German army in this country. I tell you anyone who says the German army has committed atrocities lies," exclaimed the general. "The great German army is too well organized and too well disciplined to permit atrocities, and I personally know none has been committed."

Gen. Pearson returned to this country a short while ago from Europe, where he spent much time with the German army and visited also battlefields in France and Belgium; —so he says.

CURRENT COMMENT

Italy being ready for war, seems to appreciate peace nevertheless.

Imagine Germany apologizing to Holland eight months ago. The Kultur process is changing.

The international peace conferences at The Hague held by women and Socialists are undoubtedly engineered from Berlin. It is a good sign.

The Niagara Peninsula Fruit Growers Association is planning a greater distribution of peaches at low prices this summer, the crop of which promises to be a record one.

Sir Edward Grey's fishing trip, Lloyd-George's declaration of our numerical strength in France, and Sir. Asquith's regulation of British industrials are all manifestations of confidence.

Guelph Mercury: "Rev. Billy Sunday is calling for more speed from his helpers in the Paterson, N.J., revival, Billy is an old baseball player and knows it's 'ho use swattin' three-base hits if no person is being brought over the home plate."

Members of the Prince Edward Island Legislature have signed a pledge to abstain from the use of intoxicating liquors during the war. This looks to outsiders like doing something for which there was no occasion. The idiocie in intoxicating liquor is antidoted by law in the main province.

Hamilton Herald: "And then there are the Canadians from that get their creamars printed in the States and mailed from there to customers in Canada in other envelopes than the war stamp tax. What about them? Can they be regarded as patterns of unselfish loyalty?"

Montreal Gazette: "Japanese politicians sometimes engage in the vaudement to take drastic measures against China, on the ground that that country is ignoring the rights of Japan. As China's only silence is that she wishes to be let alone, it looks as if the agitators in Japan were prompted by an ambition to see their country actively engaged at the expense of the weak giant of the East."

Journal of Commerce: "Great Britain now controls the world's export supply outside of the little which Germany possesses. The grip of Great Britain upon the munitions of war is becoming more of a reality every day. German overseas trade, which amounted to $1,750,000,000 per annum, is all gone. In addition, most of the total exports of $2,500,000,000, and her imports of $2,650,000,000 have been cut to zero."

Montreal Daily Mail: "The playgrounds of Eton will lose their reputation for the future as the training ground of British battles, if headmasters of the Lettelton type are allowed to poison the minds of the scholars."

With three-quarters of a million men under arms and her sea power unimpaired, Great Britain has demonstrated might as never before. Even those who grumble at their citizenship occasionally must feel a thrill of pride over this fact.

The German use of their official reports complains that in the Argonne region the French are employing a bomb the effect of which is to turn the German soldiers' stomachs. If that is true, then the missile must contain an awful substance. Maybe the bombmakers have been taking lessons from the medical students.

Kidney Trouble?

The waste material which the Kidneys are intended to remove from the blood, if allowed to accumulate in the system, poison the blood and thus produce debt erious effects.

If from over-work, exposure to cold, or some local injury, the kidneys become congested or inflamed and cannot perform their functions, the system becomes filled with uric poisons.

Whenever a dull, heavy pain is felt over the region of the kidneys for any length of time, accompanied by a sallow complexion, loss of appetite, decrease of weight, and aguefy condition under the eyes and in the ankles, a chronic inflammation of the kidneys must be suspected, and if not relieved promptly chronic Bright's Disease will certainly develop.

Abbey's Effervescent Salt—sold everywhere at 25c and 60c—which is a Diuretic as well as an Aperient, will carry out of the system the poisonous material which the kidneys cannot get rid of, and will relieve the congestion of the kidneys.

Not A Word From the Hon. Frank Oliver

Interior Dept. Hears Nothing of Suggested Restitution of Homestead Royalties

OTTAWA, April 23.—Restitution by Hon. Frank Oliver of royalties collected by him since 1906 on mineral rights on homestead land near Edmonton, which were reserved by the Government when the land was sold to Mr. Oliver, is still being awaited at the Interior Department. Although the matter was brought very publicly to the attention of the ex-minister during the concluding days of the session just closed, and though restitution was suggested as the proper course under the circumstances, the member for Edmonton has not yet been heard from.

An estimate has since been made by the Department of the amount of royalties collected by Mr. Oliver between the time he leased the mineral right on his homestead, October 4, 1906, and the date in 1911 when he obtained a lease of such mineral rights from the Government. The amount is estimated at between $800 and $900; besides this, there are the royalties collected by the ex-minister since he assigned the lease, payment of which has also still to be made.

During the discussion of the matter in Parliament it was intimated that the reason Mr. Oliver had not paid in a share of the royalties owed to him since the lease, was that he had not yet received these from the lessee, Mr. Wills. But no suggestion was made by the member for Edmonton as to whether or not he intended to pay this amount himself. The sum of $800 which he collected before he ever obtained a lease, and so far he has not done so, though every facility is being afforded by the Interior Department for such repayment.

I find the tablets a harmless and efficient cure for all kinds of headache."

THE BUGLE BLAST TO CANADA

Readers of the newspapers and followers of the course of the war must long ago have become convinced that the situation grows more and more intense and critical day by day. Great Britain is faced not, alone by outside enemies, but by labor trouble and by lack of those immense internal resources in the matter of food production that Germany and Austria-Hungary possess. She cannot feed herself and is compelled to rely largely on other countries for a supply of the necessaries of life. In such case t he duty of her children is distinctly plain. It is noteworthy of her enemies that they are not only thoroughly united but that they are enduring with what fortitude they possess the rigid military enforcements that are placed upon them for the conservation both of food and material. Every man, woman and child, from the Kaiser down, have been put on rations. The idea is threefold, to guard against any possible emergencies, to mislead the foe into over-confidence and by thoroughness to bring such pressure to bear as will hasten the final decision. Britain is pursuing the same course. She has not yet found it neccessary to place her population individually on short rations, but she has found it desirable to take over munition factories in order to ensure supplies that mean either life or death to the nation. Meantime, Germany by cowardly submarine assassination is endeavoring to starve her people and cripple her resources.

With such a state of affairs existent it is hardly necessary to explain to any at-home Canadians how best they can fulfill their manifest duty and show the burden-bearers how completely they possess their sympathy. But the bugle blast has its military power in peace as in war. To all the people, and to farmers, breeders and settlers in particular, the Patriotism and Production movement that is in progress is blowing its bugle, or, in other words, carrying its message. Its object is to arouse all and sundry to the part they are called on to play. That part does not of necessity mean harder work nor increased drudge; but it does imply the exercise of every faculty in attention and vigilance. It does imply in order to secure increased and improved production, by which alone cultivators of the soil can contribute towards the credit of the country and empire, the greatest care in the selection of seed, in the breeding of livestock and in economy of the land.

MORE CORN AND MORE ROOTS

It is not yet too late to plan more corn and more roots, for this season's crop—not only more acres but a larger yield per acre. Many seem to forget that the call for "Increased Production" should perhaps apply in greater measure to corn and roots than to any other branch of Canadian agriculture. Canada must produce wheat and milk if she is to go on increasing production, and these products must be produced at the lowest possible cost. These foods stand out prominently in economical feeding in Canada, viz., clover or alfalfa hay, corn and roots. It is too late now to roll the meadow, but corn and roots should receive the best attention. An acre or two more mangels or turnips, and from two to five acres more corn than usual, will, provided the season is right, mean more cheap feed than usual, and this cheap feed will save grain which may be needed elsewhere, and will at the same time carry more live stock than usual over winter, and the foundations of our agriculture rest on the live-stock industry, which must not be undermined at this time. Plan also to prepare the land for corn and roots just a little better than it has been done in the past, go over once more if necessary; disk, cultivate and harrow until the land is in the finest possible condition. After the crop is up cultivate more frequently and go after a bigger yield. It will surely pay.

A Good Medicine For the Spring

DO NOT USE HARSH PURGATIVES —A TONIC IS ALL YOU NEED

Not exactly sick—but not feeling quite well. That is the way most people feel in the spring. Easily tired, appetite fickle, sometimes headaches, and a feeling of depression. Pimples or eruptions may appear on the skin, or there may be twinges of rheumatism or neuralgia. Any of these indicate that the blood is out of order—that the indoor life of winter has left its mark upon you and may easily develop into more serious trouble.

Do not dose yourself with purgatives as so many do, in the hope that you can put your blood right. Purgatives gallop through the system and weaken instead of giving strength. Any doctor will tell you this is true. What you need in spring is a tonic that will make new blood and build up the nerves. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills is the only medicine that can do this speedily, safely and surely. Every dose of this medicine makes new blood which clears the skin, strengthens the appetite and makes tired, depressed men, women and children bright, active and strong. Mrs. S. E. Stephens, Brooks, Alta., says: "I suffered severely from headaches, and was badly run down in health. I had tried several remedies with no benefit, until I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and these have fully restored my health, and I can recommend them with confidence to all weak women."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

As a matter of fact, the Skin ridds the system of more (by weight) waste matter than the Kidneys. When there is Kidney Trouble, Pain In The Back and Acrid Urine, it may not be the fault of the kidneys at all, but be due to faulty Skin Action, or Constipation of the bowels.

"Fruit-a-tives" "cures" weak, sore, aching Kidneys, not only because it strengthens these organs but also because "Fruit-a-tives" open the bowels, sweetens the stomach and stimulates the action of the skin.

Had Plot To Rush Thaw To Virginia

Man Approached by Private Detective Tells Story to New York Sheriff

NEW YORK, April 23.—Sheriff Grifenhagen admitted last night that the information supplied to the District Attorney's office, by a man who did not get the money he was promised, had uncovered a plot to rush Harry Thaw out of the state, presumably to Virginia. The informant was Louis Weinrop formerly of 137 Ludlow street, who says he was promised $1,000 for his assistance in the plot which he says was being connected by a man named Frank Smith. Smith claimed to be connected with a well known New York detective agency. The $1,000 which was promised to Weinrop was to include $50 to bind the bargain, and when this money was not paid promptly, Weinrop sent a letter to Assistant District Attorney Frederick J. Groehl. Mr. Groehl communicated with the office of Sheriff Grifenhagen, one of whose agents went to Norfolk, Virginia, where Weinrop is now staying. To this agent and the Norfolk police Weinrop told his story of the alleged plot, which had as its ostensible purpose the return of Thaw to New Hampshire. It is believed, however, that the real purpose was to send him to Virginia, where John Armstrong Chanler, who got out of Bloomingdale Asylum made his home and was declared sane, assuming thereafter the name of Chaltmer and becoming famous by the remark, 'Who's loony now?'

Weinrop, who is engaged in the selling of jewellery in Norfolk on the instalment plan, is said to be well known in the underworld of that city. He was to have been employed as an investigator in New York by various institutions, including the Rockefeller Vice Committee and District Attorney Whitman. His story, as told to the New York official and the Norfolk police, is as follows:

"I was approached by a man who said he was a detective and wanted me to go to New York on the 22nd of April to bring with me two other men, and have an automobile ready. When Harry Thaw was being brought to the court room we were to be ready and were to take him away from his attendants by force and hurry him into the automobile. Four other men, whom this man Smith was to have on hand, would be in the court room to help us. I was to get a thousand dollars and expenses, and was to be guaranteed against any accident that might happen. But I told him he would have to pay me $50 cash to bind it, and as he refused, I could not see anything in it at all."

Weinrop said he was recommended to Smith by "some friends in New York."

"You may say for the sheriff's office said Sheriff Grifenhagen last night, "that we are taking every precaution possible to safeguard Thaw. We are not afraid of any plot to get away with him."

THE NEEDS OF FRUIT GROWING

A speaker, George F. Lewis, at a fruit growers' meeting in Grimsby, Ont., lately, after a careful study of the industry in the Niagara district, reached the conclusion that it was neither "Patriotism nor Production" that was lacking to spell prosperity, but the fundamentals of organization, co-operations, standardization and publicity.

"My plan is to organize—in a short campaign—the fruit-growers and shippers throughout the district in a parent association, with subsidiary branches on a township basis. The territory to be divided into seven or more districts. Each district to have representation in the central council or governing body. My plan is such that there will be no interference or change with the present manner of carrying on business. A grower will be free as he is now to ship direct or send his fruit through a shipping company. We need better transit facilities, better laws, better Government inspection, uniform packing, etc., but to get results there must be underlying unity in all things.

"Fixed grade that only can be packed under the 'Sunmaid' label. Consisting of well-grown specimens of each variety, sound, of uniform and of at least normal size, and of good color for the variety, of normal shape, free from wormholes, bruises, scab and other defects, and properly packed."

Temiskaming—There was a concerted attempt made to smash the price of Temiskaming this week, the selling came apparently from New York. The raiders succeeded in forcing the price down to 35½ cents at one point, but the market turned, and has been steadily climbing back. I have previously placed on record my opinion of this stock and see no reason to change this, for the holder of Temiskaming who sacrifies his stock at present prices will have hard work to replace it.

Beaver—The annual meeting of Beaver shareholders was held this week and the results as shown by President Cutter, must certainly have been gratifying to stock holders. Beaver is in better condition now than it has ever been before; and is undoubtedly one of the most capably managed properties in the Cobalt camp. Shareholders may rest satisfied that their interests will be well looked after by Mr. Cutter and his associates. Operations, as it is, by the same management that operates Temiskaming, the adjoining property, the experience gained in working the ores is of great use in working the other and assures not only economical management, but well informed development. In any event the purchaser of Beaver shares may rest assured of an absolutely square deal.

Neely Breaks With Scott

Says The Premier Has Forsaken Liberalism and Adopted Role of Autocrat

SASKATOON, Sask., April 23.—At a meeting last Saturday night at Humboldt, Dr. Neely, M.P., led an insurrection against Scott Government Honors proposals. The resolution at the meeting resulted in Principal Lloyd publicly inviting Dr. Neely to attend the meeting to be held at Humboldt tomorrow, an invitation which Dr. Neely has accepted.

Dr. Neely, Senator T. O. Davis, of Prince Albert, and Mr. A. Champagne, M.P., of North Battleford, were all here this morning.

"Rotten! Simply rotten!" said Mr. Champagne.

"Most drastic," was the comment of Senator Davis, who said the temperance movement is so general, so worldwide that no political party could stand up against it."

"It is being said that you are breaking from the party in regard to Premier Scott's proposals," was suggested to Dr. Neely.

"Yes," Dr. Neely replied, "I am out with the party so far as Premier Scott is concerned. But it is not I who is out of tune with the party. Premier Scott is the man who has forsaken Liberalism and adopted the role of autocrat. To cut off the interest of a hotel man without notice is an unheard-of thing. It is against all the laws of democracy and justice. Scott has entirely forsaken the principles of Liberalism."

Gaseous Shells Are Not Used

Germans Deny Using Shells Containing Poisonous Gases—Make Counter-Charges

LONDON, April 23.—Replying to charges emphatically denied that they are using shells, the gases from which asphyxiate their antagonists, a wireless despatch from Berlin says:

"The German troops do not fire any shells the sole purpose of which is to spread asphyxiating or poisonous gases. Such gases as develop incidentally upon the explosion of German shells are less dangerous than those emanating from ordinary British, French and Russian shells.

"Smoke-developing contrivances used by the Germans in hand-to-hand combats are in no manner contrary to the laws of warfare. On the other hand it appears from official communications that our opponents have been using illegal poisonous gases for several months."

"Thank you, it was a little cold, Mr. Herapath." I said gravely, only my teeth would chatter so that he laughed outright as he took me up to dress.

"Herapath. And to whom have I the honor of speaking?"

"Ian Miss Guest." I said mischievously. It was too cold to be rigid to advantage.

"Commonly called Bab, I think," the wretch answered. "The wills of our line are not scrupulous, you see. But come, the sooner you get back to dry clothes and the stove, the better, Bab. You can cross the river just below, and cut off half a mile that way."

"I can't," I said obstinately. Bab, indeed! How dared he!

"Oh yes, you can," with intolerable good temper. "You shall take your word and I the prey. You cannot be wetter than you are now."

He had his way, of course, since I did not foresee that at the ford he would lift me bodily and carry me over the deeper part without a pretense of asking leave, or a word of apology. It was done so quickly that I had no time to remonstrate. Still I was not going to let it pass, and when I had shaken myself straight again, I said, with all the haughtiness I could assume, "Don't you think, Mr. Herapath that it would have been more—nice—"

"Pollie is safer to carry you over, child? No, not at all. It will be winter and summer for you to run down the hill. Come along!"

And without more ado, while I was still choking with rage, he seized my hands and set off at a trot, tugging me, through the sloppy places much as I have seen a nurse drag a wayward child down Constitution Hill. It was not wonderful that I soon lost the little breath his speech had left me, and was powerless to complain when we reached the bridge. I could only think Heaven that there was no sign of Clare. I think I should have died of mortification if she had seen us come down the hill hand-in-hand in that ridiculous fashion. But she had gone home, and at any rate I escaped that degradation.

A wet stood-ear and wetter pony were dimly visible on the bridge, to which we came up, a damp umbrella creeping from some crevice added himself. I was pushed in as if I had no will of my own; the gentleman sprang up beside me, the boy tucked himself away somewhere behind, and the little "tester" set off at a canter, so deceived by the driver's excellent imitation of "Pat", the Nerse for "Tehk" that in ten minutes we were at home.

"Well, I never!" Clare said, surveying me from a respectful distance, when at last was safe in our room. "I would not be seen in such a state as by a man for all the fish in the sea!"

And she looked so tall, and trim and neat, that it was the more provoking. At the moment I was too miserable to answer her, and had to find comfort in pondering myself that when we were back in Bolton Gardens I would see that Fraulein kept Miss Clare's pretty nose to the grindstone though it were ever so much her last term, or Jack were ever so fond of her. Papa was in the plot against me too. What right had he to thank Mr. Herapath for bringing "his little girl" home safe? He can be pompous enough at times. I never knew a Queen's Counsel—and papa is stout—who was not, any more than a thin one who did not contradict. It is in their patents, I think.

Mr. Herapath dined with us that evening—if fish and potatoes and boiled eggs and sour bread and pancakes, and claret and coffee can be

To Put on Flesh And Increase Weight

A PHYSICIAN'S ADVICE

Most thin people eat from four to six pounds of good solid fattening food every day and still do not increase in weight one ounce, while on the other hand, many of the plump, chunky folks eat very lightly and keep gaining all the time. It's all bosh to say that this is the nature of the individual. It isn't Nature's way at all.

This folks stay thin because their powers of assimilation are defective. They should eat enough of the right sort to maintain life and a sensible degree of health and strength. Starving won't help them. A dozen meals a day won't make them gain a single "stay there" pound. All the fattening elements of their food just stay in the intestines they pass right through the body as waste. What such people need is something that will prepare these fatty food elements so that their blood can absorb and deposit them all over about the body—something, too, that will multiply their red blood corpuscles and increase their blood's carrying power.

For such a condition I always recommend eating a Sargol tablet with every meal. Sargol is not, as some have represented drug, but is a scientific combination of six of the most active and powerful flesh building elements known to chemistry. It is absolutely harmless, yet wonderfully effective and a single tablet eaten with each meal often has the effect of increasing the weight of a thin man or woman from three to five pounds a week. Sargol is sold by J. S. McKeown and other good druggists everywhere on a positive guarantee of weight increase or money back.

Are Cursed by Skin-Rot

Are you suffering from pimples, blotches, or an irritating rash, any form of skin trouble? If so, you have trouble to do remember that Zam-Buk is the best skin tonic. It is the special essences of which Zam-Buk is composed that give it the right to the rank of the most healing and discriminating skin stimulant that science has ever brought to bear upon skin troubles.

Mr. C. A. Smith, of Simcoton, Alta., writes: "For years I suffered terribly from skin-rot, which I tried Zam-Buk on. The result was very blotchy and irritable. I used various ointments for years, but only relief until I tried Zam-Buk. I quickly stopped the irritation, and after perseverance with Zam-Buk I am pleased to say my skin is again perfectly clear and smooth."

In addition to the ordinary spring skin troubles, Zam-Buk is a without equal for serious cases of ulcers, eczema, etc., which have defied all skilled remedies. Many people have been cured of such after suffering for years and experimenting in vain with ointments, so-called remedies. If you are a victim in any of the more serious forms of skin disease, profit by such experiences, and instead of wasting time and money on useless preparations, try Zam-Buk first.

Zam-Buk is also best for cuts, burns, bruises, piles, etc., or as an embrocation. All druggists and stores sell Zam-Buk. Refuse substitutes; see name on box when buying.

For free trial box, send 1c stamp (this article, and name of paper, to Zam-Buk Co., Toronto.

called a dinner—but nothing I could do, though I made the best of my wretched frock and was as stiff as Clare herself, could alter his first impression. He was bad; he had no eyes. He either could not or would not see anyone but the dragglet Bab—fifteen at most and a very tom-boy fifteen he had carried across the river. He styled Clare, who talked Bardeker to him in her-primmest and most precocious way, Miss Guest, once at least during the evening during her piano. He tried to freeze him with a look then, and page gave him a taste of the pompous manner, saying coldly that I was older than I seemed. But it was not a bit of use; I could see that he set it all down to the grand airs of a spoiled child. If I had put my hair up, it might have opened his eyes, but Clare pressed me about it and I was too proud for that.

When I asked him if he was fond of dancing, he said good-naturedly, "I don't visit very much, Miss Bab. I am generally engaged in the evening."

Here was a chance. I was going to say that that, no doubt, was the reason why I had never met him, when Clare interposed "Not short by asking, "You are not in the law?"

"No," he replied. "I am in the London Fire Brigade."

I think that we all upon the instant saw him in a helmet, sitting at the head of the fire station by St. Martin's Church. Clare turned crimson, and papa seemed on a sudden to call his patent to mind. The moment before I had been as angry as I could be with our guest, but I was not going to look on and see him snubbed while he was dining with us and sat. So I rushed into the gap as quickly as surprise would let me with "Good gracious, how nice! Do tell me all about it!"

It made matters—my matters—worse, for I could have cried with vexation when I read in his face the moment that he had looked for their astonishment; while the ungrateful fellow set down my eager remark as childish ignorance.

"Some time I will," he said, with a quiet smile de haunt en bas; "but I do not dine every one in person. I am Captain ——'s private secretary, aide-de-camp, and general factotum."

And it turned out that he was the son of a certain Canon Herapath, so that papa lost sight of his patent box altogether, and they set to discussing Mr. Gladstone, while I slipped off to bed, feeling as small as I ever did in my life and out of temper with everybody. It was a long time since I had been used to young men talking politics to papa when they could talk to me—politics—to me.

Possibly I dropped off in the week of vexation which followed; but it was almost more than I could bear. He—Mr. Herapath,—of course—always was always about fishing or lounging outside the little white posting-house, taking walks and meals with us, and seeming heartily to enjoy our society. He came with us when we drove to the top of the pass to get a glimpse of the Bolchill peak, and it looked so brilliantly clear and softly beautiful as it seemed to float, just tinged with color, in a far-off shining sphere of its own beyond the dark ranges of nearest hills, that I began to think at once of the drawing room in Bolton Gardens, with a busy fire burning and afternoon tea coming up. The tears came into my eyes, and he saw them, and I could not turn away from the view; and said to papa that he feared his little girl was tired as well as cold, and—spoiled all my pleasure. I looked back afterward as papa and "I drove down. He was walking by Clare's carcole, and they were laughing heartily.

And that was the way always. He was such an elder brother to me—a thing I never had and do not want—

Provincial Man For Commons

Sir Richard McBride May Desert Home Politics for Federal Arena

LONDON, April 23.—Sir Richard McBride, premier of British Columbia, stated in guarded terms, to a press representative yesterday that he may exchange the provincial for the federal arena. Having just recovered from an attack of influenza, he apparently had not seen the despatch announcing the likelihood of Premier Borden's visit. "While one cannot say what may happen," he said, "it is not improbable that I may find myself in Ottawa." He denied that any overtures had been made to him with regard to the High Commissionership.

His present trip has been mainly connected with the financial interests of the provincial railway interests of the province, which are, he explained, now nearing completion. While there was no crisis in the province, the war had made the situation difficult. The timber trade, the fisheries and other industries in which English capital was concerned had also engaged his attention. The Premier stated that he had been in touch with Ottawa and Washington regarding the development of the Pacific Eastern. He anticipated that at a date not far distant Alaska would be linked up with the United States through British Columbia, opening up a region rich in resources.

While reticent respecting Dominion affairs, there is reason for believing that Sir Richard is acting for the Government in discussing military and naval defence questions with Borden. Whether Hall. He expects to remain another fortnight and intends to visit the Canadian troops at Shornecliffe, but does not expect to get over to the front.

Reception at Loretta Abbey

The Catholic Register and Canadian Extension, in its issue of this week, has a full account of a reception at Loretto Abbey, Toronto, at which a well-known young lady of this city was a participant:

A very impressive ceremony of reception and profession took place at Loretto Abbey, Monday, April 19th. The young ladies who received the habit of the Order as Novices are: Miss Marie Johnson, Joliet, Ill., in religion Sr. Mary Constantine; Miss Helen C. O'Meara, London, Ont., Sr. M. St. Celestine; Miss Agnes St. Charles, Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Sr. Thina; Miss Frances Galvin, Chicago, Ill., Sr. M. Gonzaga. The following Novices made their holy profession and vows: Sr. M. Gabriel English, Sr. M. St. Clement Brohmann, Sr. M. Euphrosyne Ryan, Sr. M. Antoinette Pahey, Sr. M. Victorine O'Meara, Sr. M. St. Hugh Canning, Sr. M. Teresa Kelley, Sr. M. Priscilla O'Donnell.

In the absence of the Most Rev. Archbishop the ceremony was performed by Rev. Mgr. Whalen. Mass was celebrated by Rev. Jas. Walsh, pastor of St. Helen's, Toronto. The Papal Chaplain, Rev. Melville Staley, sur-mounted himself in an eloquent tribute to the Religious state, taking for the text of his sermon, "These are they who follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth," St. John. His words of encouragement to those who have "taken up their Cross to follow the Lamb" in His life of sacrifice for the salvation of the world thrilled the hearts of all who heard and relatives and friends present must have felt anew the sacredness of the consecrated lives of their loved ones, and the honor of their being thus chosen to take part in the work of the world's regeneration.

Unveils Tablet to Memory of Officer

Duke of Connaught Performs Interesting Ceremony at Old Military Cemetery, Montreal

The memory of Lieut. Gen. Sir Benjamin d'Urban, a distinguished officer under Wellington and afterwards Commander of the British forces in Canada, was honored yesterday at Montreal, when His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught unveiled upon the monument erected over his grave in the old military burying ground on Papineau avenue. Sir Benjamin d'Urban died in Montreal in 1849 and the original tablet that was placed to his memory by the officers of the garrison, was destroyed over a year ago by trespassers.

His Royal Highness, accompanied by Col. Stanton, Major Duff, A.D.C.'s and Lieut.-Col. Ledue, arrived at the burial ground shortly after noon. The ceremony was short but impressive. Mr. W. D. Lighthall on behalf of the Antiquarian and Numismatic society of Montreal and the Historic Landmarks Association, read a short address dealing with the history of the distinguished soldier, the old cemetery. To mourn as a comrade to his Royal Highness, after which Bishop Farthing offered prayer. The tablet was covered with a Union Jack and as the Duke released the holding string, the band of the Royal Highlanders broke forth into the National Anthem.

The 42nd Highlanders formed a guard of honor under Capt. Blackader and Lieut. Ewing, with Lieut. Evans in charge of the colors.

It was through Mr. H. E. Leach, whose father is buried in the cemetery, that the present tablet was restored to its place.

His clothing was caught and he was whirled around a shaft for some time before he was rescued. WHITBY FARMER KILLED IN RUNAWAY

WHITBY, April 24.—(Special.)—An accident occurred two miles east of here this morning by which Martin Lee, a farmer, lost his life, when his horses ran away. They were attached to a stoneboat and a seed drill and Lee was on his way home to dinner when the horses bolted. No one saw the accident occur, but the horses were seen dashing along the road and subsequently clashing with a telephone pole. Later the body of Lee was found on the road, his neck having been broken. Mr. Lee was a middle-aged man and leaves a wife and family, and was very highly respected in the neighborhood. He was a member of the Sons of England.

The scientists have discovered that growing boys should be permitted to be lazy. How did anyone think they could be kept from it?

WORK FOR THE BLIND.

Canada Is Laboriously Acquiring Library For Its Many Unfortunates.

The first school for the blind in the world was founded by the French philanthropist, Valentin Hauy, in the last quarter of the 18th century. The first school for the blind in Canada was founded by a French priest, Pere Rousselot, at Montreal in 1861. Since that date only four other educational institutions for the blind of Canada have been opened, the last being that of the Montreal Association of the Blind, which began its work in October last.

At a very early period in the history of the work for the blind, it was realized that the school would be a large extent, fail in its object if means were not found to keep the sightless student in close touch with the world of books after his graduation. For individual blind persons to collect private libraries was impossible, both on account of the enormous bulk of embossed works and of their prohibitive price, a book in raised print costing many times more than its ink original. The opening of the Congress of the Blind in the ordinary public libraries was found to be unsatisfactory, as the books gathered dust on the shelves for lack of readers to circulate them thereon.

At last, in 1888, I think, the Halifax School for the Blind established a circulating library for the purpose of supplying embossed books to the blind of the Maritime Provinces and of Newfoundland. The success of this venture proved conclusively that all the blind wanted was a central and distributing point and a regular mail service in order for the Canadian sightless to become self-supporters in their literary opportunities.

The volumes brought by this library was still further increased in 1906, when the Federal Government began to transport embossed books free of postal charges. In that year a second circulating library was opened at the Ontario Institution for the Blind at Brantford.

But these activities failed of their maximum usefulness because, in the first place, the attention of their staffs was divided between the school-room and the book-shelf, and, in the second place, because the blind themselves were not actively engaged in their management and extension. Accordingly a Canadian blind persons remained ignorant of the existence of these libraries, because no personal effort, in the nature of things, could be made to carry this knowledge to the blind scattered their active co-operation.

Halifax, being a number of blind men and women organized, in 1906, what is now the largest class all over the Dominion as the Canadian Free-Library for the blind. Incorporated as a society under the provisions of the Ontario Public Libraries Act, and a small money grant was obtained from the Ontario Government with which to purchase books. To defray the necessary running expenses of the circulating service individuals were solicited and responded with as much readiness as could be expected when it is considered that the blind and their needs are little known or understood in this country.

The object of the Canadian Free Library for the Blind are wholly national, Victoria and Halifax being served as well as Toronto, from which city the library is located. Its Board of Governors are blind men and its librarian is a blind man. The fact that it has already a total of more than 32,000 books and pieces of music speaks for itself.

'Phones Increasing.

The telephone business of the country is increasing rapidly, as indicated by the annual report, issued recently, for calendar year 1914. In that year $17,397,268, an increase of over two and a quarter millions, and operating expenses $12,882,407. Net earnings were $4,414,866. Gross earnings were equal to 43 per telephone in use, and the operating expenses an average of $24 per telephone.

The number of miles of telephone wire in use in 1914 was 1,325,094, an increase of a quarter of a million. There was one mile of telephone wire for every six of population. The number of telephones in use was 521,144, or one for every fifteen of population. Only one other country, the United States, is known to have so large a number of telephones in use on the basis of population.

The earnings of Canadian telegraph companies in 1914 were $5,893,276, the companies' expenses $4,242,539, leaving a net profit of $1,650,736, a regular valuation of about nine and a quarter millions. The capital shows a decrease of $112,008 as compared with 1912.

There were 192,276 miles of wire returned as being in use in 1914. Ontario easily leads, with 66,246.

Where Grandfather Fought.

Lieut. Donald Ewan Cameron, Montreal, serving with the Princess Patricias and mentioned in the casualty list as severely wounded, is a cousin of Rev. Canon Hind, of Halifax. Lieut. Cameron was injured while fighting where his grandfather, colonel of the 79th Highlanders, fought for the day one hundred years ago. Col. Cameron subsequently settled near Halifax.

"Back to the Land."

Members of the Saskatchewan Legislature are interested in a scheme involving several million dollars of capital which is calculated to make it possible to settle a suitable-bodied men in the province desirous of going back to the land. Government grants of land and loans of several hundred dollars to each prospective agriculturist are included.

SCOTS IN CANADA.

Despopulation of the Glens Played a Large Part in Canada's Life.

William Black, the Scottish writer, in the winter quarter issue of The Scottish Historical Review, tells how once the capital of the ancient kingdom, discerning the long distance sympathy existing between France and Scotland as a result of the "auld alliance," and incidentally touch on a piece of history which indirectly has a large part in the story of Canada.

Mr. Black recounts the story of the despopulation of the Highland glens, which began in the latter half of the eighteenth century, and during the Napoleonic conflict so many thousands of Highland best and bravest warriors. The Scottish lairds he writes, have discovered to their dismay, that, in the hour of national peril, grouse and deer are but poor substitutes for the stalwart Highlanders, who, in bygone days, mustered forth to battle from the dales and glens of Scotland. A writer in The Aberdeen Free Press, in May last, returned from a visit to the western Highlands, where he was greatly impressed with the response of these people to the call to arms, and with the many instances which go in the other direction, and show that the love of the land of their sires has not entered into the soul of the Highlander.

"Within the memory of not very few are the men the Highlands can send to-day," that the writer of the quoted report and in several quarters among the people I spoke to. 'Why did you leave the land?' 'We were driven our men away.' So said a soldier in the hospital, who in the heard the same thing from a man in the Outer Hebrides, from a native of Hunnesan, in Skelton, and from a man in Lewis, and the idea in another form was echoed by a man during the visit to Skye.

A hundred years ago Strathglass and the country round Beauly were what doesn't it do the same to-day' said a territorial officer who had seen the South African war; and the answer was this: 'Well, you depopulated them all. And the Highlands, once the finest recruiting ground in the Empire, were depopulated by the owners of the land." Now there are few men left in the north, but the men are not there. The glens have been cleared and the people transformed into 'sanctuaries for wild geese.'"

The Highland regiments had no small influence on Scottish settlements in Canada. They were responsible for the stream of crofters who found homes in Huron, Bruce, and other counties of Ontario. Once the channel had been opened, remarked J. J. Stevenson, the volunteer number of the same review, the immigrants flowed in through the middle of last century, till the seventies, when the movement, if not the flow of emigration from both Highlands and Lowlands to the United States and Canada, has been given a wide berth by manhers.

"At Great Whale river I had found a book of copies of a series of letters that passed from Governor Sir George Simpson and his factors of the Hudson Bay Trading Co. in 1841, which, curiously enough, partly concerned the question of the emigration to the islands of our discovery, and the correspondence showed clearly the clergies of the gentleman, and the outcome has been a specially close connection between Scotland and Canada among the British dominions.

Timely Advice Against Weeds.

"Conservation" gives some timely advice regarding the conservation of the war against weeds.

To overcome losses from weeds, it says, it is necessary to curtail them, the following points should be observed:

1. Do not sow weed seeds; sow clean seed only.

2. Practice a short rotation of crops including a sufficient amount of hoe crops to clean a good deal of the farm each year.

3. Plow shallow immediately after having and keep down all weed growth until autumn. Then plow much thoroughly and follow the next spring with a hoe crop. Gang plow and disk harrow are best for deep planting.

4. Make use of smother crops such as heavy seedings of rape or buckwheat.—P.O.N.S.

His Day Has Arrived.

Four years ago Dr. Wonder Sandys-Wensch came to Canada and joined the R.N.W.M.P. He was a Belgian parentage, but British birth, his ambition had been to join the British Army, and he was a member of Sandhurst for defective eyesight. The outbreak of war found him in Alberta, a captaincy in a crack British regiment, but was appointed private secretary to the Duke of Leopold, and mentioned time and again in despatches for bravery.

To Encourage Marriage.

Philip Pocock, chairman of the London Public Utilities Commission and a prominent member of St. Peter's Cathedral, announced that he would like to know how able is the young women members of the parish over 24 years of age are not married between now and the end of the year. When more the merrier and the better," says Mr. Pocock.

A PERILOUS JOURNEY.

Explorer Flaherty Describes Rediscovery of Islands.

Robert J. Flaherty, the Canadian explorer, gives a thrilling description of his rediscovery of islands in the far north which have been absent from charts since the days of the early mariners. He says:

"After being nearly wrecked several times, the crew deserted when Great Whale river was reached. With a new crew, the boat was actually driven ashore off one of the Hudson Bay islands. It took four days to get her into good shape and into the water again. After she had been battered by storms in Hudson Bay for about three months, the craft's deck gear and tanks were carried away in a heavy sea, and this attempt to find the islands was abandoned.

"Then it was planned to make the attempt overland during the winter. The Eskimos who were to act as guides put off the start until the first island Eskimo should come to the mainland and bring reports as to the conditions. He never appeared, and when, finally, a sledge journey was undertaken. Only a few days' trifle fields were reported as breaking up between the Belcher islands and Hudson Bay.

"The impression I had gathered from Eskimos during my first trip had led me to believe that the so-called Belcher islands, which parallel the east coast of Hudson Bay for more than 300 miles, at an average distance away of about 70 miles, were of very great extent, but this was generally believed," said Mr. Flaherty. "On the Admiralty charts they appear as a group of islets, but that is not the chart published in 1642 three years after Hudson's death in Hudson Bay, and two of these appear on Hudson's original map. The mariner has long apparently cruised close enough to their shores to note them. The islands, however, are reefs and small island outliers have proved, it seems, a effective barrier against the approach of a ship to the main island chain which, as far as small vessels, and the later Admiralty charts have been based on information given by Captain Coates, a Hudson Bay shipmaster, in 1721.

"You will see on the maps these groups of little dots with the names given as explained above, but there are no islands there. The islands were cleared and the mainland transformed into 'sanctuaries for wild geese.'"

The Highland regiments had no small influence on Scottish settlements in Canada. They were responsible for the stream of crofters who found homes in Huron, Bruce, and other counties of Ontario. Once the channel had been opened, remarked J. J. Stevenson, the volunteer number of the same review, the immigrants flowed in through the middle of last century, till the seventies, when the movement, if not the flow of emigration from both Highlands and Lowlands to the United States and Canada, has been given a wide berth by manhers.

OLEARY, V.C.

Story of the Northwest Mounted Man Who Saved a Company.

Sergt. Richard O'Leary, the Canadian all-Irishman who has been decorated with the V.C. by saving the lives of a whole company, has had a dazzling life of adventure. O'Leary's regimental record, as an officer of the Irish Guards, "has always been an excellent one," Sergt. O'Leary enlisted early in life, and on the conclusion of his term of service with the colors joined the "first reserve." But pottering about at home a time-expired man was not exciting enough for the plucky O'Leary. The Irish lad in him called for a more strenuous life. So he sailed for Canada, and there enlisted as a private in the Royal Northwest Mounted Police, for one of the best organized and most efficient corps of its kind in the Empire. Their long and exciting history is full of fights with cattle-raiders and border thieves, their endless war with the marauding Indians, skirmishes of the young Irishman.

It was in 1873, when the Northwest penetrated to the Red River, plains were overrun by murderous bands of Sioux Indians, fugitives that the Mounted Police were forced to. The present strength of this force is about 500 men. Their business is the policing and patrolling of the great prairies of the Canadian West. From the American boundary to the Arctic Circle, 1,000 miles, and from Yukon in the west to Manitoba in the east, 1,000 miles, describe some of the police posts are hundreds of miles distant from any other. The work is peaceful days the policeman's work consists in the collection of vital information likely to be of use to the Government, and the suppression, if and cattle, etc.; while he deals with any cases of illicit stills, advises and assists immigrants, and, in fact, does everything required of him by the Government. CANADA'S HOSPITALS.

Abbey of All Races Treated at Shorncliffe and Clivedon.

Of the many and varied contributions which the people of Canada have made to the old country since the war broke out, none is more highly appreciated, particularly by the British Tommy, than the services rendered by the two hospitals established and run under Canadian auspices at Shorncliffe and Clivedon.

The former, organized by the War Contingent Association, has been in operation nearly six months in the able charge of Dr. Armour, and during that period its hundred odd beds have had successively as occupants wounded Belgian, French and British soldiers, who speak in most appreciative terms of the care and attention bestowed upon them by the Canadian doctors and staff.

A few days ago there took place another event of interest to the Canadian public. This was the inauguration of the "Duchess of Connaught Canadian Red Cross Hospital" at Clivedon, which lies between London and Maidenhead. Formerly the property of the Duke of Westminster, this vast estate on which the hospital is established, was bought a few years ago by William Waldorf Astor as a fancy price, running well into seven figures, and it is largely owing to the generosity of Mr. and Mrs. Astor in placing a considerable portion of the land at the disposal of the Canadian Red Cross Society, and in that it was found possible so rapidly to bring the hospital into being. On the Taplow side of the estate, the Astors had a lovely landscape gardenic court of fair dimensions, and the bright idea occurred to the mind of Colonel Hodgetts that the house itself, with a little remodelling might not make a bad hospital, and that obviate the expense of building a new one in its entirety. The operation was no sooner made than accepted. Mr. Astor not only gave up the court, but undertook to erect and make certain additions to it free of all cost to the association.

Clivedon Hospital, equipped with 100 beds, is now in full working orders, having received its first allotment of patients a few weeks ago. Nearly a hundred British officers and one Canadian, Private Craig of Calgary, were brought across from base hospitals in France. The Canadian suffered from frostbite, but, with joy in his heart, he writes that he is fast getting well enough to return to the firing line. Craig belongs to the Princess Pats, and he is full of remorse that his old Coldstreamer, should have been obliged to "turn in jer" so soon. Many of the British Tommies at the hospital are severely wounded, and it will need all the care and attention at the disposal of Lieut.-Col. Gorrell and his assistants to pull them through. Several of the men have lost a limb, and are in a most seriously frostbitten; so much so that the surgeon in charge had to amputate the whole ten toes in one case in the hope of saving the man's feet.

Clivedon Hospital, like that at Shorncliffe, has an all-Canadian staff of doctors and nurses, who are carefully selected from the Army Medical Service. Lieut.-Col. Gorrell, Captain Lafleur and Miss Forbes, matron, have been in charge of the Shorncliffe hospital from the start.

VACANT LOT GARDENING.

Hamilton City Clerk Has Inaugurated Big Movement In Canada.

Once get a practical idea into the head of an enthusiast blessed with plenty of physical energy and something will happen. S. H. Kent, City Clerk of Hamilton, was passing through the eastern part of that metropolis one day last summer when a bright thought came to him: It was the outcome of two observations which he made off that occasion. One was the lamentable extent of waste land, grown high with weeds and grass, an eyesore to the passer-by; the other, the cramped condition of many of the poorer residents of the section.

The idea that percolated through the city clerk's brain, was simple: it would not be possible to bring these two conditions into relationship. There, on the one hand, was plenty of the best of garden land going to waste than waste. There, on the other hand, were lots of struggling families who, with the opportunity, might be able to raise their own produce, and thus reduce the cost of living. All that was needed was some organization that would take the matter in hand, secure the temporary use of the vacant land for those who would be willing to cultivate plots and generally see that the scheme was properly carried out.

From Mr. Kent's inspiration there was a sprung into being the City of Hamilton Garden Plot Association, himself and sponsored by the City Council. A committee of management composed of the mayor, two aldermen, two private citizens and the city clerk, have the project in hand and they are prosecuting it with energy. At the end of April meetings have been held in the district affected at which members of the committee have explained the scheme to the organization, urged the citizens to take out active membership.

As a preliminary step, a list of the land suitable for gardens was prepared and letters were sent to the owners asking for its use by the public. To this appeal a most hearty response was made, with the result that the committee will have an abundance of land to allot to active members. These lots will all be plowed and put in condition for planting before the plots will be assigned to the gardeners, thus making the proposition an attractive one.

Several other Canadian cities and towns have also adopted the vacant lot gardening idea, largely as a result of the Government campaign to increase production. In Owen Sound, for instance, Mr. George Menzies, secretary of the Board of Trade, in an annual report, to that body, directed attention to the large amount of vacant land within the town limits, which might very well be utilized for garden purposes by those without the necessary garden plots.

The cities of Woodstock and Brantford, Ont., follow in line. In the former case, the movement originated at the Board of Trade and production meeting held there.

In Western Canada, Regina and Moose Jaw report similar activity this year. Regina may indeed, claim credit for having started the Army Medical Service in Canada, so far as concerned, for Colonel Lord Cheyne, commanding the Canadian Contingent, has been in existence for some time.—Toronto Star Weekly.

Relationship.

Two women, who had not seen each other for some time, met on day recently. They entered on various subjects of interest and finally Mrs. Hillson asked:

"Do you remember Emily Jacobs? She was an orphan, you know."

"Why, yes," the latter replied. "She married Mrs. Knowlson, but she was an orphan."

"Oh, yes, she was," insisted Mrs. Hillson. "What makes you think she wasn't?"

"Why," said Mrs. Knowlson, with assurance, "she had a father living, for that I knew well."

"Did she?" queried Mrs. Hillson in surprise. "Well, maybe she was to them."

German Down Chimney.

A Toronto lieutenant had a thrilling experience but a sickening sight on the battle front. The information comes from the latter in a letter to friends in that city.

The lieutenant thought he saw something moving at the top of a deserted chimney. He watched for a few minutes. It moved again. "Lo, me have your rifle there for a minute," he called to one of his men. A moment later the moving object, a German observer, appeared himself, and to the instant fire of the crack shot of the Toronto man. The bullet went true to its mark. The German threw up his hands, and fell down the chimney to the ground.

The act and effect so sickened the lieutenant that for two days he is here fired for three days after.

A PRACTICAL MISSION

MEMORIAL INSTITUTE, TORONTO, IS A UNIQUE CONCERN.

In Crowded Area, Containing 33,270 Human Beings, It Flourishes In Carrying On of a Host of Activities—Everybody Is Set at Making Something In Which He Excels.

In few places in Canada does Christianity take on more simple, homely, Christian color than in the Memorial Institute, down in the grey heart of Toronto, at the corner of Richmond and Tecumseth streets, says Gregory Clark in a recent issue of The Toronto Star Weekly. There are 22,378 human souls crowded down in that area where the Institute lifts its splendid head, and those souls are of twenty-two different nationalities. There are one hundred and seventy-five workers who give their labor to the work of the Institute. And every week, sixty-three meetings are held in it, from the regular Sunday service down to the "club" meetings of tiny, tiny, kindergarten girls. The aggregate attendance at the Institute is between 7,000 and 10,000 a month. It is a hive of life, swarming, swarming. And in it, over it, through it all is the spirit of the divine faith, a humble but a joyous faith.

The Memorial Institute has six buildings—a church and five houses. The church was built some years ago by Mr. William Davies, in memory of his daughter. On the wall, as you enter the church, is a brass plate which reads:

"This House was erected for the Worship of God, by Mr. and Mrs. William Davies, in memory of their beloved daughter, Ellen."

Three years ago this March, Rev. Mr. Brown came to the Institute. It was a Baptist Church with a membership of 85. Wallmer Road Baptist Church then took it over, guaranteed its main expenses, and launched its mission work. In the three years, Mr. Brown has evolved out of the church a mission centre, with five large houses adjacent as part of the plant." The actual membership of the church has been increased to 92. But its influence has spread over a whole Toronto street district, and has literally laid its comforting hand on thousands.

The church, as the central building of the institute, is an ordinary church, in the usual auditorium. The basement, however, is no ordinary basement. When Rev. Awdrey Brown took the writer down there one day, sewing machines in the centre of the floor, a dressing-room, with mirrors, around which sat a number of women knitting, a kitchen, a dining-room, and work benches. In one corner a bookcase was being partitioned off. In another corner was the parish priest, where baby milk is procurable. Many cleaning women and men were constructing a new refrigerator. Over half dozen new sanitary lockers, shelves, painting and renovating, and some small tables one of the 67 meetings of the week. Everywhere a score of tiny girls learning to knit and speak English. And the fire-place! Don't forget the homely hearth!

Over the main door of the church is a big brown lantern just recently made by the hands of one of the men employed, who came to Mr. Brown. He was a tack-maker and copper worker with a family, forced to dig in the city sewers for a living when his health threatened to give way. He came to the Institute for help, his wife, who was ill, and was given a few pounds of copper to work with. This lamp was the result. Above it is that golden the weary feet into the House of God." There is something typical about it. The checkmaker has since mended several clocks and is now making a decent living doing work for the friends at the Institute.

Mr. Brown says to each man who comes to him:

"What can you make?"

Some say cocoa-bire mats. Some say toys, chairs, cabinets, things. A shoemaker came. He was given a spare room in the church and recommends all the tattered feet that come to furbish it. Another is a tailor, and he renovates the clothes of men that the institute never wearies of receiving. There are a hundred interesting chapters of human life.

The old-fashioned way of handling the unemployed problem," said Mr. Brown, "was to put men to work breaking stone or chopping kindling—the former of which is convict labor—but neither of which men learn the wages they are paid, and never remain with the man that some that he is receiving charity. Our plan is to find out what a man can do by first testing him, and then we provide the necessary materials for him to make a start. There is a market for the goods he produces. In this way he retains his independence. He knows he is earning his wages at the same time making enough to keep him in material for further work. If you give people charity they become paupers and they are always on your hands. Our aim is to make them self-supporting and self-respecting, and we stick with them till they are. We have then transformed them from a burden on the community to a real asset."

The houses adjoining the church are the houses of Mr. Brown and his wife, of the four paid workers, of a few students who are receiving practical experience, and the rest of the class rooms of the institute. All are crowded to the limit. Twice a week, baby clinics are held in one of the houses, and twice a week grown-up clinics, with doctors and nurses in attendance. Fathers' meetings, where toiling ones come to make clothes and friends. Classes for foreigners. Boy Scout meetings, athletic club meetings. One room is the old clothes storeroom, where all the clothes and boots donated are carefully sized away.

Varsity Students and the War.

So far one hundred and eighty-six students at the University of Toronto who have already enlisted have been graduated their year—that is, marked as having received the examinations they would have been trying for this coming week. Eighty-six of these are with the first contingent and are now somewhere in the firing zone. One thousand eight hundred students are enrolled in the Varsity Officers' Training Corps and are drilling and attending military lectures. Each day sees another batch of men applying at the registrar's office for permission to go to the front. With the closing of the term in April and with the opening of a training camp outside the city exclusively for Varsity men, the number of students actually going to the front will be, according to the word of a man intimately identified with the military movement at Varsity, not two hundred, as it now is, but six hundred, which is one-fifth of the male attendance at Varsity.

It is planned to open a training camp exclusively for Varsity men after the close of the year, in May. It will be somewhere outside Toronto, possibly at Long Branch or Niagara, it will be conducted by the Officers' Training Corps under Col. Lang. As many as want to go to the front can then go, and, considering the need, the imperial army of men not only trained as officers, but as engineers, surveyors, linguists, doctors, and all branches of education, Varsity will no doubt see her opportunity.

Lists Gave It Away.

A pretty, attractive, twenty-six girl, 22 years old, said good-bye to her sweetheart, who went away in khaki with the first contingent.

He wrote regularly from Salisbury Plain; she regularly sent to him. The news came that his regiment was at the front. She began to watch the newspapers with almost painful interest. He had been wounded, so we learned regularly for over two years.

One day recently she saw his name among the wounded in the casualty list. With it the "next of kin." His name with "Mrs." in front of it.

The girl got a telegram book and rang up. "What's the matter, Jack's wife," came back the reply. "We've got two children."

Knitting Season Nearly Over.

The Canadian Associated Press is asked to notify the society working for the Canadian contingent that knitting will be required much longer. Supplies in hand are likely to meet the demand. Socks, however, are what are required. Also woollen handkerchiefs, tobacco, pipes, canes and newspapers.

A Day's Supplies.

An ordinary army division of about 18,000 men requires some ten tons of supplies every day, including tea and oats for the horses.

THIRTEEN years before Confederation John Redpath turned out "Ye Olde Sugar Loafe"—the first sugar refined in Canada.

In 1880, thirty-five years ago, the Redpath Refinery brought out Canada's first Granulated Sugar, known ever since as the best.

Again in 1913, the Redpath Refinery introduced the third great improvement in Canada's sugar supply—the Redpath 2 and 5-lb. Cartons.

DURING all these years of leadership, the Redpath aim has been QUALITY—the quality on which the national preference for Redpath Sugar now rests so solidly.

Such quality is the result, not of modern machinery alone, but of experience, modern methods, and a fixed determination to produce nothing unworthy of the name Redpath—to maintain in every pound of our product the reputation of "Canada's Standard Sugar". 120

Indelible Ink Tree.

An indelible ink tree, known to botanists as Semecarpus sinnacardium, is chiefly found in India, but grows also in north Australia and the West Indies in its nut supplies the natural marking fluid. When dried for commerce the nut is heart-shaped and nearly black and contains a black viscid juice. Our marking linen or cotton this juice is mixed with quicklime. It can be made into marking ink by treating the nut with a mixture of alcohol and sulphuric ether and is also used for black varnish.

Dogs of Ancient Lineage.

Some breeds of dogs are of comparatively modern origin. But when it comes to determining the ancestry of a dog as the toy spaniel difficulties there are to be encountered. The toy is one of the oldest breeds in the world, boasting a proud line of ancestry that carries it back at least 2,000 years and then is apparently lost in antiquity. Another dog as old is the Maltese terrier of Europe, a breed that enjoyed the favor of the highborn women of Rome and Greece a thousand years before the Christian era.

Trees that Explode.

All lightning-blasted trees explode as overcharged boilers do. The flame of the lightning does not burn them up, nor does the electric flash split them like an ax. They simply explode, overcharged, as may be a boiler with steam. The lightning is conducted into the damp interstices of the trunk and into the hollows under the bark. The tremendous heat at once turns all the moisture in those cramped spaces into steam. This steam is the immediate explosion blows the tree asunder.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Property.

Property there is only one verb for love. It is not "sane." It is not "sincere." It is not the softest Italian verb. No printed language of man knows it. But the violin knows it, and the wild bird knows it: even the sea knows it. Put no man or woman can say it in any language that mankind.—"Love Letters of the King."

Love.

Love.

Mrs. Martindale, realising the dangers which beset young persons who step into matrimonial traps, desired that her daughter should be settled matrimonially while her mother lived and that she should marry a good man. Edward Sawyer was the person on whom Mrs. Martindale had fixed her intentions for her daughter. One day she said to him:

"Edward, I have noticed that you seem pleased with Gwen. I wish to see her settled before I leave her. If you wish to marry her I will help you to win her. If not, I shall try to make a match for her elsewhere."

"You have not been deceived in my partiality for Gwen, Mrs. Martindale, but I don't see that Gwen has any special partiality for me."

"Gwen is romantic and needs to be won by romance. That is why I fear for her. Some worthless fellow is likely to appear to her in that way and marry her. I value that which is practical in you and wish that you might ask it temperately, in a bit sentimental, catch Gwen and marry her. After marriage I am sure your good sense and wisdom will hold her."

Mr. Sawyer sat evidently turning something over in his mind, then assured Mrs. Martindale that, although he would be glad to win her daughter, he feared that he was too matter of fact to please her.

One day Gwen received a note which put her in a flutter. The writer declared that he had known her for some time; that he had loved her from the moment he first saw her; that he had forborne to give her the slightest inkling of his affection because he had not observed any predisposition on her part for him. He was a believer in love from the beginning. He knew the woman he wanted the moment he saw her and felt sure that if she wanted him she would know him. While he would not make himself known, he could not refrain from telling her that he loved her.

In a few weeks came a second letter. In it her correspondent said that he was impelled to write to her, though he had no information or himself to communicate. He had met her once since he had written the first letter, but had observed nothing in her greeting to give him any reason to think that she had chosen him as he had chosen her. Nevertheless he had a faint hope that there might be some subtle medium of transference which would enable his love to kindle its like in her.

Whether or not this medium existed, Gwen's heart went out to this unknown lover, or, rather, to a man whom she created. She was troubled that he did not enable her to make even a tentative reply by giving her an address. But one day she received a letter in which he said that he was afraid of losing

TORPEDO BOAT DESTROYERS

They Have Many Important Parts to Play in Naval Warfare.

Torpedo boat destroyers, as the name implies, were first built to engage the small torpedo boats which had become a serious peril to the big battleships and large cruisers.

So serious was the menace that searchlights and rapid fire guns were regarded as unreliable for the protection of these big ships against this smaller craft. It was thus that the destroyer was born, and, with gradual additions, its duties were extended until they included all that was formerly done by the small torpedo boat, and much more besides.

It is a fact that the modern destroyer is from one four times as large as one of the earlier type, which naturally makes it much more seaworthy and obviously increases its radius of action, seeing that it is capable of carrying much more fuel.

The objects of a modern torpedo boat destroyer flotilla are many. Perhaps the paramount duty of every vessel in the flotilla is to discharge its torpedoes, should it get near enough, at the enemy's big battleships. But a very important office to fulfill is that of scouting, which comprises locating and reporting the position of the enemy.

Should the enemy make a night attack the destroyers are relied upon to locate and report the position of the advancing fleet's torpedo craft, as well as attack or drive them away before they can force an attack against the bigger battleships.—London Telegraph.

Manitoba Grain.

Although the area in wheat of Manitoba was nearly 225,000 acres more than the preceding year, the yield per acre is four and a half bushels less, making the aggregate yield for the province is 10,250,000 bushels less. This deficiency is no doubt attributable to the excessive heat and light rainfall during the summer months.—Government Bulletin.

Saved on the Gallows

By LOUISE B. CUMMINGS

Famous in English history is that Duke of Gloucester who murdered his two nephews in the Tower of London, one of whom was the rightful heir to the throne, and made himself king of England in the prince's stead.

At that time there lived in England Robert Percy, a young man of the most admirable qualities. It was some time before the secret of the murder of the young princes began to leak out, and when it did there were low mutterings on the part of the people. Percy, who was familiar with the king's treachery, was more loud spoken than others, and Richard, aware of the young man's influence with the masses and fearing that he would bring about a revolt, ordered his arrest on a charge of high treason.

On the day that Percy was conducted along a street leading to the Tower, surrounded by men at arms, the curbs were lined with sympathizers, who breathed prayers that he might escape the danger threatening him and muttered maledictions on the head of the tyrant.

At an upper window stood Lady Gwendolen Bickford, a younger daughter of the Earl of Charenton. She looked down on young Percy, walking erect between his guards, his bearing indicating that he was ready and willing to lay down his life in contending against crime. Every one believed that he was going to his death. His manly beauty, his noble bearing and the crown of martyrdom rendered him an object of pity to all. But to Lady Gwendolen he was more than this. Within those few minutes during which he was passing her heart left her bosom and settled upon him. Percy, happening to look in her direction, saw the love light in her eyes, and his load was lightened.

Richard, fearing to order Percy to execution without a trial, lest it excite the people to revolt, directed attorneys to prepare a case against him. Persons were bribed to swear that he had been heard advocating the king's assassination and placing the throne of Richmond on the throne. Lady Gwendolen, learning this, begged her father to induce lawyers to defend the accused. The earl not only knew that the case was hopeless, but did not dare to oppose the king; consequently he refused to have anything to do with it.

One day Lady Gwendolen went to that quarter of London given over to lawyers and found Roger Moore, an old attorney who had served her father, and consulted him as to what might be done to save young Percy. After listening to what the girl had to say he replied that Percy's case was hopeless because the king had declared that he should die. "He will surely be convicted," said the old man, "after his conviction there is but one way by which he may legally escape the gallows. But should he go free under this statute the king would doubtless find some other way to get rid of him."

Lady Gwendolen asked for attorney to what law he referred, and he replied that it was a decree of King Edward IV., naming a condition on which a man about to be hanged should go free. As soon as the girl heard the condition her face lighted with hope. To fulfill it was possible, but would it avail in the end?

Percy was convicted of high treason against the king and sentenced to be hanged and quartered on a certain date. At the time an army was gathering under the Duke of Richmond to depose the king, and Richard was gathering his forces to meet it. There had been a former attempt to put the duke on the throne in the king's place, but Richard was as bold and crafty as he was wicked and had defeated all attempts against his authority.

There was no one he feared to leave in his rear so much as Robert Percy, and when he had made all preparations to march against his opponents he delayed a day to make sure that this dangerous enemy was dead.

The day before the one set for the execution Lady Gwendolen Bickford was closeted with Roger Moore, and on the following morning, when the crowd went to Tyburn to witness the hanging, there two were of the number, and when the prisoner arrived they occupied seats near the scaffold. When all was ready and the condemned man was about to be strung off Roger Moore arose and said:

"Mr. Sheriff, as counsel for the prisoner I claim his body under an edict of King Edward IV., who decreed that whenever a man is condemned of treason and is about to be hanged, if there be a woman willing to marry him, he shall go free. This woman stands here a willing and ready to marry the prisoner."

This speech naturally disconcerted the sheriff, who had never heard of the statute. The judge who had convicted the prisoner was present at the hanging, and the matter was referred to him. He at once quoted Roger Moore's statement, whereupon Percy was unbound, the black cap taken from his head, and he was led up to upon the upturned face of Lady Gwendolen Bickford.

The king waited till the hour for the execution, then, supposing Percy to be dead, gathered his forces, formerly that where a few days later he was defeated and killed. Robert Percy was in Richmond's army, and Richard, becoming king considered him, thus giving him equal rank with the girl who had saved his life by marrying him.

TEN YEARS AFTER

By F. A. MITCHEL

Mr. and Mrs. Tom Aldrich were dining at a restaurant. They had been married ten years. Mrs. Aldrich sat looking about her, admiring or condemning the apparel of the ladies at other tables, while her husband read an evening paper.

"Tom," said the wife, "there's a bridal couple over there."

Tom looked about him.

"Where?"

"At the table by the middle window."

"Oh!"

"She has a lovely hat."

"How do you know they are bride and groom?"

"How do I know? Everything indicates it."

"What, for instance?"

"Well, in the first place, she is conscious. She looks just as I felt when you and I dined at the Summerset House the day after we were married."

"What else?"

"Look."

"I'm following her eyes in the direction of the supposed bride and groom.

"Well?"

"Don't you see?"

"No, I don't."

"They are holding hands under the tablecloth. A waiter side-stepped to the window."

"Confining!" satisfied, Aldrich returned his paper. "A page of advertisements of women's wear was exposed to his wife. She bent forward and scanned it.

When the next course came on Mr. Aldrich had finished the commercial reports and helped the viands. The lovely remark made during this course by the husband was, "The market closed strong;" the only one by the wife was, "Is my hat straight?"

Between the third and fourth courses Mr. Aldrich looked at his watch, eyed with his wineglass and made one remark: "I shall sell Mop tomorrow. Make sale, I'm sure." The wife replied, "I bought our yesterday."

Meanwhile the wife's attention was divided between the ladies' hats—she was thinking of buying one—and the bride and groom.

"Tom," she said presently, "look."

Again he turned his eyes, poising a mushroom on his fork while doing so. The bride and groom had risen, and the groom was holding the bride's coat for her. As she slipped it on her he folded it about her in a manner to denote extreme tenderness. She looked up into his eyes dove-like.

"Why don't you ever show me such attention?" asked Mrs. Aldrich.

"Because I don't wish to attract the attention of a restaurant full of people."

But Mrs. Aldrich did not hear. She had caught sight of a hat that pleased her.

"Just the thing to go with my tailor made suit. I wonder where she got it."

But at that moment the bride and groom as fled past her, the bride looking as if she were facing a battery of all the eyes in the restaurant, as indeed she was, and the groom looking elated.

"I wonder," remarked Mrs. Aldrich, "why brides and grooms are so conscious of being observed and yet so fond of giving themselves away, especially in public places."

"Because they can't help it," replied her husband.

When the repast was finished and the bill was called for Mrs. Aldrich said:

"Is you remember that first dollar we had together after our wedding at the Summerset?"

"The Summerset? Trying to remember."

"Yes. You said to me, 'Anything more, sweetheart?' and when I replied 'Nothing' you said, 'Don't you think you should like an ice?' and when I said 'No' again you said, 'A little cordial to top off with?' And when I declined that you kept on asking me if I would have this and have that."

"How I must have bored you!"

As he made the last remark the waiter laid the bill before him. He did not dispute it, but looked as if he would like to, though the charge was moderate.

"Do you remember, dear," asked Mrs. Aldrich, "how fat the Summerset, knowing that we were a bride and groom, they stuck upon for $19.50 when the usual charge is more than $7.50?"

"Ever be known a like. Edith, how have you managed to keep those figures in your head for ten years?"

Mrs. Aldrich made no audible reply, but she made one inwardly. It was this:

"How fortunate men so soon forget that which should be nearest to their hearts!"

The Town of Hollowell

By EUNICE BLAKE

Edgar Wharton when he came of age inherited $10,000. He did not consider the amount sufficient to compete in trade with the larger concerns doing business in the city and foresaw a plan to go west and grow up with the country. But with the whole west to choose from he was at a loss where to betake himself.

One day he received a circular directing his attention to the town of Hollowell, in a new fledged state beyond the Missouri river. The circular named numerous advantages that Hollowell possessed. The climate was a perpetual summer; the earth was so rich that seeds dropped anywhere would produce in abundance; the water was as clear as crystal.

"That's just what I'm looking for!" exclaimed Edgar, and he went right off to his fiancee to tell her about it. She was so delighted with the description of Hollowell that she said nothing would please her better than to live in such a place, whereupon Edgar proposed that since the distance there and return was great they be married and go there to remain. To this the young lady agreed. They were wed, and, prepared to settle in Hollowell, they started west.

The circular was signed by one Alphonse Honeydew, a real estate agent, who was selling town lots in Hollowell like hot cakes. Wharton wrote him that he was coming, and Mr. Honeydew, who proved to be a French Canadian, met him at the station. A handsome brick structure that bespoke prosperity for the town. He took them to it in a $1,000 auto and insisted on their being his guests while they looked about them. After a rest overnight he took them on a tour of inspection, calling their attention to various properties that he had sold and would at rising prices, making a number of persons rich. On the outskirts of the town was a very large factory surrounded by a forest of noble trees, a part of which had been cut down and a timber property. Mr. Honeydew explained that the factory was used for the manufacture of wood paper and employed 2,000 hands. It was shut down at the time for the purpose of putting in additional machinery, but would be started again in a week or two.

Then the couple were driven back to the town and stopped at the library, which Mr. Honeydew stated had been Senator Hollowell, the president and principal owner of the wood paper company. There seemed to be no one in building except the librarian, a young woman who was spending her time embroidering. Mr. Honeydew explained that books could be taken from the library and the citizens of Hollowell usually read them in their luxurious homes.

Mr. Honeydew told Wharton that the town was growing. The west had recently died and his estate must be settled. Wharton replied that there was but little time to effect a sale, and he thought the property could be bought for a song. In a month or two it would be worth a fabulous sum. He drove the bride and groom out to look at it, and they found it very much prated.

Wharton told Honeydew that he wouldn't buy him to sell for profit and his wife in his auto any more. They would walk about and see the town for themselves. The real estate agent protested against this, saying that his car was especially intended for his clients that he expected a dozen or two at once in a few days, but just now the press was an interval. He couldn't think of permitting them to walk. Edgar insisted, and Honeydew, when he saw that he was offering a very good store, a clerk who had evidently been asleep came forward.

"What's the matter with this place?" asked Mrs. Wharton. "There are a number of attractive buildings, and it looks prosperous, but there are few people in the streets, and there is an absence of bustle."

"I don't mind telling you," said the clerk, "since I'm going away tomorrow, that this is a branch of the Wood Paper company. For some reason or other, tariff or trust, the plant has been told to cut away, and the money for completing it all the more evaporating.

CANADIAN OFFICERS AMONG KILLED AND WOUNDED

The Brave Fellows Who Went Down Before the Terrific Onslaught of the Enemy—Toronto Feels Weight Of Casualties

OTTAWA, April 26.—(Special.)—Canada has received her first great casualty list from the fighting at the front. It records the death in action of twenty-two officers, including three Lieutenant-Colonels. In addition, fifty-eight officers have shed their blood, and are on the list of wounded. This, it is to be noted, is not a complete list, and there is no record so far of non-commissioned officers killed or wounded in the heavy fighting of Thursday, Friday and Saturday, which is still going on. The British estimate is ten men to every officer. This would bring the total of Canadian casualties up to 800.

Judging by the lists, the whole Canadian division was engaged in the great battle, though no mention is made of the 15th, commanded by Col. J. A. Currie. All the others have their toll of dead and wounded to announce. But there is no mention of the artillery with the exception of the Montreal Heavy Battery, which the Canadians were said to have lost and then recaptured. There are no officers connected with the battery mentioned in the casualty lists. The Germans report the capture of guns and prisoners, and some anxiety is therefore felt here as to the Canadian artillery, which must have been placed between the heavy battery and the trenches.

The fight was a terrible one, and though Canadians suffered heavily, there is every indication that the division conducted itself in a gallant manner. All day long messages of congratulation have been coming into the Prime Minister and the Minister of Militia, testifying in unqualified terms to the splendid part which the Canadian troops played in the action.

Three Majors, eight Captains and seven Lieutenants are dead on the field of honor.

The list of officers killed and wounded is yet incomplete and the list of non-commissioned officers and men has so far not been received regarding the desperate fighting around Ypres.

Facing the Narrows Stupendous Task

Semi-Official Message From the Dardanelles Describes Difficulties of Situation

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, April 26.—A semi-official correspondent with the allied fleets in the Dardanelles writes that the Narrows could be forced if occasion warranted the necessary loss of ships, but unless there was a powerful army ready to occupy the Gallipoli Peninsula, the Turks and Germans would immediately close the Straits again and the fleet would have the difficulty of fighting its way out again. The Mine fields are constantly renewed, and concealed batteries of heavy guns and howitzers and a great number of movable field batteries at the command of the enemy, make the task, the more it is examined, assume tremendous proportions.

STABBING AFFRAY AT POINT ANN

Condition of the Victims Serious and Fatal Results are Feared—Assailant Arrested and Placed in County Jail—Ante-Mortem of Victim Taken by the Police Magistrate and County Attorney

As the result of a stabbing affray which occurred at Point Ann, in Thurlow Township, at about five o'clock Saturday afternoon, Isaac Chase is in the Belleville hospital suffering from a severe wound, which may prove fatal, and Thomas J. Hull is a prisoner in the County jail, charged with the offence. The condition of Chase would indicate a nature that his life was despaired of.

It appears that for upwards of two years Chase has been a tenant of Hull's at the Point, and was about to leave. It is alleged that he owed Hull a considerable amount for rent, and this was the cause of the trouble. Hull demanded the rent money, and Chase, it is alleged, refused to pay the same. An altercation occurred between the two men, and as a result Chase was stabbed in the abdomen with a knife in the hands of Hull. The wound made is serious in its nature, penetrating the abdomen for a considerable distance, severing arteries and intestines. As soon as possible after the affray, the wounded man was conveyed to the Belleville Hospital, where his injuries were attended to. At a late hour on Saturday night the condition of the injured man was such that Police Magistrate Masson of this city and Crosby Attorney Anderson were called to the hospital to take his ante-mortem statement.

Shortly after the affray the police were notified of the occurrence and Sergt. Naphin was detailed to proceed to Point Ann and arrest Hull, which he did. It is said Hull warned Chase not to come near him, but he did so, with the result that he was stabbed.

The victim of the affray is 32 years of age, and a married man with a family. He is a member of the Mohawk Indian tribe. Hull, the assailant, is an unmarried man 63 years of age. He has been a resident of Point Ann for some years, and those who are intimately acquainted with him refer to him as a quiet, inoffensive man.

This morning the accused was before the Police Magistrate and, without taking any evidence the case was enlarged to May 4th.

The affair caused considerable excitement at Point Ann, and the outcome is being awaited with much interest.

LONDON GOES WILD OVER CANADA'S FEAT

Metropolis Celebrates Gallantry of Dominion's Troops—Journalist's Fine Tribute—"They Have Given Their Brave Blood Without Measure

LONDON, April 26.—(Special)—The scenes in London upon the announcement of how the Canadians had "undoubtedly saved the situation," brought to mind the well-authenticated story of what happened on the eve of the big emergency of one of our Egyptian campaigns. Said the commander to his men, "Lads the news must be in London tonight." Last night the news of what the Canadians had accomplished verily was in London. It was in Toronto, Montreal, Peterboro'ough, Colombo and Ballarat, and any other unit in Great Britain you may mention, but nowhere, not even in your big Canadian cities, was it more fully proclaimed than in the Empire's metropolis. Every single evening newspaper contains the word "Canadians." The same is true of the sheets of Sunday papers.

London was aflame with the latest official record of Canadian gallantry. Let it be clearly understood though that there were no noisy, boisterous exhibitions in the public places, or private places either. It so happened that a specially large number of Canadians were on leave from Shorncliffe in London, parading the streets with friends and enjoying themselves soberly and rationally, as is nowadays invariably the case. Undoubtedly these men acquired new interest in the eyes of London's populace, and we do not consider it a flight of imagination to record that they pardonably carried their heads a little higher. Many of them attended the patriotic concert in Albert Hall, graced by the presence of the King and Queen, and were eagerly pointed out to the children by their parents but neither here nor anywhere else was there any mafficking.

A feeling of intense satisfaction at the Canadian achievement was everywhere reflected. Many of Canada's bravest had undoubtedly saved the situation with their lives. If the war finished tomorrow it is doubtful if there would be any wild demonstration. In truth everybody is convinced that the war will not finish for many to-morrows, and the price of crushing the spirit revealed in our enemies will be grievous.

German ATTACKS CHECKED BOMBARDMENT OF YPRES

British Repulsed Two German Attacks in Belgium—Fight Developing on Heights of Meuse—German Attacks End in Failure

PARIS, April 26.—(Afternoon official statement)—In Belgium two German attacks moving out from Pascheendele and from Brodseinde were checked yesterday by British troops. The enemy thereupon bombarded Ypres with violence. Our activities are being continued along the Yser Canal.

At Notre Dame de Lorette we repulsed a German attack.

On the heights of the Meuse fighting is developing. The attack on the Calonne trench reported yesterday was checked by our counter attack, and the enemy was driven back. He subsequently made another attack further to the east in the direction of Streny, evidently striving to recapture Les Eparges.

A violent attack, preceded by a fierce bombardment, took place short by after this movement on the eastern slopes of the position at Les Eparges, but the German attack resulted in failure.

TWO BABES PERISH

WINNIPEG, April 26.—(Special.)—In a fire which destroyed the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. Vinlour St. Charles just outside of Winnipeg, two little babies perished, Mary Vinlour, the nine-months-old daughter of Mrs. Vinlour, and Jack Tenant, the one-year-old son of the maid, Mrs. Tenant. Mrs. Vinlour has written a number of books on poultry subjects. She is a member of the Winnipeg Press Club, and is well known, both in eastern and western Canada.

NO CANTEEN AT BARRIEFIELD CAMP

A Kingston contemporary learns that no canteens of any kind will be allowed at the Barriefield camp, which is to open on May 15th. Persons who have made application for privileges have been refused. It is even said that the Y.M.C.A. will not be allowed to sell anything on the camp grounds. Anything to be supplied to the soldiers will be supplied by the Militia Department and dispensed by the Army Service Corps.

The troops for the barriefield camp will not only occupy the Heights, but also the lower Commons at the end of the bridge. It is years since the fatter ground was used for camping, but it will be required this year, owing to the large number of soldiers who will gather for overseas training.

Congratulation From King George

The King Cables Warmly Congratulates Duke of Connaught on Canadians' Gallantry

(Canadian Press Special)

OTTAWA, April 26.—A message from King George to the Duke of Connaught, congratulating Canadians, reads: "Congratulate you most warmly on the splendid and gallant way in which the Canadian division has fought during the last few days north of Ypres. Sir John French says their conduct was magnificent throughout. The Dominion will be justly proud."

ONE OF CANADA'S FINEST ATHLETES

TORONTO, April 26.—(Special)—Capt. Gerald O. Lees of the 12th Battalion reported killed, was one of the best known athletes in Canada, being especially prominent as a golfer. He was on the reserve of the Fifth Royal Highlanders of Montreal, and when war broke out at once volunteered. He was a member of the Royal Ottawa Golf Club and in 1913 was runner-up for the championship.

Capt. Lees was manager of the Ottawa branch of the brokerage firm of C. J. McCuaig, Montreal. Mr. McCuaig's son, Lieutenant Eric McCuaig, is reported wounded.

The Dardanelles General Attack

LONDON, April 26.—The Admiralty and War Office declared this afternoon that a general attack on the Dardanelles had begun. An army, it was said, has been disembarked successfully.

"WE WANT MORE MEN —AND NOW!"

London, April 26.—(Special)—Addressing a recruiting meeting today, Dr. Christopher Addison, Parliamentary Secretary of the Admiralty, said:

"If you assume that Earl Kitchener is not only gratified but satisfied with the response to the call for volunteers you fall into a very serious error. We want more men. We want them now, so that they may be properly trained to play an effective part in the struggle."

GERMANS RUSHING MEN INTO THE CARPATHIANS

Determined to Press The Russians Back the Enemy is Massing in the Region of Cracow and Stryj

LONDON, April 26.—(Special)—The news from the eastern front is still of an indefinite character. The Russian official reports record the repulse of the Austrian attacks on the heights of Polen and the capture of a series of important hills after desperate fighting in the region of Telepatsch.

The London Times correspondent at Petrograd cables:

The transfer of German troops to the Carpathians, which is reported daily, is assuming much larger proportions. The Novoe Vremya critic notes the growing appearance of German reinforcements at various points, particularly in the Cracow and Stryj regions. Further corroboration of this is seen in the greater confidence of the Austrians in the former section, which could be due only to the arrival of fresh troops. Otherwise they would never have risked the attack on Gorlice, thus disturbing the lull which hitherto had reigned to their advantage.

The German high command is demanding the Narew region of all the points that can possibly be spared, with which they are plugging the dangerous holes in the Carpathians. Their place is taken by heavy artillery.

Evidently the Germans wish to pass suddenly from words to deeds, and deeming further concentration before Ossowetz useless, are beginning to seriously assemble in the region of Cracow.

GERMANS' DESPERATE EFFORT TO BREAK THE ALLIES' LINES

Official reports from Flanders are both meagre and contradictory, but it is generally believed in London that the Germans are again making desperate efforts to break through to the French channel ports. Some such recrudescence of the German offensive has been anticipated by war experts, but this movement—forestalling the long-expected Allied offensive—comes as a distinct shock to the general public.

It is impossible to get a clear idea of the extent of the German movement; but some special despatches to London papers describe it as so important that the Germans are even credited with the intention of bringing Von Hindenburg from the East to conduct operations, and Emperor William himself is reported as proceeding to the Yser front.

CANADIAN PRISONERS NUMBER ONE THOUSAND

A German Official Statement Alleges the Capture of 45 Cannon and Three Thousand Prisoners, Including One Thousand Canadians

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, April 26.—(German official)—Germans hold Lizerne on the west bank of the canal, which the French pretend to have reconquered. Also on the east of the canal, the conquered terraine remains in the possession of the Germans. The number of cannon taken by the Germans rose to 45, including four English. Northwest of Zonnebeke German attacks continue. More than 1,000 Canadians were taken prisoners. The total number of prisoners rose to 3,000. They include Senegal negroes, English, Turcos, Hindus, French, Canadians, Zouaves and Algerians.

SHOT IN THE BACK COLBORNE FARMER THOUGHT MURDERED

(Canadian Press Special)

GODERICH, Ont., April 26.—What appears to be murder was disclosed early this morning, when word reached Coroner Hunter that Robert Dean, a farmer, of Colborne township, was found dead on the side of the road north of this twn. The man had been shot in the back, and robbed. The motive was not robbery, as Dean's pockets were undisturbed. An inquest will be held immediately.

The history lesson was in progress, and in vain the teacher coaxed her class to answer, at last she brightened up. "Now, Tommy," she said, "Mary followed Edward the Sixth, and who followed Mary?"

KINGSTON.

Corporal Hipgrave of "C" Battery has been made sergeant.

A restaurant on Brock street has been placed out of bounds to the men of the 21st Battalion.

All the men of the 39th battery were inoculated against typhoid fever during the week, and there are a number of very sore arms, yet the men are doing their duties every day.

It is rumored among military men in the city that Sergt.-Major Bray of the R.C.H.A., who is at present in England, in the record office, in charge of details at Westminster, has been made a warrant officer.

The nurses' training class opened in the military hospital this morning in charge of Lieut.-Col. Etherington, assisted by Dr. W. T. Connell, Captain Kidd, Sisters Pugh and Reid. The nurses will have access to the General Hospital and other places for the purpose of conducting their studies in sanitation, etc.

It is said in military circles that Dr. W. T. Connell will be given the rank of Major. Dr. Connell is considered one of the best pathologists and bacteriologists in Canada and his position on the staff of the hospital corps of Queen's will be an element of strength to this organization.

No part of the Barriefield camp will occupy the lower commons. It is 12 years since the commons were occupied by the 4th Hussars and the 3rd Dragoons, and they are not very well adapted to camp purposes. The supply camp of the A.S.C. will be on the upper commons and where the supplies are handled there the soldiers will be also.

BLOODY BATTLE ANNOUNCED FROM AFRICAN TERRITORIES

LONDON, April 26.—(Special.)—An engagement in East Africa, which for bloodiness considering the number engaged, surpassed even the fighting on Hill 60 in Belgium, is mentioned briefly in a War Office communique issued by the Official Press Bureau last night.

A force of 300 Indian troops, holding the British post at Jassin, was attacked by 2,000 Germans, and surrendered the post only after the ammunition had been exhausted and only about twenty of the defenders remained, the commander of the force being among the slain.

The official statement covers the operations in the British East Africa protectorate between November and March, and says:

"An attempt by Indian and British troops to take Tanga in German East Africa was unsuccessful, and the forces re-embarked and proceeded to Mombasa. Simultaneously an attack on a German outpost at Longido resulted in the Germans evacuating their position after suffering heavy losses. The British also drove the Germans out of British territory across the Umba River.

"The British post at Jassin, held by 300 Indians, was attacked by 2,000 Germans. Jassin was surrendered after its ammunition had been expended and the commander and 280 men had been killed.

"An expedition sent from Mombasa occupied the German island of Mafia, the German garrison surrendering unconditionally.

"Shirati, on Lake Victoria Nyanza, was attacked and occupied by the British. The German armored steamer, Muanza was driven ashore and disabled. Subsequent fighting at Shirati resulted in the Germans being defeated and retreating in disorder."

Liberals Prepare For an Election

OTTAWA, April 26.—(Special)—There are evidences here of elaborate preparations by the Liberal organization in anticipation of a possible general election. These preparations appear to be based upon the belief that the persistent partisan attacks upon the Government by the Opposition, both in and out of Parliament, have created a necessity which the Government will meet by submitting to the electorate their decision in the conduct of the war, and war measures which they have proposed. As to the intention of the Government there has been no announcement yet. It is an open secret that before the outbreak of war the Prime Ministry had determined to submit his record to the judgment of the electorate last Autumn. With this in view, he had arranged an eighty tour of the western provinces, as, during the campaign his presence would be required in eastern Canada.

A KNITTING MALADY

LONDON, April 25.—Too much wartime knitting and sewing is responsible for the epidemic now in England of a malady which can be compared with writer's cramp or tennis elbow. The physicians call it "knitters' neuritis." It affects the arms and shoulders rather than the fingers, and seems only to afflict those who knit with difficulty, not having practiced the art in their youth. The only treatment is to give up knitting indefinitely.

"When any untrained set of muscles is suddenly called upon to repeat indefinitely a complex and unaccustomed sequence of movements," says a London physician: "a spasmodic paralysis is very likely to develop. Knitter's neuritis begins with the workers feeling that the usual wrist and finger movements cannot be followed with the customary ease. Then the muscles get still, and in the later stage develop a spasmodic cramp as soon as the knitting needles are taken into the fingers. Although the fingers are thus affected whenever an attempt is made to knit, there is no interference with other varieties of finger movement."

WORLD'S CRACK SHOT KILLED IN BATTLE

Lt.-Col. Hart McHarg, who was connected with the Sixth D.C.R.O., Vancouver, who is among the killed, was the champion rifle shot of the world, winning the title at the last international Rifle matches at Camp Perry, Ohio, in 1913. He won the Governor-General's prize on two occasions, being one of the only two men who ever won the honor twice at the D.C.R.A. meet here. His record at Bisley and the Canadian Annual Rifle matches has very few equals.

Mund has written from Kansas City saying that he wants to file suit for the money, and asking the costs in Chicago's caloric court. He says he will be in Chicago to begin suit Saturday.

Close of Bethel Hall Mission

Evangelistic Meeting Thus Closing Meeting Last Night and Large Audience Present.

The closing service of the series of special meetings at Bethel Hall took place last night in the presence of a large congregation.

Mr. T. Rich, who spoke first, based his remarks on John iii:16, clearly setting before his hearers the revelation of God in creation, the falling of His power, and the revelation of God in the gift of the Lord Jesus Christ which offered forth His love, and stating that whilst the one filled the soul with love the other claimed and obtained the love and gratitude of His believing people.

Mr. Hill followed, emphasizing the previous speaker's remarks and forcefully dwelling upon the gift of the Lord Jesus Christ as the greatest possible display of God's love to a ruined and lost world; and also emphatically stating that to reject God's gift was the greatest possible evil.

The two evangelists, who, in addition to their mission at Bethel Hall, have given on three occasions given their services to the soldiers under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., left the city at noon today. Mr. Hill for Bancroft, and Mr. Rich for Springbrook, followed by the prayers and good wishes of all who heard their bright yet forceful addresses.

CHAMPION WILLARD COMING TO TORONTO

TORONTO, April 26.—(Special.)—Tom Flanagan has had a wire from Jack Curley, the promoter of the Johnson-Willard fight at Havana, to the effect that Curley will be in Toronto in the course of a few days.

It is also expected that this city will be included in the itinerary now being arranged for the new world's champion. Willard has not been able to appear in boxing exhibitions in New York state theatres there being a law to prevent the same. He will probably appear against his sparring partners here and demonstrate the blows that beat Johnson.

NOTED ENGLISH POET DIES AT DARDANELLES

London, April 26.—(Special)—News has been received here of the death at Lemnos of Rupert Brooke, a young English poet of great genius. Brooke, who was only 27 years old, joined the Royal Naval Division soon after the outbreak of the war, and took part in the defence of Antwerp, only to succumb to sunstroke at the gateway of the Dardanelles.

Young Soldier is Held for Bigamy

Elopes With and Marries Girl of Fifteen Although a Married Man

The Port Hope Guide in its issue of Saturday, had the following item: John Freeman of Belleville, appeared in the County Judges Criminal Court before Judge Ward on a charge of abduction. Freeman, according to the evidence, was a soldier with the 3rd contingent at Port Hope, and eloped from Campbellford with Violet Parcels, of Havelock. Mrs. Parcels, Violet's mother, who has also ten other children, was not aware of her daughter's age, but her father swore that she was fifteen years of age October 8, 1914. Violet said her mother had given her to understand that she was past sixteen years of age. She had met Freeman only the day before they eloped, not having seen him for four or five years previous. As there was no official entry of the girl's age, His Honor adjourned the case until April 26, when a family Bible, with the ages of all the Parcels children is to be produced in court. Crown Attorney Kerr stated that a more serious case of bigamy had been laid against Freeman. He and the Parcels girl were married in Port Hope in March last by Rev. A. H. Going, the marriage certificate being produced in court. Freeman's lawful wife was in the court room and is a fine looking young woman. She had a few months old child in her arms. Freeman, who had the military trousers on, never even looked towards her.

WAR SUPPLIES IN BUFFALO ARMORY

BUFFALO, April 24.—The fact that the basement of the 65th Regiment Armoury here is being used to store armored automobile trucks bearing labels indicating that they are to be shipped to Russia, was brought to the attention of Brigadier-General Welch last night. He declined to say whether or not he would take official cognizance of the situation.

Col. Charles E. P. Babcock, Commander of the regiment, said that a local firm applied ten days ago for storage space for automobile trucks. Their application was granted under a provision of the State Military Law.

Col. Babcock said he did not know the trucks were armored machines nor that they were destined for one of the warring nations of Europe. The fact that they are so marked, he said, would not cause him to cancel the permit.

DUNNING'S HOTEL IN HANDS OF RECEIVER

TORONTO, April 24.—Dunning's Hotel, Limited, King street west, passed into the hands of Mr. George T. Clarkson, assignee, yesterday, and a meeting of the creditors has been called for Tuesday next. The assignment was made by Mr. Charles Dunning, head of the company.

Dunning's was formerly owned by Mr. E. A. McConey, who transferred the business and goodwill of the hotel to Mr. Dunning, following a fracas on New Year's Eve, 1912. The actual transfer was made just one year ago next Monday.

It is understood that the liabilities of the company will be practically all covered by the assets and that the creditors will be paid in full. There will be no interruption in the business, as it will be carried on under the direction of the receiver, with Mr. Dunning still in charge. The general business depression, caused by the war, is said to be the cause of the company's failure. Two other hotels, the Palmer House and the Woodbine Hotel, have passed into the receiver's hands since the first of the year.

ODDFELLOWS AND REBEKAHS ATTEND CHURCH

Anniversary of the Order Fittingly Commemorated—Large Parade to Holloway Street Methodist Church—Appropriate Discourse by Pastor, Rev. A. B. Sanderson

Members of Belleville Lodge No. 81, I.O.O.F., Mizpah Lodge No. 127, Quinteva Rebekah Lodge, No. 133, accompanied by the Canton Picton, Canton Belleville, and members of the Order from other places, yesterday morning attended divine service at Holloway street Methodist church. It was without doubt the largest turnout of Oddfellows ever seen in the city. The occasion was the commemoration of the anniversary of the establishment of the society. Headed by the I.O.O.F. band the members (exclusive of the ladies, who met in a body at the church) marched to the church, and they certainly presented a most creditable appearance. When the service commenced the interior of the sacred edifice was filled to overflowing. The pastor, Rev. Bro. A. B. Sanderson, officiated, and his discourse was in keeping with the occasion. After devotional exercises had been conducted the Rev. gentleman preached. His text was from 1st Samuel, 20th chapter, 42nd verse:

"And Jonathan said to David, go in peace, forasmuch as we have sworn both of us in the name of the Lord saying, the Lord be between me and thee and between my seed and thy seed forever. And he arose and Jonathan went into the city."

The keynote of the discourse was the exemplifying in the truest sense the three principles of the I.O.O.F. Society; namely, friendship, love and truth. In the case of the text we are to understand that David was in great jeopardy because of the wrath of Saul, King of Israel. Jonathan and David had pledged themselves in certain terms, and Jonathan's love for David was exhibited even against the anger of the King. Because of the absence of David at the feast prepared, Saul was angered to such an extent that he thrust a javelin at David to smite him. Jonathan was grieved for David because his father had done him injury, and he arose from the table in anger and did not eat meat on the second day of the month. He then went out and found David where he had been secluded. This was his friendship for David. Jonathan endured his father's anger and spite for David's sake. How often are we placed in similar circumstances in our lives? We sometimes do thing that we do not understand their deep insignificance. This was the last meeting and final parting of two young men who were bound together by the ties of friendship. These are partings in our lives which are hard to bear, because we are bound closely together by a tie. Our boys have left loved ones behind, and at present many of them are in France fighting for their country. They have come out in the battlefield to die or conquer. What friendships all of them left behind! The friendship of Jonathan and David was not fickle, but was deep, true and lasting. They were living one for the other and demonstrated it in their lives, and the parting words of Jonathan to David was "go in peace." In the time of trial and tribulation there is nothing like brotherly sympathy to stir the tender chords of the human heart. There may come a day when we will have to face difficulties and possibly hardships. There is nothing more unstable in this universe than money and want many come. Poverty is a grim reality, and poverty is no song. It is then that true friendship is needed. The friendship of the great masses of men depend on reciprocity. The divine in speaking of the principle of love, referred to the mother's love, and the height of her simplicity of love for her children. She sees in her son one to whom she can look up to when he becomes a man and she can see him ministering to her every want in life. We are bound by a chain, a link of which is love. This is why we have Oddfellow. What a grand society Oddfellowship is. It is numerically strong and has large funds at its disposal for good. It is a society that widows and orphans are thanking God for its existence. It is a society that will look after and alleviate brothers in want, and his wife and children are looked after when he has been laid away. It is a society that does much for the moral elevation of character. As love is the great motive power of the human heart so is love a great power in this society. God be praised for the men and women who are looking for the best in mankind. The church and such a society as Oddfellowship are cutting away and obliterating from life the coarser element. A man is not a good Oddfellow who is simply looking for the benefits he may derive therefrom. We should look for larger things and for great moral principles. Truth was a great principle in this society. It is the third link in the great chain upon which the society is linked together, a chain no human being can break or sever. It is a unity of forces, that are unbreakable. In concluding the address the Rev. Brother said the most serious thought is man's responsibility to God. Study the truth and let the truth make you free. Be Oddfellows, indeed; add to all that is social and moral; add to anything that is elevating. Live to the honor of God and His purpose and when this mortal frame is put away you will have a place eternal in the heavens.

During the service special vocal recitons were rendered by the choir, a quartette composed of Mrs. Sanderson, Mrs. L. Weese, Dr. Dupras and Mr. Pimbett, sang "Calvary", the solo part being taken by Mr. Pimbett. Mrs. Sanderson rendered in a most acceptable manner a solo, and a quartet solo was given by Mr. Max Denmark. The services closed with the National Anthem.

Death of G.T.R. Master Mechanic

Was Well Known in Belleville and Surrounding Railroad Towns

Mr. James F. Markey, master mechanic of the Ontario lines for the G. T.R. with headquarters in Toronto, who for over 23 years had been in the service of that company, passed away at his residence, 218 Roxton road, last night in his 54th year, after a week's illness. The late Mr. Markey was born in Ireland, and was brought when a baby by his parents to New York. Later they moved to St. Mary's, Ontario, where he attended the Public school. Entering the service of the G. T.R. at Stratford he served as locomotive foreman in Stratford, Belleville) and Battle Creek. The deceased had seen service in every division of the G.T.R. Later he was appointed master mechanic at Allandale, and in 1907 came to Toronto as master mechanic of the Ontario lines. The late master mechanic was a Roman Catholic fir Teeiglon, attended St. Francis Church and was a member of the C.M.B.A. His widow, who survives him, was formerly Miss Catherine Dunn of Stratford. On Many A Desk broods the blighting shadow of the tea or coffee pot.
Many men and women with bright prospects find themselves handicapped by the reactionary effects of tea or coffee with its subtle, habit-forming drug, caffeine.
Dull headaches, biliousness, heart-flutter, nervousness, sleeplessness—these are some of the signs of caffeine poisoning that puts a crimp in efficiency, and spells suffering and often failure for thousands of tea or coffee drinkers.
There's a simple, easy way out—quit both tea and coffee, and use the pure food-drink
POSTUM
This delicious beverage, made from prime wheat toasted with a bit of wholesome molasses, contains only the rich cereal nourishment—no caffeine—no harmful substance whatever.
Postum comes in two forms: Postum Cereal—the original form—has to be well boiled, 15c and 25c packages; Instant Postum—soluble—made instantly in a cup with hot water, adding cream and sugar to taste, 30c and 50c tins. Made according to directions, both kinds are equally delicious, and the cost per cup is about the same.

A GENERAL ELECTION—GRITS AFRAID OF IT.

Is there to be an election, and when? is the question that is troubling the minds, particularly, of the Liberal party at the present time. The fact that the Liberal press, from the leading organ down to the humblest echoist, are urging the holding of Conventions, and the selection of party Candidates is evidence that that party believes parliament will ere long be dissolved, is without doubt.

Do they fear the result? That they do is evidenced by their constant denunciations of any attempt by the Government to secure the opinion of the electorate upon the past and future policy of the Government. With one breath a boasting challenge is thrown at the leaders of the ruling party to appeal to the people, and ere the sound of the voice that gave the challenge had died away, its tone was changed into a denunciation of an immediate appeal to the electors as a violation of the truce said to have been entered into between the two parties, not to discuss politics, or party issues during the continuance of the war, following the example set them by political parties in England.

Has this compact, if it ever existed, been adhered to? The editorial columns of the leading Liberal journals since the war began, notably the Globe, give a negative answer.

At the present time the theme of the Liberal Press is grafting by contractors, neglecting to inform their readers that the Government has taken drastic steps by appointing a commission to examine every contract that has been entered into, to ascertain where frauds, if any, have been committed, and who the grafters were, with the declaration that when discovered the criminal law will be invoked. Instead of assisting the Government in its laudable attempts to discover and punish the guilty, their efforts are in the direction of fastening, if possible, some blame, for political purposes, on members of the Government in their administration of the Militia, and in the organization of the Volunteer force now under arms.

So fearful are these Liberals of an election that they are organizing meetings throughout the country to pass resolutions condemning dissolution of parliament, and the holding of an election.

Toronto has fired the first shot, by holding a public meeting, at which women took a leading part, by making speeches, with one exception of a political character.

A Mrs. L. A. Hamilton, (we quote from the Globe report) says the report, made "an earnest and eloquent address, likened the Canadian nation to a ship making a patriotic "voyage to the haven of united war "endeavor, when a pirate craft appeared, hoisted its black flag, and "hastened to the attack. 'It is significant,' said Mrs. Hamilton, 'that "this pirate ship should be manned "by a Jolly Rogers'." It is not necessary to point out the source from which Mrs. L. A. Hamilton gets her political inspiration.

There was one lady present, Miss Constance Boulton, who, true to her historic name, "hit back" with a sturdy declaration that she was a "red-hot Tory." She thought the meeting had been called a few weeks late. Sir Robert Borden was "one of the finest and best and strongest men in the country," and the fair speaker was greatly distressed at the "bickering and backbiting" that was going on. She proposed to give her views from her own impressions "without the assistance of party newspapers."

The Rev. E. C. Cayley was the only one who addressed the meeting and dealt with the subject in a fair and impartial manner. He treated the question from a non-partizan standpoint, asking

"Who would be responsible should the misfortune of a war election come about. The responsibility, he pointed out, did not rest necessarily upon the Government or upon the Premier. The majority in the Commons were "under the thumb" of the majority in the Senate. The Government had been greatly disappointed that it could not carry out its naval policy. The Liberal press —and notably the Globe—had been carrying ill-informed and partisan editorials. He called attention to one in particular, a Globe editorial on the subject, "No War Taxes, but Graft Taxes." Could anyone imagine such stuff in any big London newspaper? he asked emphatically.

"If we have the right to ask Sir Robert Borden to play the game, proceeded Rev. Mr. Cayley, "we have the right to ask the Opposition to play the game. We have a right to send a communication to that effect, that the writers of the Opposition press cease from partisan criticism and the editor of the Globe do not attempt to settle big questions until all the evidence is on the table. Even if there were some boots and shoes and horses which were not what they should be, to say that all the money raised by taxes was for graft is not playing the game."

Rev. Mr. Cayley added further, to make himself clear, that he had "every sympathy for Sir Robert Borden." The Government had to do unexpected and unusual things, and should have the fullest credit for what had been accomplished. "Of course, there were some mistakes," proceeded the clergyman "Of course, some men were dishonest. But the Government accomplished the main thing. . It congregated the troops in six weeks. It is not fair to lay the blame on the Government. It should be dictated that the Opposition also play the game."

Mr. A. E. Ames, a Liberal, followed, and suggested that the responsibility of the Government could not be removed altogether by the charge "that a foolish editorial appeared in the Globe the other morning." "I have not even read it myself," said Mr. Ames, "but the Globe isn't running the country."

Mr. Ames evidently realized the want of political judgment in the policy which the Globe was pursuing, and took the the opportunity to repudiate what he termed its "foolishness." True, "the Globe isn't running the country," but it is "running" the Liberal party, and the Liberal party, Mr. Ames knows well, will follow faithfully the "bellwether" notwithstanding his declaration that its article was "foolish."

BRAVO, CANADIANS!

The news received on Saturday of the gallantry of the first Canadian division at Langemarck sent a thrill of pride throughout the Dominion. We need not be surprised at their exploit, for the boys—for the most part—come from British stock and were trained by British officers; and we looked to them to uphold the traditions of the British army. They have more than fulfilled our expectations. The Patricias before them had already made a name for themselves by more than one brilliant dash, and they received the highest praise from General French. They are now taking a well deserved rest, having been in the thick of the fight for some months. And now we have to record the valiant achievement of the lads of the first contingent. We can well believe that the news created the keenest enthusiasm amongst the wounded Canadians at Shornciffe and Clivedon, and that the evening papers in London were generous in their laudatory announcements. The Canadians have fully justified the encomiums passed upon their smart appearance.

It was not the fault of the Canadians that, in the first place, they lost their four 60-pounders, or 4.7 inch guns, and probably some of their cannon. Owing to the diabolical use of asphyxiating bombs the Germans overwhelmed the French force between Langemarck and Bixschoote and outflanked the first Canadian division, so it had to withdraw to save itself from destruction. It composed the extreme north wing of the entire British line in France and Belgium. The French were holding a few miles of line between them and the Belgians, on the north, and when they retired to the west of the canal, three miles away, they left the Canadians' wing entirely unsupported. Annihilation or retreat were the only alternatives. When they first went to England the only criticism passed upon the Canadians was that they lacked discipline. There is no severer test of discipline for any soldiers than to execute a retiring movement such as that which the Canadians were called upon to perform; and that they came well out of the ordeal is shown by the official praise which has been showered upon them.

We can well understand the galling regret which the Canadian boys felt at leaving their guns in the hands of the Germans. It was more than they could stand; so pulling themselves together, they dashed forward with true British courage, drove back the Germans, recaptured the guns, and took many prisoners. The Germans had come into possession of the guns without a struggle, but the Canadians had to fight to get them back. "Magnificent" is the term applied by the War Office to their performance; and no greater praise could be bestowed upon any body of soldiers. In achieving this glorious result many brave fellows must have laid down their lives. Their relatives will receive the deepest sympathy of the whole Dominion. It will be some consolation to know that those they loved did their duty manfully and that they died in a noble cause. For many a day the Battle of Langemarck will be recalled with feelings of national pride. It will add a bright page to Canadian history.

German socialists are spreading the doctrine of peace. Rather a good doctrine for Germany just now.

BOOTS.

No little capital has been made out of the complaint of bad boots furnished to the Volunteers, and contractors have, through the action of the Government, been not only condemned, where condemnation was deserved, but made to disgorge any ill-gotten profits, shown to have been made.

In reference to the boot supply, while some were found to be defective in quality, the soldiers themselves declare that all were not of the quality they were represented to be. Dealing with this subject Lieutenant D. Douglas Adams, of Toronto, who is attached to a Montreal regiment at the front, has written his family: "We still do route marching and entrenching, and the men are beginning to get hardened up again. We are having a lot of trouble with bad feet caused by the British army boot, which is awfully hard and refuses to break in. I see by the papers that they are raising a fuss about the Canadian boots we got; but, believe me, they have the British footwear beaten a mile both for comfort and for wear."

The Globe should make a note of this.

AS IT SHOULD BE.

In Toronto, on England's National Festival, the 23rd of April, St. George's Day, the Protestants of the City met in St. James' Cathedral and united in an appeal to the Almighty for peace and the success of of the Allies. The News says: "The war for civilization and human freedom has a unifying influence even on the churches. Probably for the first time in history, St. George's Day will be celebrated by a gathering of Anglicans, Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, and other denominations, in St. James' Cathedral, where all will unite in a service according to the Episcopal ritual. Having welded the British Empire into an indestructible solidarity, the Kaiser may yet aid in bringing about church union in Canada."

CALIFORNIA "RAISIN DAY."

This year California "Raisin Day" is to be celebrated in the "Golden State" on April 30th. The slogan on that particular day will be "Last raisins." Not only in California will the day be given prominence, but many of the eastern railroads will feature it by placing on the menus of their dining cars special California raisin dishes. The Grand Trunk will add these dishes to their special menus on all their dining cars, April 30th.

Fascinating advertisements of garden tools are another proof that spring has arrived..

What Goodyear Means

An Unusual Story of a Canadian Industrial

Of Special Interest to Motorists, Truck Owners, Motorcyclists and Manufacturers

How it grew from a small room to a large plant. Four-man pay-roll is increased to 800-man pay-roll in five years. An investment of a few hundred dollars grows to one of millions.

THIS is not a story of self praise. Modesty prevents us from claiming all we could. But we do believe men are interested in success stories such as this. We are but one of the innumerable industries that have struggled up from small beginnings. Today we hold an enviable position in the Canadian manufacturing world.

We won this place through five years of business evolution. We submit to you here the story, not of ourselves, but of Goodyear products.

We think you will agree when you read this, that there is scarcely a business story in Canada more interesting and human.

When four Goodyear employes worked together in a little 50 x 60 loft room at 85 (Dow) Street, East, Toronto, in 1910, little did they realize how quickly that small space would be magnified over 70 times.

They knew business would grow. They had faith in themselves and in their products. They saw the tremendous possibilities in the Canadian rubber demand. They would build here at home an industry to meet that demand.

Today the big factory at Bowmanville, the six-story General Office building in Toronto and the ten Branch Offices throughout Canada have proved their foothold hopes.

The public confidence in Goodyear products has made possible this Goodyear growth from small beginnings. See what this growth has meant. The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company of Canada, Limited, has over two million dollars invested in Canadian property and Canadian factory equipment. For the products that we now are made in our own factory at Bowmanville, Ontario, by Canadian workmen. Our pay-roll for these workmen must be one of the largest in the Dominion.

The Goodyear Factory Bowmanville, Ont.

Head Office, Toronto

Goodyear Club Bowmanville

Goodyear Houses, Carlisle Ave. Bowmanville

The Bowmanville Plant

In the latter part of 1910, we purchased the plant of the Durham Rubber Company at Bowmanville, Ontario. The total floor space was 40,150 square feet. New buildings were erected. New machinery was installed. When 70 men were employed. The capacity was 25 automobile tires per day.

Today the plant is set in a tract of 35 acres, and has a floor space of 110,884 square feet. The pay-roll has reached a maximum of 718 employes. The maximum capacity is 1000 tires per day. The factory is completely equipped with the most modern machinery for the manufacturing of Automobile, Truck, Motorcycle, Bicycle and Carriage Tires, Hose, Belting, Packing, Moulded Goods, etc. Over 500 different kinds of articles can be made.

This Service, Too, Is Yours

But Goodyear obligation does not end when we sell a Goodyear product. It begins.

There are ten branch offices, located in Montreal, St. John, Ottawa, Hamilton, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary, Edmonton, Vancouver and Toronto, with 127 Goodyear employes to assist our dealers in satisfying your needs. For only in this way are you insured of full service.

There are hundreds of Goodyear dealers throughout Canada. No matter where you are, you will find the Goodyear way is a Goodyear dealer. This means quick deliveries, no delays, no inconvenience.

Third Reduction in Automobile Tire Prices

For the third time in two years, the prices of Goodyear Tires has been reduced. These have saved the user in all an average of 37½. And now this third reduction during war times!

This price reduction, effective February 15th, is one of the new war tax, showed the company's determination to keep the factory wheels moving. The capacity of the plant has been doubled.

To so enlarge the plant—to reduce the price—to pay the war tax itself—that is the Goodyear Company's expression of faith, not merely in its product, but in the faith of the people. The response by the public—as already felt—has justified these progressive moves.

Throughout the Dominion the number of satisfied users is rapidly increasing. The sales last year were 29% greater than the year before.

The statements are not offered as boasts, but to justify the reduced prices—to explain why Goodyears still sell at the war tax—to show how the user will benefit by getting greater tire value than ever before. Goodyears stand top high in quality. This has been the verdict of Canadian users, attested by Goodyear sales records.

Goodyear Fortified Tires combat in five exclusive ways the chief troubles that cause tire trouble. Goodyears hold top place because they give lowest cost per mile.

Fortified Tires

In five costly ways—ways that no other maker has—Goodyears are fortified against all major tire troubles. That's why they average best.

Here are the five reasons why every Canadian motorist should have Goodyear Fortified Tires. These features can be found in Goodyears alone.

1. In-No-Rim-Cut features combats rim-cutting in best way known.

2. Countless blowouts are avoided by our "On-Air" cure.

3. Loose Treads are combated by the way in each tire hundreds of large rubber rivets.

4. Security against blowing off the rim and tube pinching, gained by vulcanizing six flat bands of 126 braided piano wires into each tire base.

5. The All-Weather tread combats puncture by being tough and thick. It resists skidding as no other tire does by its sharp-edged, buffing ribs.

These are the reasons why Goodyear Fortified Tires excel all other makes. Every tire trouble brings you nearer to Goodyears. They have averaged best in every Province.

Right Inner Tubes

Goodyear Laminated Tubes are built layer on layer. This prevents leaky tubes due to porous rubber. Records show that tubes built in the Goodyear way outlast any tire. Four tubes outlast four casings.

This year Goodyear Inner Tubes are better than ever before. Small sizes have been thickened 12½%. Large sizes 16⅔%. Yet they are built of pure rubber, as always. Tubes that weigh more than Goodyears gain nothing in durability. Size for size, heavier tubes owe their weight to excess mineral matter, causing hardening and cracking.

This means that today's tubes average 14 per cent better—yet the price is one-fifth less.

Economy for Truck Owners

For many years Goodyear engineers have been developing truck tires. Thousands of dollars have been spent in tests and investigations.

In all, twenty-nine distinct types of Truck Tires have been designed. In the evolution of one alone seventy-four separate tire structures were built.

It will take some makers years to do what Goodyear experts have done in truck tire development; 1915 Goodyear truck tires lie spire a confidence that others cannot give.

Goodyear Motorcycle Tires Give Extra Mileage

Men thought no better motorcycle tires than Goodyears could be made. They soon acted held top place. Yet the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company have made this year six further improvements without increasing the price. The quality of Goodyear Motorcycle Tires must be greater this year than ever before. For these new features come in spite of lowered cost to you.

"Blue Streak" Bicycle Tires Built for Rough Going

Goodyear "Blue Streak" Bicycle Tires are made in the same factory, by the same experts who make the Fortified Automobile Tires. They also are made to meet the high standard of workmanship goes into every bicycle tire we make.

"Blue Streaks" have proved in actual road tests the utmost in bicycle tire dependability.

Bicycle tire troubles are minimized if you ride on Goodyear "Blue Streaks."

Goodyear Mechanical Goods

The Goodyear plant at Bowmanville does not make tires alone. We manufacture Mechanical Rubber Goods for factories, mills and power houses.

Belts of every kind, transmission and conveyor, are made for each particular Canadian industry—saw mills, brick yards, elevators, paper mills, power plants, mines—all the foremost industries.

We make specific belts for specific machines—it's the only way to buy belting. Then you know you are getting the belt that will deliver the most all the time. Buying belting this way decreases shut-down losses, lost time, lost labor, lost profit.

Hose—from the common garden variety to fire hose—is made by the mile.

When you use rubber goods, note the name Goodyear made-in-Canada products are sort of every-day life, filling an urgent need and giving pleasure thereto, turning the greatest wheels of commerce, or protecting lives and property.

Hardly a day passes in which every man, woman and child, wherever located, feels Goodyear influence in some way or other.

Try Goodyear

This is our story of Goodyear. It was not written directly to sell you tires. It was written, that they must sell themselves. What we want is just a hearing. We have told you of our growth in the past. Let us tell you in the first factory, and its growth at Bowmanville. We have told you something of Goodyear products and their record.

We want you to buy tires and mechanical goods from The Goodyear Tire & Rubber Company of Canada, Limited—not alone because they are made in Canada—but because our efforts alone have been commendable.

We will not ask you to buy Goodyear products because of their inbuilt superiority. Because you get greatest service, dollar for dollar that you spend.

Toronto Boy Escaped From Wreck of Falaba

King Said Germans Were Justified in Sinking the Vessel

10 MINUTES TO GET OUT

Falaba Tried to Run, But Was Easily Overhauled by the Speedy Submarine

A thrilling account of his escape from the wreck of the Falaba is given by Lieut. C. Lacon, in a letter to his mother, Mrs. F. D. Lacon of 22 Brookwood Ave., Toronto. Lt. Lacon was born in Toronto, but had lived in England since four years of age, until recently. When war broke out he was on his farm in British Columbia. He journeyed to England at his own expense and joined the Warwicks, with which regiment he held a commission. He exchanged his commission in the Warwicks to the West Nigerian troop, and was on his way to West Africa:

Submarine Went 18 Knots

"We left Liverpool on the S. S. Falaba at 6 o'clock on Saturday evening and had a sufficiently voyage till Sunday about 12.20 a.m., when we sighted a submarine about a mile away on our starboard quarter. We at once headed away from it, and the submarine sent up a rocket and hoisted flags, to which we paid no attention. However, we were doing only 15 to 15 knots, and the submarine about 18 knots, so in about 15 minutes she overhauled us and we bore to. The German skipper shouted through a megaphone that he would give us ten minutes to get into the boats and would then torpedo the boat. Then we all went on the boat deck and started to lower the boats. I had got my money and was taking photographs meanwhile of the submarine and the people getting into the boats.

Several of the boats were upset getting them into the water, as the boats were rotten, and the crew did not seem to know how to lower them. I took two or three photographs of the boats upset in the water, and then there was only one left on the port side. She was crammed with people, about 50, so I did not think I would get into it, as there was only one officer and one sailor lowering it, gave them a hand. Then the rope slipped and the sailor hurt his hand so I took his place and Emerton, an officer in the ship, and wicks came up and helped me, and we lowered it safely into the water, and they went off. Then we went and talked to the skipper and one of the officers on the bridge, while they blew the wireless four times for a steam trawler which was about a mile away until we saw she was steaming our way.

Saw Torpedo Coming

Then we went along the boat deck towards the stern to have a look at the submarine, which, in the meantime had come around our stern,passing one of the upturned boats, which had about 20 people clinging to it, and stopped about 250 yards away on our starboard quarter. We were looking at it when suddenly I noticed the wake of a torpedo, so I shouted to Emerton, and we ran forward towards the bridge in case of fragments, etc., from the explosion. There was a muffled boom, and I looked round and, saw a tremendous column of black smoke and water and bits of wood which went about 100 ft. in the air, but luckily none of the fragments came near us. One of the officers was pointing at the water, so I went and looked and saw one or two bodies floating in the water, apparently killed by the torpedo.

"The ship was heeling over tremendously then to starboard and I thought it time we had better get into the sea and try to swim to the trawler, which was about half a mile away then. So we went to the box on the deck and got a couple of life belts and put them on, one of the officers, the second mate, and I, helping me with mine. Then Emerton said said goodbye to me and swarmed down one of the davits on the port side, while I picked up a life buoy and went down to the lower deck. There I met a man who had no life belt, and gave him my life buoy, as I had a life belt as well; then I went down the davit ropes into the water slowly, as it was inferrally cold and took my breath away. I had a mackintosh on, hat, muffler and my shoes, as I never thought the submarine would come off; frightened I suppose. I started to swim for the trawler, which looked about half a mile away on our starboard.

Seas were Heavy

"I got into the water on the port side and never thought I was going to get past the bow, as I suppose my clothes prevented my progress from being very fast. However, I passed the bow eventually and headed for the trawler. Once past the bow the seas were pretty big and they looked monstrous to me swimming.

"I swallowed a good deal of water, but managed to keep on swimming, for about 20 minutes, I suppose, or longer. I turned round two or three times to have a look at her, and the last I saw of her was her bow just disappearing. There was no suction, at all, at least I did not feel any. By this time I was getting pretty tired and thought the trawler still seemed a long way off, and I thought my last minutes had come. However, life seemed very pleasant, so I made a gallant effort and seemed to get a second wind, and went on swimming.

"The next time I saw a big plank with a man hanging on to one end of it, so I made for it, and got hold of the other end. We started on a desultory conversation about the coldness of the water, etc., and then saw the captain fairly near, hanging on to a life buoy. We hailed him and told him to hang on to the plank, but either he did not hear or was unconscious, as he paid no attention to us and drifted away, and at that moment I did not feel inclined to do any heroic life saving.

Got Very Sleepy

"After that I don't remember very much, as I seemed to be getting very sleepy, and could not keep my eyes open, though I rubbed them hard, and kept kicking about in the water to keep warm. I remember a big wave coming along and washing me from the man over two or three times, but we both hung on like limpets. Then the next thing I remember was a boat close alongside of me, and they lifted me out and took off my mackintosh and helped me to get me by the ley fire, where I sat for a long time, miserably cold and too weak and sick to move. I don't know if my companion on the plank was saved or not, as the last I remember of him he seemed pretty far gone, and he was not on the plank when the trawler picked me up. After a long time I crawled down to the cabin and managed to get a suit of dry trousers and sea boots, but had to keep on my wet shirt, etc., as the supply of dry clothes was exhausted. I was feeling very sick from the sea water I had swallowed and miserably cold. People were being sick all round me, other moaning and groaning, and one or two dying, altogether five died on the trawler. The Liffey stopped us, and we transhipped to her. They were awfully good to us, and gave us rum and tea and cocoa, etc. I got into a hammock in the stokers' quarters, and lay there till we arrived at Milford Haven.

"Mr. Hansell, a friend, telephoned me that he was coming up on the next morning at Buckingham Palace and hear all about it, so next day I sauntered into the palace, and told him all about the Falaba. Then he went out and returned with Princess Mary and her companion, and I had to tell her all about it, and I could see by her sympathy, and show her my watch, etc. She was very interested, and asked all sorts of questions about the submarine, and whether the Germans were laughing election, not for the sake of the Duand feeling at the drowning people.

"She stayed for about 20 minutes when a message came that the King and Queen wanted to see me, so in fear and trembling I was ushered in by gorgeous lackeys, luckily with Mr. Hansell to support me, to the Royal presence.

"They both shook me by the hand, and congratulated me on my escape, and then the King started to ask questions about the submarine, by so many had been drowned, and why the Germans had not given us more time to get into the boats. He said they were quite justified in sinking the Falaba, as she was carrying soldiers and ammunition, but could not understand why they did not give time for us all to leave the ship. I complained about the navy not providing us with an escort, and he said they were very hard worked, and could not spare the boats, etc.

"We talked for about 20 minutes, the Queen now and again putting in a question, and then he dismissed me."

CURRENT COMMENT

The Allies are determined it shall be a drag on the wheels of progress no longer.

St. George is now hotly engaged in vanquishing the dragon of Prussian militarism.

The Kaiser has waited 25 years to crush his enemies. The Allies will crush him in twelve months.

Liberals are decrying a premature peace. To act an example to the men without taking their safety. An officer is worth far more alive than dead.

Hamilton Herald: "J. D. Flavelle, chairman of the new provincial license commission, is a middle-of-the-road man with regard to the temperance question. 'I am a temperance advocate,' he says, 'but not a temperance crank. I will not try to please either the temperance interests or the liquor interests.' Which goes to indicate that the chairman is a broad-minded man who understands the nature of his new duties."

Toronto Telegram: "The Markham Economist, founded in 1856, has absorbed the Markham Sun, founded in 1877. One weekly journal will now flourish where two lived before. Markham village owes much to weeklies that have appeared for eighty-eight and fifty-nine years, respectively. The community weekly and the small town daily can establish the dignity and value of local life. The village, town and smaller cities of Ontario have not rewarded the work of their own newspapers. One would be inclined to encourage the editors of local weeklies and dailies to fill a place that can never be filled by city newspapers."

CHILD OF EIGHT WEAK AND AILING

Little Collins' Girl Also Had Stubborn Chronic Cough—Father Tells How She Was Restored to Health by Vinol.

Lakeport, N.H.—"Our little girl, 8 years of age, was in a debilitated, run-down condition, and had a stubborn, chronic cough. While she did not have the care of school, on account of her condition, she was weak and ailing all the time and far from well.

"We treated her cough, but nothing seemed to help her until we tried Vinol. After which we noticed an immediate improvement. Her appetite increased and now she is strong and well and we can recommend Vinol to other parents who have delicate, ailing children."—Geo. A. Collins, Lakeport, N. H.

What Vinol did for this little girl it will do for weak and ailing children, because they need the tissue-building, strengthening cod liver elements and the tonic iron that Vinol contains. It is delicious to the taste.

That's why Vinol builds them up so quickly, and we ask parents of delicate children in this vicinity to try Vinol with the understanding that we will return their money if it fails to give satisfactory results.

And there was Mr. Hersputh fishing from the bridge. He raised me gladly to look at him. The rock overhung the water so much that he could ten shilli upright; the first person who got there must surely have learned to cut himself up from much kneeling in Norwegian beds, which were short for me. I thought of this oddly enough as I watched him, and laughed, and was for going on. But when I had walked a few yards, nothing to see round the rear of the cliff, I began to fancy all sort of foolish things would happen. I felt sure I should have no more peace or pleasure if I left him there. I hesitated. Then, "Well," I would go down and ask him to leave the place; and of course, he would do it.

I lost no time, but ran down the slope smartly and carelessly. My way led over loose shale mingled with large stones, and it was steep. It was wonderful how quickly an accident happens; how swiftly a thing that can not be undone is done, and we cry, left wishing—oh, so vainly—that we could put the world, and all things in it, back by a few seconds. I was checking myself near the bottom, when a by stone on which I stepped moved under. The shale began to slip in a mass, and the stone to roll. It was all done in a moment. I stayed myself, that was easy enough, but the stone took two bounds, jumped sideways, struck the piece of board, which was only resting lightly at either end, and before I could take it all in the little bridge plunged end first into the current, which swept it out of sight in an instant.

He threw up his hands in affright, for he had turned, and we both saw it happen. He made indeed as if he would try to save it, but that was impossible, and while I covered in dismay, he waved his arm to me in the direction of home—again and again. The roar of the flood drowned what he said, but I guessed his meaning. I could not help him myself, but I could fetch help. It was three miles to Bratstone—through rocky ones.—and I doubted whether he could keep the cramped position with that noise deafening him, and the endless whirling stream before his eyes, while I was going and coming. But there was no better way I could think of; and even as I wavered, he signaled to me again impatiently. For an instant everything seemed to go round with me, but it was not the time for that yet, and I tried to collect myself and harden my heart. Up the bank I went stumbling and once at the top set off at a run homeward.

I cannot tell at all how I did it; how I passed over the uneven ground, or whether I went quickly or slowly save by the reckoning papa made afterward. I can only remember one long hurrying scramble; now I plantied uphill, now I ran down, now I was on my knees in a hole, breathless and half-stunned, and then I was up to my knees in water. I slipped and dropped down places. I should at other times have shrunk from, and hurt myself so that I bore the marks for months. But I thought nothing of those things; all my being was bent on hurrying on for his life, the clamor of every cataract I passed seeming to stop my heart's beating with very fear. So I reached Bratstone, and panted over the bridge and up to the little white house lying so quiet in the afternoon sunshine, passed a stool-car even then at the door ready to take him to some favorite pool. Somehow I made him understand in broken words that Hersputh was in no danger, drowning already, for all I knew, and then I seized a great pole which was leaning against the porch, and climbed into the car. Papa was not slow, either; he snatched a coil of rope from the luggage, and away we went, a man and boy whom he had hastily called running behind us. We had lost very little time, but so much may happen in so little time.

We were forced to leave the car a quarter of a mile from that part of the river, and walk or run the rest of the way. We all ran, even papa, as I had never known him run before. My heart sank at the groan he let escape when he found the bridge gone, but I came to it one by one. The lodge was empty. Jem Hersputh was gone. I whipped the pole from me, in my side I could only look at the water in a dazed way and cry quietly, without much thought that it was a good thing while the men, shouting to one another in strange, disjointed voices, reached down for any sign of his fate. "Jem Jem Hersputh!" So he had written his name only yesterday in the travelers' book at the pottingshouse, and I had silently watched him from the window, and then had sneaked to the book and read it. That was yesterday, now I called to Jem, to hear no say "Bah!" once more.

"Hah! Why, Miss Bah, what is the matter?"

Safe and sound! Yes, there he was when I returned, safe and strong and cool, and he fixed a quiet gaze on my eyes. Just as I had seen him yesterday and thought never to see him again; and saying "Just exactly as I told," so that something in my throat—it may have been anger at his rudeness, but I do not think it was—prevented me saying a word until all the others came around me, and a babel of Norse and English and something that was neither, yet both, set in.

"But how is this?" objected my father, when he could be heard, "you! We calle dry, my boy?"

"Dry! Why not, sir? For goodness' sake, what is the matter?"

"The matter! Didn't you fall in, or something of that kind?" papa said, bewildered by this new aspect of the case.

"It does not look like it, does it? Your daughter gave me a very uncomfortable start by nearly doing so."

Everyone looked at him for an explanation. "How did you manage to get from the ledger?" I said feebly. Where was the mistake? I had not dreamed it.

"From the ledge? Why, by the other end, to be sure, so that I had to walk back round the hill. Still, I did not mind, for I was thankful that it was the plank and not you that fell in."

"I—I thought—you could not get from the ledge," I muttered. The possibility of getting off at the other end had never occurred to me, and so I had made such a simpleton of myself. It was too absurd, too ridiculous. It was no wonder that they all stared me with laughter at the fool's errand they had come upon, and stamped about and clung to one another. But when they laughed too—and he did still the tears came into his eyes—there was not an uncle or pain in my body—and I had not yet come to the bone against an splinter of rock—that hurt me one-half as much. Surely he might have seen another side to it. But he did not, and so I managed to hide my bandaged wrist from him, and papa drove me home. There I broke down entirely, and Clare pitied me to bed and petted me, and was very kood to me. And when I came down next day, with an ache in every part of me, he was gone.

"He asked me to tell you," said Clare, not looking up from the fly she was tying at the window, "that he thought you were the bravest girl he had ever met."

So he understood me, when others had explained it to him. "No Clare," I said coldly; "he did not say that exactly. He said, 'the bravest little fool.' For, indeed, lying quietly with the window open, I had heard him set off on his long drive to Learbatheen. As for papa, he was half-proud and half-ashamed of my foolishness, and wholly at a loss to think how I could have made the mistake.

"You've grown some common sense, my dear," he said that day at dinner, "and how in the world you could have been so ready to jump in the man in danger, I—can—not—imagine!"

"Papa" put in Clare suddenly, "your elbow is up setting the pace."

And as I had to move my seat just then to avoid the glare of the stove, which was falling on my face, we never thought it out.

CHAPTER II.
His Story.

I was not dining out much at that time, partly because my acquaintance in the west Highlands was not large, too because I cared little for it. But there were pleasant people, the old gentleman witty and amusing, the children lively girls, ever to look at and good to talk with. The party had too a holiday flavor about them wholesome to recall the Law Courts Yard; and as I thought, playtime over, I should see no more of them. I was proportionately pleased to find that Mr. Guest had not forgotten me, and pleased also—shrewdly expecting that we might kill our fish over again to expand his invitation to dinner—at a quarter to eight as a royal command.

But if I took it so, I was sadly wanting in the regal courtesy to match. What with one delay owing to work that would admit of none, and another caused by a calmness strange to the ways of town, it was twenty-five minutes after the hour when I reached Bolton Gardens. A stately man, so like the Queen's Counsel that it was plain upon whom the latter modeled himself, announced me straight into the illimitable room, where Guest greeted me very kindly, and met my excuses by apologies on his part—for politeness, I suppose, the comfort of eleven people to notice. Then he took me over the table, and said, "My daughter," and Miss Guest shook hands with me and pointed to the chair at her left. I had still, as I unfolded my napkin, to say "Clear, if you please,' and then I was free to turn and apologize to her; being a little girl of ten, and, as I have said, a somewhat infrequent diner out.

Bravery of "These Men of England"

Canadian Officer Writes of the Bravery and Sangfroid of British Tommies

The following letter has been received by Miss D. Grover, Chosley, Ont., from her father, Capt. L. H. Grover, of the 1st Battalion. He tells of the Canadians' first experiences under fire and how the Germans got the range of the trench and dropped about 100 shells in a circle about 50 yards just back of their position. Little damage was done:

"That night we went out. On the way I heard a peculiar 'zing' very close and asked the British sergeant-major beside me, what it was. He said, 'Oh nothing,' and started to whistle a tune softly. Imagine my surprise when we were got back to city and the sergeant-major showed me where the bullet had cut across the back of his raincoat, caused a slight flesh wound. The bravery and sangfroid of these men of England is astonishing.

"Our little battalion cemetery is slowly but surely becoming dotted with little crosses. The first officer of our battalion to was Lieut. "Billy" Gallaugher, of Chatham. He was shot through the top of the head and never know what happened him."

THE POPE AND A RESTORED BELGIUM

ROME, April 21.—The Messagero is responsible for the statement that the Pope, after having examined the documents presented to him by Monsignor Dubuquoy, rector of the University of Louvain, and Belgian Deputy Mabil, was convinced that the German action in Belgium was deplorable. According to the Messagero, Benedict XV. formally pledged himself no matter what the result of the war, to use his influence that Belgium be restored, and has authorized Monsignor Dubuquoy to acquaint Cardinal Mercier with his determination. Naturally the Pope will not make his position public until an opportune moment, although from now on it will be his policy to conform to this aim. This is a complete change in the view of the Holy See, which up to the present has been neutral. This, Benedict, besides helping Belgium, will save the support of the Allies, for he desires to be considered at the conference when terms of peace are decided.

PRISONERS STARVING

LONDON, April 24.—Mrs. Ricciotti has received a letter from her husband Private D. Fitzgerald, of the First Battalion of the Welsh Fusiliers, who is a prisoner at Gottingen. The latest of the letter is the same. One runs:

"I should like you to send me something to strengthen me. I should not like any of you to see me now. You can send some cigarettes, but food first."

Mrs. Dunchy of North Mill Road, Swansea, has also received letters from her husband, who is interned in the same camp as Fitzgerald. He writes:

"I am afraid I won't exist if this war lasts much longer. Am like a rake already. Oh, do send something out to me if you only know how I am feeling at the time of writing this letter. Send me out some bread, bacon and cheese. Don't deny this one request."

TRAINED TURTLE TO CLIP THEIR CIGARS

MADISON, Wis., April 24.—The University of Wisconsin has installed, via the student route, a new fangled cigar clipper. "It's alive," is the slogan over the cigar clipper, which is enclosed in a cage this clipper being a lively specimen of the common snapping turtle. Some students happened to point a cigar at the turtle and with a snap the end of the cigar was gone. Now this has become a pet, student diversion, and by careful training the turtle has learned just how much to take off the end of a cigar.

Aged Gen. Garibaldi Would Raise Thirty Thousand Volunteers

GEN. RICCIOTTI GARIBALDI recently spent the better part of a day visiting and entertaining old friends in London.

He observed haughtily that often he is obliged to ask his father, "Are you your son, your father, or your grandfather?" so many changes have taken place since he was last in England.

During the morning he had a chat with the Lord Mayor at the Mansion House about his plans for raising a Garibaldian Legion of at least 30,000 volunteers in England when Mr. Poggi called and introduced himself as son of the general's old precepter, Dr. Poggi, of the New Brighton College. It was in the offices that the son of the Italian Liberator was sent to school in Cheshire.

"Your mother I remember well," said the general to Mr. Poggi. "She mothered the whole British race at regular intervals stood us in long row to give us physic." I'm sure I ought to forget the physic."

"And we repaid her by robbing her. We carefully made a hole in the collings of the mater and then with a long rod and a book fished up all her cakes and pies and other good things within reach. We enjoyed ourselves so much that it was well worth the punishment we got afterwards."

Lacca to Be Used.

Nets, first of all, in the all over laces will be in great demand for dresses and accessories for the summer and spring and summer frocks. The nets of great bowing prominence are the filets. Those samples already received from foreign markets are supplemented by those of domestic manufacture, which compare very favorably with the foreign product. For instance, to those which duplicate the vests of Brussels nets the imitation is perfect. In those where geometrical lines are desirable factors even these are accomplished.

Combinations of chantilly and filet are to be featured. These will be especially desired in white, ecru and in black. Black appliqus laces will be in vogue.

Denies Attack On Wilson Policy

Solicitor-General Says He Did Not Make Single Statement Credited to Him

OTTAWA, April 24.—Hon. Arthur Meighen, solicitor-general, yesterday denied the alleged attack on President Wilson's policy of neutrality which, according to a Canadian press despatch, he was said to have made at a dinner in the Laurentian Club in Ottawa. Mr. Meighen said yesterday that in the first place the gathering had been a private one, and, in the second, he had never made a single one of the statements credited to him. He had simply quoted some statements credited to President Wilson by an editorial in an Ottawa paper and had declared that the editorial expressed his sentiments in regard to them. The Solicitor-General's alleged strictures on President Wilson have been spread throughout the United States press as a public statement, a fact which Mr. Meighen regards with great regret.

It must be nice to be the sister of a deputy speaker when war contracts are being passed out.

WESTERN LABOR'S MOVE

WINNIPEG, April 24.—The unemployed demonstrations have led to action being taken in a proposal to send British born artisans from Canada to England, such labor is sorely needed, according to a statement made today by a prominent labor man. He stated that a deputation waited on Immigration Commissioner J. Bruce Walker yesterday, put the proposition up to him and received a promise that he would lay the matter before the Minister of the Interior at Ottawa.

The proposal is to assemble all of the British and Canadian iron workers, brass workers, machinists and all sorts of mechanics and send them back to England to work in the ammunition and armament factories. The deputation yesterday asked the Minister of the Interior to arrange with railway and steamship agents for transportation. They also want the Government's alleged strictures on President Wilson have been spread throughout to take care of the wives and families of the married men.

Italy seems practically to have decided upon war. Come on in Italy, the going's fine.

OBSEQUIES LARGELY ATTENDED

On Saturday afternoon the funeral of the late Mrs. Charles Grass of this city, took place, and many relatives and friends were present to pay the last tribute of respect to one who in life was much respected and in death revered. BELLEVILLE SOLDIER IS MADE SERGEANT

Sergt. A. E. Hardy, of the Canadian Field Artillery, writes from Shornecliffe, England, to his parents at Belleville. He speaks of having been made a sergeant and of having witnessed a steamer torpedoed by the Germans. "Well, to begin with," he says, "I am well—never felt better. Shornecliffe is eight miles above Dover, and on a clear day you can see the coast of France. You can see by the address above that I have been made a sergeant. If you get the letter I sent you ten days from date above, it will tell you all about it.

"We are known as the 'Instructional' Staff of the Second Contingent Artillery,' which is now at Shornecliffe. That, however, is only for a short time, or until they can spare instructors from Woolwich, and then, the whole brigade will cross. Well I hope when you get this letter it will find you all well and happy, and that dad will be over his sickness. I have been up to London and seen all the sights, and will have something to tell you about in a year's time. The job which Tett, Black, Best and I hold is an easy one; first parade at 9 a.m., also one at 3 p.m., then through for the day. I was standing on the cliffs the other day with a gun crew of the 2nd Contingent Artillery, and we saw a large steamer torpedoed and go down. It sank in about ten minutes, about ten miles from shore; four sank lately right off the barracks."

AN EXCITING CHASE AFTER A DESERTER

On Saturday Chief Ruse received a message from Belleville to keep a lookout for Val Taylor, who had deserted from the 39th battalion there. Taylor, who enlisted here, broke into the storeroom where the civilian suits were stored, discarded his military uniform and got his civilian clothes. He came on to Cobourg and on Saturday evening was seen talking to a soldier at King and Division streets by Chief Ruse and Acting Constable Crosgrey. Taylor took to his heels as soon as he saw the police, and ran up Division street. Cosgrey managed to catch him and in the scuffle got hold of Taylor's raincoat, which Cosgrey hung on to, and Taylor managed to make a getaway.—Cobourg Star.

STRUCK DOWN BY LIGHTNING'S BOLT

Wm. Hammett, of Toronto, Killed While Walking on Broadview Ave. in Thunderstorm

TORONTO, April 26.—(Special.)—While walking down Broadview avenue, near Bayview avenue, North Toronto, about 8.30 last night, William Hammett, 324 Mount Pleasant road, was struck by lightning and killed. Dr. W. L. Bond, in response to a call for medical assistance and Police Constable Macintosh reached the man a quarter of an hour later and worked over him in an attempt at resuscitation for a half an hour without avail. Dr. Bond, who is Coroner for North Toronto, decided that an inquest was unnecessary.

Dr. Hammett was going to a fire with a friend, Mr. David Russell, 256 Broadway avenue, at the time he was struck. The latter was stunned, but not injured seriously.

The dead man was born in Lancashire, England, and came to Canada about six years ago. He was about 27 years old and married. His widow and a small child, three years old, survive.

BASKETBALL AT Y.M.C.A.

Two very exciting games of basketball were decided in the City League, at the Y.M.C.A. Saturday night. In the first game, Bankers defeated Belleville Hardware by the score of 20-11. The score at half time being 14 all will indicate how evenly these two teams were matched. Springer Lock Co. sprung quite a surprise when they put Bridge Street Ever-Heady s out of the running, and claimed for themselves the right to battle for the championship with the money changers. Nurse, on the Springer team, made a world of difference, and to him much of the spoils of battle belong. The final score was 32-18.

The Bankers and Springers will play the final game next Saturday night.

WOULD MOVE VATICAN TO CONSTANTINOPLE

"It is proposed," says the special correspondent of The Sentinel in London, England, "to move the seat of the Papacy from Rome to Constantinople, giving the Pope the territory which includes the Dardanelles and the present Turkish capital.

"It is argued that this is the only way the neutrality of the Dardanelles can be secured. The traditional policy of Britain is opposed to Russia getting Constantinople. But if a new state could be created—a Papal State—having its independence guaranteed by all the great powers, two serious problems might be settled by one stroke. Italy would be relieved of a source of irritation and friction that seems impossible to remove as long as the Pope remains at the Vatican, and Britain would, be assured of the neutrality of that portion of Europe for which her diplomats and armies have been fighting for a century.

"As Constantinople was the ancient seat of Christianity, there would be nothing derogatory to the dignity of the See of Peter in accepting it as the capital of the Papal State. It would also fit in with the claims of the Pope, now being pushed so vigorously, to the exclusive right to use the word 'Catholic' in connection with the Church of Rome.

"If such a plan could be worked out it would be heralded as a great victory for the Papacy.

"The financial terms would of course be made generous for His Holiness. The assumption of his temporal sovereignty would be carried out with unparalleled pomp, and the whole world would be called to witness the restoration of the Pope to his medieval power and prerogatives.

"It is a fascinating and ambitious project for Roman Catholics. Whether it can be accomplished remains to be determined in the near future.

WHERE IT WILL END.

The following story is told by a "Wayfarer" in the "Nation":—

A member of the House of Commons lately returned from the trenches, and asked the usual question of when the war would end, replied that he did not know, but that he could tell where it would end.

"Where?" was the inexpert reply "Two hundred and fifty yards from where we are now."

A NOTED ECONOMIST.

Prof. Adam Shortt Has Had a Notable Career as an Economist.

Prof. Adam Shortt, of the Civil Service Commission at Ottawa, who has been in the public eye considerably of late, is sometimes described as "Canada's leading political economist."

Prof. Shortt was born in an old Ontario mill village called Kilworth, on the bank of the Thames, near London. His father was a miller. Later the village disappeared altogether, though another hamlet which sprang up some miles distant bears the same Kilworth Bridge. As a boy the coming political economist was a hard worker. He was a good student at the High School at Wallaceburg, and he "put himself through" Queen's, as most university students did in those days, by teaching school. After graduation at Queen's he went, in 1884, to Scotland and took postgraduate work at Glasgow and Edinburgh Universities, repeating his record at Queen's by becoming in each institution a medalist in philosophy. His long vacations he spent tramping through Great Britain and continental Europe picking up first-hand knowledge of Old World social and industrial conditions. His interest steadily co-centered on political economy, and, returning to Canada, he was, in 1889, appointed lecturer in political science at Queen's, and three years later he became professor in the same subject, the chair eventually being endowed by the late Senator Gowan and other admirers of Sir John A. Macdonald, whose name the chair bears.

Meantime, in 1886, Prof. Shortt married Elisabeth Smith, M.D., who has since become well known for her services in directing the interests of Canadian women into helpful channels.

Prof. Shortt is a well-known writer on economic and historical subjects. Some years ago he contributed to the pages of the Canadian Bankers' Association a series of articles on the development of the Canadian banking and currency systems which represented a tremendous amount of research and which were much discussed. Perhaps his best-known contribution to current problems is his "Imperial Preferential-Trade From a Canadian Point of," a study of the political and industrial situation. It received much freedom of trade, coupled with recognition of the fact that wide variations of industrial and social conditions make it impossible to maintain that any one fiscal system is beneficial for all times and places, and also his faith in the efficacy of tariffs as the only endduring basis of imperial co-operation and unity.

In his Life of Lord Sydenham in "The Makers of Canada" series, Prof. Shortt describes the course of events in the momentous days of the establishment of responsible government in Canada. In collaboration with Dr. Doughty, the Dominion archivist, he edited a collection of constitutional documents on the period from 1763 to 1791, many of which are made accessible for the first time. A second volume deals with the period from 1791 to 1841. These works led to the selection of Prof. Shortt and Dr. Doughty as joint editors of a new official history of Canada.

When the first Labor Commission was formed under the Laurier Administration Prof. Shortt was appointed one of the commissioners, his colleagues being Mackenzie King, Mr. Justice Robidoux, Mr. Nesbitt and J. C. O'Donoghue, K.C., to apply the act in the dispute in April, 1907, between the Grand Trunk Railway and its machinists.

In 1908 Prof. Shortt was appointed one of the Civil Service Commissioners under the new act, the idea being to take a step forward in the direction of the abolition of the patronage system, to "take the civil service out of politics."

Residing to Canadian.

Beside the bed of a Canadian soldier who had met with an accident on Salisbury Plain was sitting a distinguished-looking man of about 70. He was reading aloud a penny dreadful of the "Deadwood Dick" type, much to the enjoyment of the young Canadian, who looked little more than 18, and the old gentleman seemed to enjoy it as much as the soldier. He has had a distinguished career as an official, and is now retired on a large pension with nothing to do. His only son is at the front, and he told me that he simply could not sit at home and do nothing.

"I've worried for a long time," he said, "thinking what an old fellow like me could do in a war like this, and at last I hit on this. I believe that I help these poor fellows to get well, and, at any rate, I know I make the time pass more quickly for them, and for myself, I never was happier in my life."

This old gentleman attends regularly at the hospital every day, arriving about 10 a.m., and leaving at 6 p.m. He has placed himself at the services of the nurses for anything that they require, and is ready to run errands, read or cheer up a dying man at a moment's notice. He declares, by the way, that he has never had a more varied course of reading in his life.

A MAN'S WORK.

To get good is animal, to do good is human, to be good is divine. The true use of a man's possessions is to help his work, and the best end of all his work is to show us what he is. The noblest work of one world bequeath is nothing so great as the image of themselves.—James Martineau.

SILK FRUITS FOR TRIMMING.

Make Them at Home and Cut Down the Cost.

Silk fruit in pale colors, silk fruit in intense colors or, for that matter, silk fruit in any color will continue to be a most popular trimming this spring. Purchased at a shop, the prices are prohibitive for many girls' hats, made at home, the cost is proportionately nothing.

Circles of silk or kid, firmly packed with cotton and drawn up snug, is the recipe. And a French knot, drawing the silk thread all the way through the fruit so that its flatness is correctly, and fasten the thread tightly to the other side, or, in gold or green silk or some contrasting color, wrap a tiny circle in chain stitch (before filling with cotton); then fill and draw up the cover-in. In the center of the circle place a French knot and tighten firmly to the

THE LIST OF CASUALTIES CONTINUES TO INCREASE

Eight More Officers Reported Wounded—Further Particulars of Various Soldiers in the Casualty List

OTTAWA, April 26.—A list of eight more Canadian officers wounded in the four days' fight near Ypres was given out for publication at the Militia Department tonight. A further casualty list of 100 or so non-commissioned officers and men has come in, and will be issued within a few hours, as soon as the relatives are notified.

No further official communication has been received in regard to the details of the fighting, but it is believed here that the list of killed and wounded among the men will be as high as might be imagined from the number of officers killed or wounded. It is pointed out that it is the duty of the officers to lead the men, and that proportionately the casualties among officers would be high.

The officers reported wounded tonight are as follows: Capt. Bowen, 7th Battalion, formerly 9th, from 10th Edmonton Dragoons; Major Ballantyne, 4th Battalion, seriously wounded, formerly of the 20th Peel Regt.; Lieut. A. Ford, 7th Battalion, of Kamloops, formerly of the Rocky Mountain Rangers; Lieut. H. B. Schorschmidt, 7th Battalion, Vancouver; Lieut. E. S. Molson, 13th Battalion, formerly of the 5th Royal Highlanders, Montreal; Lieut. J. A. Dansereau, 15th Battalion, a graduate of the R.M.C., and attached to the Corps of Guides; Capt. Geo. Haggarty MacLaren, 16th Battalion (piece of resistance unknown at time of writing); and Lieut. H. F. Hunberg of the Engineering Corps.

There is nothing official from the War Office yet telling whether or not some of the Canadians are prisoners, but in view of the character of the fight it is considered likely that at least some of the Canadians were taken prisoners in the first rush. It will probably be some days yet before the complete list of killed, wounded and prisoners is available. The Germans apparently still hold part of the ground where the battle began, and presumably some of the wounded are now in their hands.

SENT BAYONET INTO THE CANADIAN WOUNDED

German Heartlessness is Wreaked on Troops From the Dominion—Revenge of the Gallant Canucks Was Swift and Terrible

NORTHERN FRANCE, April 27.—(Special.)—North of Ypres there may be a slight bulge in their line, but the allies are holding it. Everything seems to have been worked out by the enemy for his great fight against the allies' line from Boesinghe to Steenstraate and northward.

To the south and southwest, in a huge stretch of inundated country, where the decaying bodies of men and animals are giving forth poisonous and horrible, a way was cleared for the tremendous onrush of the invaders.

The Germans evidently knew exactly where and how the hinge of the English and British troops was joined by a wedge of French territorials, and here they considered was the weak spot at which to strike with a huge concentration of men and guns.

While the terrible Hill No. 60 was still flaming and smoking they struck. The attack came within an ace of being successful, but then broke against the Germans. The struggle is not over yet, but we are holding the line more powerfully than it was held on the south toward Armentieres and Lille in the anxious first week of November.

The Germans have flung up reinforcements after reinforcements and battery upon battery into the bloodstained terrain. Just as have the British. It has been a not, feverish race for supremacy.

That Canadians have been tried in a crucible of the intensest heat and have not been found wanting. The wounded who came down to the dressing stations, many hundreds of them, were in high spirits.

They respect the Germans as fighting machine, but fell low in the great Steenstraate fight, when they had to retire for spell during the thick of the tussle, leaving the wounded there, they presently returned the Germans having been hurled back under a tornado of machine gun fire, and found all their wounded bayoneted to death.

Their revenge was swift and terrible At the point of their bayonets they took only two German prisoners alive.

Think Austria Marking Time

Little Chance of Agreement Between Italy and Austria is Opinion

ROME, April 26.—The press, politicians and public are discussing with the most lively interest the plan for the Austro-Italian agreement reported to have been presented by the German ambassador, Prince von Buelow, in the original negotiations on this subject. This plan, as set forth recently by the Avanti, the organ of the Socialists, who favor neutrality, provided among other things, for recognition of the reciprocal interests of Italy and Austria in preserving the Triple Alliance and for territorial concessions by Austria.

Criticism of any such agreement is widespread, on the ground that the precise concessions which Italy would receive were not set forth with sufficient clearness. The opinion is expressed that so long as Austria retains her present territory on the eastern coast of the Adriatic, with Pola, Cattaro and 500 Dalmation islands—which some naval experts maintain command the Straits—it will be impossible to reach a settlement. This view is expressed by one well-known commentator in this manner: "Austria-Hungary would leave in the hands of Austria all the points which constitute a grave menace—practically to Italy. It Austria is really willing to cede the territories inhabited principally by Italians she must yield not only the province of Trent but Pola, Fiume and the greater part of Dalmatia. This evidently is not Austria's intention, as the negotiations would not drag on so long as it were. Austria obviously is having recourse to petty expedients in order to gain time, hoping that unforeseen events will make possible a solution more satisfactory than the one based upon concession of the Italian demands in their entirety.

The Corriere della Sera says the Austro-Italian problem cannot be solved by resorting to trivial expedients, but demands a solution which would effect an extension which territory along racial lines, and would guarantee to Italy the means of satisfactory maritime defence.

This newspaper says that Italy's relations with the Slavs and other questions arising from the new situation in the Mediterranean should be left to future settlement by international agreement.

Fifty Machine Guns Captured

Berlin Official Statement Alleges Important Capture of Guns, and Heavy Loss to British

(Canadian Press Special)

BERLIN, April 27.—(Official statement)—The attacks on the German line by very strong British forces completely broke down with extraordinarily heavy losses to the enemy, who were partly flanked by artillery fire. The Germans still hold Bridgehead on the Yser canal at Lizerne. Up to the present we have taken fifty machine guns in the fighting around Ypres. Our guns command an important railway junction and military headquarters at Poperinghe, eight miles west of Ypres.

The report also tells of the failure of French attacks at various points along the line.

ROMANTIC TRAGEDY
GIRL PULLS RIBBON AND SHOOTS LOVER

(Canadian Press Special)

BRIDGEPORT, Conn., April 27.—Arthur Hearn Coul, aged 22, of New York, recently returned from a trip to Bermuda, recuperating from a nervous breakdown, came here yesterday to visit his fiancee, Emily Wheeler, aged 20, and remaining with her. He gave her an engagement ring, and at the same time he handed her a ribbon which was attached to a revolver concealed under his coat. At Coul's urgent request, and after some hesitation, Miss Wheeler pulled the end of the ribbon and a bullet from the revolver entered Cowl's brain. He died later in the hospital.

GERMAN ATTACKS REPULSED FRENCH RETAKE HETSAS

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, April 27.—A despatch from Sir John French, given out today, says: "Yesterday all German attacks north east of Ypres were repulsed. In the afternoon our troops took the offensive and made progress near St. Julien and to the west of that place. The French co-operated on the left and further to the north they retook Hetsas.

In the course of yesterday's fighting our artillery took full advantage of several opportunities for inflicting severe casualties on the enemy.

On the remainder of the front there is nothing to report. Our airmen yesterday bombarded successfully stations and junctions at Tourcoing, Roubaix, Ingleminster, Staden, "Langemarck, Thiett and Roulers."

48th Highlanders German Prisoners

It Is Feared Part of Regiment Was Cut off by Germans at Langemarck

(Canadian Press Special)

TORONTO, April 27.—A cable from Col. Geo. Corey, on the headquarters staff in France, says his brother, Capt. Robert Corey, who went from here with the 48th Highlanders, is a prisoner, and this lends color to the fear that a large part of the regiment may have been cut off by the Germans and be among the thousand Canadian prisoners they claim to have made.

FRENCH ADVANCE
RE-CAPTURE HILL

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, April 27.—This afternoon's official statement: "There is nothing to add to our communication of last night except that we consolidated our positions and continue to make progress toward the north of Ypres and also on the road to Langemarck.

The summit of Hartmann's Weilerkopf, which was taken from us yesterday morning, was recaptured by our troops the evening of the same day. We also took some prisoners.

Wounded soldiers from the Ypres battle speak of the German poison gas bombs. They do not kill anybody, but put to sleep those who breathed the fumes, and the Germans bayonetted the sleepers.

Aid French in Recapture of Lizerne Which Had Fallen Into the Enemy's Hands

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, April 27.—The following Belgian official report on the progress of hostilities, dated April 26th, was given out here today: "Last night our infantry repelled three attacks made south of Dixmude by the Germans, who are again using asphyxiating gasses. The Germans sustained heavy losses.

"Today during our front the artillery of the enemy has shown a certain amount of activity. Our artillery replied with success, and by a strong fire arrested of medal help to the French. These troops made an attack on Lizerne, which yesterday fell into the hands of the enemy, but which was arrested from them again this afternoon."

CANADIANS HAVE THE WELLINGTON TOUCH

Iron Duke Never Lost a Gun He Did Not Recover, Canadians Credited With Re-Establishing Cohesion of Whole Allied Line

LONDON, April 26.—The Canadians showed on the Yser Canal the same quality that marked their work at Hill 60, but an English army which he did not recover.

"First," he says, "their retreat was quicker than left was timed to be 'in the air,' owing to the necessary withdrawal of other troops. They had no time to attempt to get their 4.7 guns across the water. The guns were casually far up and the Germans attack was rapid and in great force, killing many aloft. If the word may be used, has been seen than the Germans' first and final success across the canal that is on the left bank. They brought up behind a cloud of yellow-green smoke that emptied the trenches before them, and confused the French, a quantity of pontoon bridges 25 feet to 30 feet in length, and with great courage in spite of the destruction of the first, they placed the reserve bridges in position and finally crossed the canal, occupying the village of Lizerne and several other positions.

"A really great achievement, all this was away to the left of the Canadians, but it left the latter untenable and the 4.7 guns had to be abandoned. But the Canadian officers and inspired the men, had the Wellington touch—the touch of a man who does not say English guns which

"What Wellington did in the Peninsula the Canadians did on the first plain in Europe. Within four hours they turned round and advanced. They endured every sort of diabolical device of modern warfare. They met men, terribly stiff and half blind and weak in limbs from the fumes let loose by the Germans; they had to face shrapnel and rifle fire, and machine gun fire in a country absolutely defenseless. They were wounded by every sort of engine, by bayonet, by gas, by bits of metal of every shape and size, but they charged home against the enemy, and there is another stood in the German textbooks. Their charge and advance did more than to regain our position and recover the lost guns. It enabled the cohesion of the whole allied front to be re-established. The loose of battle is not yet. There are still German outposts, few and weak, on either side of the canals and rivers, but the allied counterattacks are regaining the lost ground under the Canadians' left."

STOCKY CANADIANS THRILL WITH COURAGE

Fearlessness Make Them the Peers of the Battleground—Mow Down the Germans and Recover Three Howitzers Left by the French

LONDON April 27.—(Special.)—The Evening News publishes an interview with "a Canadian who participated in the recapture of the guns at Ypres," describing his personal experiences in the action in which, according to Sir John French's report, the Canadians "saved the situation."

"After breaking the line on our left," says the Canadian in the story told to The Evening News, "we received orders to stand to by the side of the canal. Then we were ordered to proceed immediately to the north of Ypres. We set off without food or water—with nothing, in fact, except our rest equipment—each man taking 100 rounds of ammunition.

"We waited at this point until nearly midnight, when two battalions formed up in line to halt reinforcements if extended order. We received the signal to break through and charge the enemy, who were about 500 yards away.

"Mown Down Like Sheep."

"We were at once mown down like a lot of sheep by the enemy's artillery. Some 2,500 of us had to attack a wood in three lines over some 1,500 Germans. The place was full of Maxims. Before our attack some shells were thrown into the wood.

"We drove them from their trenches in front of the wood and went right through, about 500 yards to the other side. Then we were surrounded, and had to retire to the trenches we had taken. Here we dug ourselves in, reinforcing until Saturday morning, the enemy shelling us all the time with shrapnel. We filed out Saturday morning to make room for reinforcements.

Enfiladed from Both Sides

"In our advance we had been enfiladed by a heavy fire from both sides in spite of this we mowed the Germans down before us and recovered three guns left behind by the French, left behind them in the wood. These we blew up, and then recaptured our own 4.7 guns. At this point we surrounded 60 Germans and bayoneted 45 of them. One German officer in front blew out his brains.

"We could not estimate the number of German slain, but we saw their unsightliness throughout the night looking for the dead.

"It was certainly the most awful time ever known. They seemed to have fortified the completely at the beginning, but we got them on the run. We had the Prussian Guard in front of us and they ran like rabbits.

Work in connection with the preparation at Barriefield for the summer Camp commenced yesterday morning.

The horses' course for the overseas nurses at Queen's Hospital Corps opened at the station hospital on Queen street yesterday morning. There are 18 nurses on the course.

Thirty-one horses have been received from Ottawa and Montreal by the R. C.H.A. They are a fine type and well suited to artillery work. This morning the horses were divided according to requirements.

Lieut. Skinner, with one non-com. and five men took 19 Galician prisoners from Fort Henry to Toronto yesterday. The men will be sent to the big prison camp in the north.

Captain Richardson, of Toronto, formerly commanding officer of the 9th Battery is here taking the course of the R.S.A. The Captain has been appointed to command the 2nd Brigade of C.F.A. for overseas service.

Lt.-Col. Panet, O.C. R.C.H.A. has written to the barracks here asking that a draft of sixty per cent. drivers be maintained here in "C" Battery so as to furnish reinforcements for "A" and "B" Batteries now overseas. This percentage is based on the artillery losses so far sustained during the war.

One hundred men and two officers have been taken from the 6th Brigade of C.F.A. now in England for the purpose of organizing a depot in connection with the 10th Brigade of Royal Horse Artillery at Woolwich. These men have been taken from the brigade commanded by Lt.-Col. Rathbun, and among them are a number from the 22nd Battery, which left here February 16th under Major Riordan.

BREEDING 2YEAR-OLD FILLIES

We have heard many an argument over the advisability of breeding two-year-old colts and sometimes three-year-olds as well. It all depends upon conditions. If the colt is well-grown and sufficiently developed for age harm seldom results from early breeding. Of course, a colt bred at so early an age cannot be expected to go to work and do as much work as an older horse, or even as much as she would have done has not been with foal. The developing foetus is a drain on her constitution, and is bound to retard growth somewhat, even under the best of conditions. For this reason undersized colts should not be bred, and where it is necessary for the colt to do a work-horse's work she could not be called upon to raise a colt. A young mare also requires more care than an older brood mare. She must be well but carefully fed and above all things she must get plenty of exercise and laxative feed such as grass, bran and roots. For this reason it is generally considered more advisable to delay breeding young mares until the warm weather comes, for this generally ensures plenty of pasture for the mare the next year for some time before she foals, and an abundance of this is the best of feeds for brood mares after the foal is dropped. Fairly late breeding also is generally most successful because mares normally "catch" more easily in January or warm weather than early in the spring when it is quite cool. It is particularly important that the young mare get with foal the first season bred. For some reason mares which do not conceive the first season bred are very often quite difficult to get with foal in other seasons. All mares should be returned regularly to the horse and this is doubly true of mares, and every precaution should be taken to get them with foal at the first service if possible. Some of the best and surest foal-getters we know were bred at two years of age, and have gone as regular breeders since and have grown into good big mares. It must be remembered, however, that these mares were not worked to the limit either while carrying or nursing a foal, and were always well fed and cared for. It depends on the size of the colt, the care and the feed. Undersized, poorly developed youngsters should not be bred. Many such have been practically ruined by breeding too early. It is a question for the judgment of the owner.

SAYS GERMAN FLEET HEADED FOR CANADA

PORTLAND, Ore., April 26.—Headed for the Atlantic Coast of Canada is a German squadron bent on bombarding important cities and fortifications there, according to a letter received today by Captain Carl Brauch, master of the German bark Dalbek, interned here since July 30, from a friend who is a deck officer of the German navy.

Eight days before the German fleet bombarded Scarborough, Hartlepool and other ports, I received a letter from the same friend, telling me that the German fleet would strike on the British coast and I thought that statement was laughable," said Captain Brauch. "Since it came to pass, I am convinced that the move of the squadron to the Canadian coast may not be a myth."

The letter has been on the way since March 21.

BODY TAKEN FROM THE RIDEAU RIVER

OTTAWA, April 26.—The body of an unknown man, which had evidently been in the river only a short time, was fished out of the Rideau near the C.P.R. bridge yesterday morning. The body now lies at Gauthier's morgue awaiting identification. Drowning was obviously the cause of death. The face, which is that of a fair, reddish man, was slightly swollen, and the head had been contused in several places, where it encountered floating obstacles. The body otherwise is entirely free from marks and is well preserved.

The police were immediately notified, but no evidence establishing the identity of the man is yet forthcoming up to press time. He was apparently a laboring man and was dressed in a rough suit.

The police are of the opinion that the deceased was a farmer. Dr. Craig opened a preliminary inquest in Gauthier's morgue this morning. The adjourned session will be held next Tuesday night at the police court.

SKULL FRACTURED BY FALL FROM ROCKER

Young Son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Williams, of Kingston, Dies Following Accident

KINGSTON, April 26.—At noon today the three-months-old child of Mr. and Mrs. Aubrey Williams, 21 Montreal street, passed away, following injuries he sustained this morning.

The little lad was standing on a large rocker that was close to a table in the kitchen of the home, and in playfully reached for an article that was on the table and in so doing lost his balance. He fell backwards, out of the chair and landed on his head. The child uttered a cry and then lapsed into unconsciousness from which he never recovered.

He was picked up by his mother and a doctor was summoned, but nothing could be done as the infant's skull had been fractured and the hemorrhage that ensued brought on his death at noon. The child's death was very sudden and the parents are grief-stricken over the accident. They have the sympathy of the entire community in their bereavement.

Germans Using 17-Inch Guns

NORTHERN FRANCE, April 26.—The Germans are now bombarding the Allies with 17-inch guns, one of these great pieces, of artillery, latest product of the Krupp factories, can be heard thirty miles. Germans in aeroplane shells have fired all of the Belgian farms and villages along a front of twenty miles. Last night the sky was illuminated with the glare from the blazing homes and barns.

The high notitherly winds which for three days have been blowing from the German lines across the Anglo-French-Belgian trenches carrying before them the stupefying gases, have now died down. There is complete calm to-night, and the temper of the Allied troops over what they claim the most flagrant breach of the rules of civilized warfare by the Germans is most bitter; From the highest officer down to the last joined private the most bitter invective is being used against the Germans.

"I believe that the Germans actually did measure the Belgian people," snapped a Canadian officer of high rank whom I saw in the field hospital and who was suffering from the effects of the gas. Many of the Canadians who are in the hospitals are suffering from gas fumes.

The entire Canadian contingent was engaged and all are recipients of unstinted praise from Sir John French and his staff for the part they played in the battle.

Hill Number Sixty is compared to an active volcano. The capture and retention of this important position by the British will go down in history as one of the greatest events of the greatest war.

WINSTON CHURCHILL

If there is one man who is entitled to the gratitude of the world, outside of Germany, it is Winston Churchill. Contrary to the war office, Churchill ordered many superdreadnoughts and cruisers, and thereby risked his position in the Cabinet. The peace party was so strong that an adequate preparation for war was made with the land forces. Churchill, for his disobedience, would have been cashiered, but the Cabinet found this he had become so popular with the people, that it would be inadvisable to out him. Now, however, since the reinstatement of Lord Fisher, disagreements between the First Lord of the Admiralty, and Fisher, have reached such a head, that it seems one of the two must retire. Fisher cannot be retired. His long experience, his daring, his popularity with the navy, renders his maintenance in his present position a certainty. Churchill is impulsive. He insists upon some things to which Fisher cannot agree. The result is trouble for the Government. Churchill is poor. He is a rich American, a grandchild of old Leonard Jerome of New York. His mother lives upon an income of $15,000 a year, derived from New York properties. Churchill has a salary of $25,000 per year. He will probably be appointed Viceroy of India, the greatest position in the gift of the Crown. Lord Hardinge was created a short time ago by a bomb thrown at him as he rode in a procession upon an elephant. He desires to retire from his present position of Viceroy. Lloyd-George said, "It is a bad time to swap horses when you are crossing a stream." That aphorism is applicable to the present case.

SIR WILFRID GIVES PRAISE TO THE TROOPS

MONTREAL, April 26.—Flags on all public and important business premises were at half mast today out of respect for the five Montreal officers reported killed in the latest action in Flanders.

Arrangements are being made to hold a memorial service for the dead. The great anxiety existed here among the wives and families of men in the contingent and the publication of casualty lists relating to the non-commissioned officers and privates was eagerly awaited.

"The bravery of the Canadians was a credit to Canada and we are all proud of them," said Sir Wilfrid Laurier, leader of the opposition in the Federal House, discussing the action of the troops in Flanders at the Windsor Hotel today.

GERMANY'S METAL FAMINE.

she Is Now Using Brass Doors as Ammunition.

Will the copper famine reel Germany's fate? The question is one which may well cause our foes some perturbation, for without copper there can be no ammunition, and without ammunition there can be no war. That is why England and France have taken such determined steps to prevent any supplies of this metal reaching Germany and Austria. Once their supplies of copper are exhausted the fate of both countries seems certain.

Copper is the essential metal in the manufacture of munitions of war. Neither cartridge nor shell can be made without it. Time after time experiments have been made with other metals, but without any marked success. Aluminium is the nearest approach to copper for war material, but it cannot be depended upon. The alloy of zinc and copper from which cartridge cases for rifles are drawn is so thin that the metal must be very pure to insure against flaws. Then there are the cartridge cases for quick-firing guns. These also require the highest quality of copper and zinc, since they must be exact to the 5000th part of an inch, and gas-tight. On shells there are copper bands encircling the shell to ensure close firing in the rifling. A pure copper being the only substance known that gives satisfactory results.

The fact that the price of copper in Germany has increased 200 per cent. since the commencement of the war is striking evidence of the shortage of this precious metal. At the lowest estimate it is reckoned that German troops fire 26,000,000 shots every twenty-four hours, the total weight of brass necessary for this daily rifle fire being roughly 1,000 tons. We calculate, says the London Times, Maxim gun fire at 10 per cent. of the rifle-fire, we have: rifles, 26 tons; Maxim guns, roughly 20 tons; making a total of 35 tons.

To this total must be added copper used in regard to shells, ammunition, according to the authority already mentioned, to 105 tons a day. This brings the total up to 140 tons. Copper in the brass used by Germany and Austria-Hungary (copper 72 per cent. of this metal, so that the total need of copper in the above-mentioned weight of brass is about 210 tons per day, or nearly 120,000 tons a year.

TREATED LIKE DOGS.

German Soldiers' Letters Describe Horrible Life In Trenches.

The Paris Figaro publishes two letters by German soldiers to their families at the beginning of February. In the first one the writer says:

"I am quite shattered and can hardly carry out pack. If it die it will be a miserable death, for no one ever cares what happens to one.

"The situation here is worse than in Russia, and what the newspapers say is untrue. We are treated like dogs and are sent like sheep to the slaughter.

"The French guns speak as that the very earth trembles, while our artillery barely fires a few shells and we are forbidden to fire our rifles.

"Wherever one looks one sees only dead and wounded. The rest they tell me, forwards nothing, so that no information should leak out. The man who gets out of this alive will be lucky and will have something to thank God for. This is a fight to a finish and it is impossible to tell you all I see."

[illegible] companies every day have six or eight men killed and 25 to 30 wounded. The enemy has pushed forward his saps, in which he has placed mines to blow up our trenches. Hand grenades and bomb throwers—such are the terrible weapons to which recourse is made.

"The bottom of the trenches is covered with a layer of mud 5 or 6 inches thick, in which lie the bodies of those killed during the preceding days. Here and there one sees an arm or a leg stick out. A horrible stench pervades trenches. In the rear corpses are piled up.

"Holes made by shells are of every imaginable size. Some are so big that a carriage could stand in them. I should never have believed I could endure all this. At one gets accustomed to everything."

AMBITION.

What would this world of ours do without ambitious people? Ambition pushes on the leaven which raises it into wholesome bread. Without ambition the world would never get up. Wrong is the ambitious, forsooth! The men wrong who, with bent back and sweating brow, cut the smooth road over which humanity marches forward from generation to generation!—Jerome K. Jerome.

New England's Tribute to Borden

What a Good Boston Paper Thinks of Canada's Prime Minister.

The Christian Science Monitor, of Boston, one of the leading dailies of New England, on April 22, printed the following article:

If Canada were an ally of Great Britain rather than an integral part of the British Empire its politics and its politicians would command on every side, more nearly than they do now, a measure of attention commensurate with their importance. The present European war is on a scale beyond any that history records, but, tremendous as it is, Canada's contribution to it in men and money cannot be considered trivial, relatively of otherwise. The other day at Ottawa a parliament was prorogued that during its session had made provision for army and navy equipment estimated to cost $100,000,000. The leader of the party and the premier of the Government, who brought this measure successfully through, who for nine months has met every exigency forced upon Canada by the situation in Europe, and particularly by the situation in Great Britain with comprehensiveness, clear-sightedness and intelligent grasp, has long been recognized in the United States and now is coming to be recognized in his own country, as no ordinary man.

Of course, Sir Robert Borden has long had his personal and political friends, his admirers and his followers but for the most part these have been confined to his own party, and a very large percentage of them, it is safe to say have had little knowledge of his real quality as a statesman. In the ordinary course of things as premier he would never have such trials as those that since August last have been testing his character, and he would not have had such opportunities as these trials have afforded him of proving his capacity in the face of difficulty.

Not the least of the trials that have come upon him and have tested him were those growing out of the discovery that, in common with other countries, Canada has unscrupulous enemies in Europe and followers of disloyalty in the furnishing of supplies—came as a shock to the whole country, but the main force of it had to be borne by the Premier; so he has borne it manfully. He could not pause to carry on a criminal trial, but he has decreed restitution; those who have wronged the nation that if the law of the country permits its courts to force restitution there will be restitution. And that the offenders can be more severely punished they will be punished regardless of who they are or of what in the past they have been.

In the greater glare, in the larger field abroad the things that more and the things that disturb a possession of 9,000 miles or more do not hold the attention, but because the work of Sir Robert Borden is only an incident in the daily activities of a great empire its value is not being overlooked at home. Liberals as well as Conservatives, people of generous natures of all shades of opinion, are saying just this and pleasant things about the man who for nine months has given his days and his nights, his time and his thought, his whole heart to the task of enabling Canada to perform what he believes to be its plain duty to the Mother Country.

Poisonous Gases Dye The Ground

Effect of German Asphyxiating Bombs is to Turn the Ground Deep Yellow

The quantity of poisonous gases which the Germans showered over the Allied lines was so great that the ground for a wide area has turned a deep yellow, which, viewed from a distance, seems as though it were covered with a powder.

Although the Allied soldiers were affected for an area half a mile behind their trenches, the German soldiers rushed into the fumes unharmed. This was explained when on prisoners were found wads of cotton, and they said they had received instructions to plug their nostrils when charging after the gas guns had been fired.

Germans' Supreme Desperate Attack

Headquarters of the British Overseas Army, Northern France, April 26. —"The further they come the harder they'll get whipped."

In this phrase, the sharp comment of Field-Marshall Sir John French, commander-in-chief of the British forces, when appraised that the Germans had backed their way through to the Ypres canal, is today the slogan of the British army.

It expresses the supreme confidence of the whole force, regular and volunteer, and is being followed by an onslaught all along the line to try to recover the ground lost in a battle that for fierceness has never been equalled. The fight continues with the utmost intensity and reinforcements are being thrown into the battle-line by the Allies at every point when reports of airmen indicate that the Germans have massed for renewed assaults.

Standing on all five sides from Ypres today, I saw reflected along a fifteen mile panorama, filled with smoke the gigantic struggle which Sir John French's army was making against the weight of the reinforced German war machine.

Through the tumult and the haze dotted with white clouds from bursting shrapnel came word that the British still held all their positions in the vicinity of Hill 60. Over the hill itself a dense smoke-cloud hung. Great shells from the German guns were constantly bursting over every portion of the British line.

Miles northeast of Ypres, where the Canadians still are gallantly holding their new positions, the line could just be distinguished through the white-ish smoke. Ypres itself was being subjected to a almost continuous bombardment from the German heavy artillery and had been set on fire in many places.

The great tower of the beautiful Cloth Hall glistened in the sunlight above the sea of smoke which filled the city. Columns of smoke from the British village, offering a fine target to the Germans was easily discernible on the horizon, while above it all could be picked the aeroplanes of the enemy reconnoitering the enemy's positions and watching, as the eye of the army," for the massing of troops that foretaste another attempted advance.

From Sir John French down the British believe that the present drive in the supreme attempt of the German General Staff to Hack through to Calais, and every precaution has been taken to meet the movement.

Words of Praise For Lieut. Wilkins

The following is an extract from a letter received by Mrs. Wilkins, 12 Church St., of Norwood, Ont., from Captain Adjutant of the Second Bedfordshire Regiment, in reference to Lieut. H. O. Wilkins, who was wounded on March 10th, and is now slowly recovering in a private hospital at Torquay, England. It will prove interesting reading to the many friends of Lieut. Wilkins in this city. The letter: "On the 10th of March the 2nd battalion advanced to the attack; and in the morning your son took a strong party out to reconnoitre the enemy's position. From what I can learn he was challenged in English, and challenged in his turn, and was fired on. We are very sorry to lose him, as he had proved himself a favorite both with officers and men during the short stay with us. He was a very keen officer, and was recommended for the D.S.O. for good effect when in the trenches. He was also very busy in getting out new wires and watching the enemy at night time. I hope you hear good news from him, and we all join in sending our sympathy."

While Lieut. Wilkins was shot through the lung, and is still in a very weak condition, he hopes to return to the trenches ere long.

THE HON. MR. OLIVER SPEAKS

Why is The Globe Silent?

Can anyone tell? Oh, yes. The party against whom serious charges of maladministration of public affairs are made are Liberals; hence The Globe is as silent and dumb as an oyster. Is it, therefore, any wonder then that those who joined in condemning the acceptance of the paltry sum of $500 by Mr. Hanna, Provincial Secretary in the Whitney Government from a contractor for political purposes, though it was established in evidence that the contractor received no consideration or favors therefor, should be asking for an explanation?

Honest men will join the Rev. Byron H. Stauffer of the Bond Street congregational Church, Toronto, in seeking information. He writes The Globe as follows:

"You will pardon me for saying that I was grievously disappointed in the tone of your editorial on the case of the Hon. Frank Oliver and the G.T.P. I cannot understand how, in the light of your treatment of recent Government misdoings, you can defend this very peculiar action of Mr. Oliver's. Why should a big railway company make an annual newspaper investment of fifteen thousand dollars out of its immense income unless there was some indirect object to be achieved? And why should the Minister of the Interior sell his newspaper stock to a big corporation which was doing big business with the Government?

When it was shown that an Ontario Cabinet Minister took five hundred dollars from a contractor for campaign purposes, I felt called upon to denounce the action from my pulpit. How can I keep silence when a Dominion cabinet minister is accused of taking fifteen thousand dollars from a contracting corporation not for a party purpose, but for the purpose of his own private enterprises? I cannot see such action in view of your past record as a fearless critic, can avoid denouncing it. Such discreditable record of Northwest graft as revealed in the Ferguson report."

It is evident the Rev. gentleman had not been watching and studying Globe political tactics, and Globe political morality, or he would never have given himself the trouble to ask the question. The Globe's reply is of the Globlier character, evasive and unsatisfactory.

The Rev. gentleman might have further asked why the Globe has been and continues silent upon the charges made against Mr. Oliver, by a former Minister of the Crown? In addition to the charge made against Mr. Oliver by the Speaker, Minister of the Interior, in the Commons, of having while Minister of the Interior in the Laurier Government, collected royalties to the extent of some $1,000, upon coal, mined upon land, subject to Government royalty, which fact is known has not yet been refunded. Dr. Roche further charged as follows:

"That Hon. Frank Oliver, while Minister of the Crown, collected royalties, of which he has never paid one dollar to the Government.

"That as a result of a letter written by his son-in-law, Mr. J. J. Anderson, manager of the Union Bank at Edmonton, Mr. Oliver, while Minister of the Interior, violated the regulations of the department by a reinstatement of cancelled lands valued at about $25,000; that the lands in question passed into the hands of Mr. Oliver's son-in-law; that they were finally transferred to Mr. Oliver, who borrowed $23,000 on them; and that at the same time declarations were made by Mr. Oliver's son-in-law and another gentleman, that the property was valued at $71,400, without improvements.

"Mr. Oliver admitted receiving the royalties.

"He made no reply to the land charge."

Would it not be well for the Rev. Byron H. Stauffer to address write The Globe and ask why its silence upon this gigantic transaction when compared with the $500 subscription. It is all in a nut-shell. Oliver is a Grit. Hanna is a Conservative.

Latest.

The Ottawa correspondent of the Montreal Star of April 23rd says:

Ottawa, April 23.—The Hon. Dr. Roche, Minister of the Interior, when recently speaking in the House, the case of the Hon. Frank Oliver and royalties collected by him on mineral rights of homestead lands, intimated that a cheque from the former Minister would be the speedy order. Now, we fear, has been received.

The Department estimates of last session were $500 and the supplies collected by Mr. Oliver between October 8, 1909, when he is said to have improperly leased mineral rights on his homestead, and the date in 1911 when he secured a lease from the Government, and payment is also claimed to be due for the period since the lease was obtained from the Department.

"Heigh-ho" when the Grit press speak.

A RABID PROFESSOR.

"In no country in the world, more particularly in the English speaking world, is the political system so low and sordid as in Canada. Nowhere are politics so destitute of simple ideals or moral decency. The whole system is covered with barnacles of broken pledges, sordid graft and scandals." This surprising and remarkable utterance was not delivered, as might be imagined, by a professional socialist orator standing on a tub at a street corner. It formed part of the Baccalaureate sermon delivered on Sunday morning to the students of Victoria College, Toronto, by Professor Salem Bland, of Winnipeg. As such it is deserving of notice. It is a preposterous assertion, an absolute perversion of the truth, and should not be allowed to pass unchallenged. It is all the more serious, all the more to be deplored, because it was delivered—not in the heat of political excitement—but to a body of young men, under the guise of a sermon. Professor Salem Bland is altogether behind the times. He is a political Rip Van Winkle. Had he spoken in this strain some five years ago there would have been a good deal of truth in what he said. But the political Canada he has made great strides since then in the direction of sound and honest administration. To say that at the present time nowhere in the world is the political system so low and sordid, is to show a lamentable ignorance of facts. Professor Salem Bland learned Professor has ever studied the political system of the United States. We wonder if he has ever heard of the machinations of Tammany Hall. If he has, to make such a sweeping assertion as that recorded above would indicate that he is not a fit person to address a number of students upon political economy.

It seems to be the recent scandals which induced Professor Salem Bland to give voice to these fearful fulminations. It is presumably because of the recent graft that the charges of graft have been brought forward. He does not trouble to ascertain whether there was a substratum of truth in them. "The last example is not so gross as some previous ones," he says. We presume he is alluding to the recent investigation concerning the supply of army clothing. We question if he is aware that the full enquiry held resulted in a total collapse of the so-called "scandal", and that it was elicited that the number of bad boots supplied was less than one-half of one per cent. of those issued! Professor Salem Bland has yet to learn that these charges of graft are brought forward by the Liberal Opposition with a view, if possible, of damaging the Government. An old poacher makes a good gamekeeper, for the simple reason that he is conversant with the tricks of his former mates. In the same way members of the Laurier party, who are experts in the art of graft, when they fancy they see an opportunity for the exercise of those discreditable arts, undertake it for granted that members of the Borden Government have acted in the manner that they would have done. In this way the fair name of the Dominion is being aspersed, as the orations of the Winnipeg professor clearly proves.

If it could be shown that the Government connived at these malpractices there would be some justification for the criticism of Professor Salem Bland. But, fortunately for the reputation of Canada such is not the case. The recent action of Sir Robert Borden, in reading out of the party two members whose actions somewhat savoured of graft, shows that the leader of the Conservative party is just the man the Professor would wish to see serving the State—a man who would place principle above material success. His action is being commended by all high-minded people who value the purity of public life. The Premier has announced that the penitentiary stares in the face all who resort to these subterranean practices. And where would a public man be found who was more impregnated with the principles of purity and straightforwardness in public life than the late Sir James Whitney, the former Premier of Ontario? Without going further those examples of men in high position are sufficient to disprove the wild and erroneous assertions of Professor Salem Bland.

A LIBERAL LEGACY.

Premier Hearst and the Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Railways and Canals, have been addressing public meetings in what is known as "New Ontario," at one of which Mr. Cochrane is reported to have informed his hearers that the Dominion Government would have to take over and operate the Transcontinental Railway, the Grand Trunk failing to carry out their contract entered into ten or twelve years ago. The line from Moncton to Winnipeg would have to be operated, he added, but the road not expect to put a first-class service upon it. Except at the city of Quebec and some villages, no development was taking place along the line, and it must take place, as it would be the means of quickening life in Quebec, New Brunswick, and especially Ontario, because when was 400 miles of as good agricultural land along the Transcontinental line in Ontario as between Englehart and Cochrane. They had been in the habit of looking upon the country between the head of the Great Lakes and the eastern portion of the Province as merely something holding the two together, but the opening up of the T. & N. O. Railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway would put different ideas into the heads of strangers who visited the country.

An Easy Way to Get Fat and be Strong

The trouble with most thin folks who wish to gain weight is that they insist on drugging their stomach or stuffing it with greasy foods; rubbing on useless "cold creams," or following some foolish physical culture scheme, while the real cause of thinness goes untouched. You cannot get fat until your digestive tract assimilates the food you eat.

Thanks to a remarkable new scientific discovery, it is now possible to combine into simple form the very elements needed by the digestive organs to help them convert food into rich, fat-laden blood. This master-stroke of modern chemistry is called Sargol and has been termed the greatest of flesh-builders. Sargol aims through its re-generative, reconstructive powers to coat the stomach and intestines to literally soak up the fat-laden elements of your food and pass them into the blood, where they are carried to every starved, broken-down cell and tissue of your body. You can readily picture the result when this startling transformation has taken place and you notice how your cheeks fill out, hollows about your neck disappear and bust disappear and you take on from 10 to 20 pounds of solid healthy flesh. Sargol is absolutely harmless, inexpensive, efficient. J. R. Watkins and other druggists throughout Belleville and vicinity have it and will refund your money if you are not satisfied, as per the guarantee found in every package.

Caution:—While Sargol has, given excellent results in overcoming nervous dyspepsia, and general stomach troubles it should not be taken by those who do not wish to gain ten pounds or more.

CIRCULARS DO NOT REQUIRE WAR TAX

According to a ruling of the Post office which has been received by local commercial men, circulars of the war tax is not applicable to circular letter, and printed matter if mailed as third class matter, open for inspection by the postal authorities. In other words, war tax stamps must only be placed on letters and postcards which are mailed under the first class postal letter. This decision will probably have an effect upon the plans of a number of Toronto firms, who have their circulars, or catalogues printed and mailed in the United States to Canadian customers, as mailed in a recent issue of The Daily News.

The Mocking Bird Girl

By F. A. MITCHEL.

One afternoon in April while on a visit to Washington I was sitting on a bench in one of the parks. The leaves were half blown, and among the trees birds were twittering. One little songster in a tree above my head was more and again drew my attention more, the first higher than the second. Then suddenly just behind me these notes were repeated by a human voice, followed by a girl's laugh. I cannot say which was the more musical, the imitation of the bird's piping or the laugh. I turned and saw three girls, all with their backs toward me, moving away.

Cupid has many arrows in his quiver, but there is one, called laugh, that is more men than all the others. At any rate he had let drive at me with such an arrow and pierced my heart. I had been caught by the trifling incident that I have mentioned and was enamored of the girl who had mocked a bird and laughed. I fancied her the embodiment of feminine mischief, her smile between dimples was doubtless expressive of that melodious laugh, and her eyes laughed as well as her lips and her voice.

Had I been a trifle less fourteful and more practical I would have arisen and hurried after the girls to get a look at the one who had created such me. But by the time I became aroused to the situation it was too late. I went after them, but the park was full of people, and they were lost in the crowd.

A few evenings later I was attending a reception at the White House. I was standing near the entrance to the conservatory with a married lady to whom I was indebted for invitations. Suddenly from within the conservatory I heard the musical laugh that had charmed me. But unfortunately high growing plants were between me and the person who laughed, and I could not see her.

I would have given all I possessed if I could have left my companion and started around to what seemed to me unpardonable. And what excuse could I make for such an act? "Excuse me, Madame, pardon me. There is a mocking bird girl behind those palms with whom I am enamored. I must leave you to go to her?" Such a course would be to commit social suicide, for I have observed that of all the crimes in society the most sensitive to the at is when shown that one wants to have husbands. I remained at my post, but heaven knows what it cost me to do so. Later I would have risen to find her, but how could I do so never having seen her face?

The next time I heard my mocking bird laugh I was at the capitol, up in a gallery under the dome. Suddenly I saw me walked a man, a woman and a girl. I could see the tops of their heads and shoulders, but nothing more. Then up came the laugh. It was the same I had heard when in the park. I would know it among a thousand.

I was tempted to jump down fifty or sixty feet and land beside her at any charmer. Instead, I turned and ran down the stairs so fast that I fell and broke my left leg. I was then unable to do so. I had broken my leg.

I earned my fate for such folly, but the principal one was that I must give up hope of ever finding my charmer, for what is, if she was a stranger in Washington. If not, I would remain there as long as I lived in order to find her.

I did not get the use of my leg again till July, and then it was too hot to remain in one of the cities we have in America. I would have done so, but I didn't know the girl I was looking for would be there. With a heavy heart I went northward.

In October I returned to prosecute my search. I accepted all the invitations I received, hoping to hear the mocking bird girl. I was doomed to disappointment. Everywhere I went I listened and never heard the laugh that I did not feel a pang because it was not the one I longed to hear. I was interested in no other girl. I was not of them could fill the gap in my heart.

One evening I was dancing with the a certain young lady out to dinner. She was very pretty. Her eye was liquid, her face was fair, her hair dark. I passed a delightful period chatting with her, for there was between us that reflexive sympathy which tells two persons that they like each other. I parted with her and after saying good-night that she might make me forget fay laugh girl.

I met this young lady again and asked permission to call. It was granted. I called and found her alone. I spent an her home I made a discovery. She began to play the piano, and this set a canary bird in the room to singing.

"I once heard a girl," I remarked, "imitate a bird to perfection."

"I can do that myself," she said straightway reproduced some of the canary's notes. Whether it was the expression on my face or what it was I know not, but she laughed.

I sprang toward her and took both her hands in mine.

"I've been wanting you since last April!" I exclaimed, "I heard you imitate a bird in the park and laugh. That laugh has been in my heart ever since."

And I spoke the realistic truth. We have been married ten years, and I have never yet had my way in a single instance.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE IS IT REASONABLE?

"COME, LET US REASON TOGETHER, SAITH THE LORD"

Remarkable Growth of This Cult—Its Adherents—Their Realization of a Supernatural Power Outside of Man—An Outgrowth of Present Day Conditions—Are Its Teachings Logical?—Some Perplexing Problems—The Power of the Will in Resisting Disease—God Omnipotent and Omniscient, But Not Omnipresent!

BINGHAMTON, N.Y., April 25.—Pastor Russell's discourse here today was of unusual interest. His text was, "Come, now, let us reason together, saith the Lord: tho your sins shall be as white as snow." (Isaiah, 1.18.) He said, in part:

What a man believes or disbelieves is his own business, and not subject to public criticism. But when a number of people associate themselves, publish their doctrines to the world, and invite members, their doctrines are properly subject to public criticism. These should be honestly treated, however, not misrepresented; and all honest people should welcome such truthful criticism. We assume that Christian Scientists, therefore, will fully appreciate what we have to say. We trust that we always have this attitude toward criticism of our public teaching.

The growth of Christian Science has astonished the world. Its teachings appeal to a very intelligent, well-to-do class of people, of considerable mental independence. The physical healing of either themselves or their friends seems to have been more or less associated with their conversation to their cult. Their realization of the cure brought them to the conclusion that there is a supernatural power outside of man and around a religious sentiment was they had never known before. It seems to them that they have started a new life.

The reason for this is that nominal Christianity is merely a form of godliness, without power or conviction. This form of godliness has spread until the whole is styled Christendom—Christ's Kingdom. In countries like Great Britain, Germany, Russia and Scandinavia, approximately 95 per cent of the population are rated as Christians, even tho some of these are in prison, some in insane asylums, and some too young to think. In Italy, everybody is rated a Christian—altho amongst most of the Italians who come to our shores flourish works of the Devil, such as the Black Hand, the Mafia, etc.

Bewildered Christendom

Additionally, some sincere Christian people have during the last fifty years, been in great perplexity because of the stupendous nonsense intermingled with Truth which was handed down from the Dark Ages. Under the increasing light, thinking people could not swallow some of the monstrous statements of creeds as readily as did their forefathers. Gradually the great churches which formerly persecuted all who were heretics, found it easy to preach except by their ordinations, found themselves compelled to desist from enforcing their tenets as prominent. Thus many people have concluded that the only difference between the various denominations is in church forms, ceremonies, ordinations, etc.

The doctrine that God has forever damned 990 out of every 1000 to an eternity of torture is fire—was gradually looked at too horrible to believe. The alternative doctrine, that God did not foreordain the matter thus, but had not the wisdom or power to avoid the calamities for 6000 years, likewise was equally repugnant. Consequently preachers began to tell that the destiny of Gehenna was not literal fire, but gnawing of conscience, etc.—each manufacturing a Hell in accordance with his own wisdom or ignorance and to suit his congregation.

Under such conditions Christian Science was born, and has grown to its present proportions. Three things especially favored it: (1) its exposition of the Bible; (2) its rejection of once lasting torment, mental or physical; (3) its teaching respecting Divine healing. Mrs. Eddy, the acknowledged head of Christian Science, had a keen mind and considerable wisdom in its exercise. She would hold to the Bible, even the perverting its teachings. She would not make her teachings too antagonistic to other doctrines. She contented herself with vague ambiguous statements re the future life. She held principal stress on healing, and settled all doctrinal difficulties with the dictum that there is no evil, no sin, no death; that what have been called evils are merely errors of the mind.

The very absurdity of these statements advertised them. People said What, think there is no pain, no evil, no sickness, no pain, no sorrow, no evil of any kind? Absurd! Later, they said, Well see how Christian Scientists explain death, sickness and pain, sin. Then curiosity led them into the metaphysical labyrinth which Mrs. Eddy had skilfully constructed. Having no intelligent knowledge of the Bible, they were very prey to her peculiar Eddy's" errors. If some of her definitions were fanciful, far-fetched and unscriptural, they did not know it, and the illogical teachings to which people had been accustomed from childhood.

C. S. Readers and Practitioners

Christian Scientists feel what might be termed scriptural pride in connection with their reading practices and with the public reading of the Scriptures and Mrs. Eddy's comments as to scriptures. Pride and self-esteem felt in in other churches by preachers, elders, deacons, vestrymen, deaconesses, etc., once elevated to positions as readers, practitioners or healing practitioners. It becomes their duty loyally to support the system does not present. And so, just as earnestly as with other sects, the establishment and advancement of Christian Science goes courageously onward.

Still another class is interested—those in control of Christian Science institutions. Such are good, stiff pay, and anybody questioning the merchandising of the truth is given to understand that he is unappreciative; and, with the majority, the price regulates the value.

Is Christian Science Logical?

Having, we believe, fairly stated the facts and claims of Christian Scientists and their relationship to the world, we consider their teachings illogical. "Mother Eddy," striving after a truth, declared that there is no pain, no sickness, no sorrow, etc. The truth she was feeling after, but did not fully grasp, is that pain, sickness, sorrow, death, are abnormal conditions, resulting from the curse that came upon our race at the beginning, because of disloyalty of our parents. We agree with Mrs. Eddy in the extent of saying that these unsatisfactory conditions are not designed of God to be permanent. He does not recognize them as proper for those in fellowship with Him. Jesus Himself declared that their obliteration is the work of His Millennial Kingdom—Revelation. 20, 6; 21, 4; 22, 3.

Is it wise to say in one breath that these conditions are not, in the next breath that they are non-existent? Surely we all value consistency and logic! Otherwise language would bring us confusion instead of intelligence. Let us then say that these conditions exist because man is out of relationship with God thru sin; and that, according to the Bible mankind shall be delivered from this bondage of sin and death into the glorious liberty of the sons of God—Romans 8:21.

The perfect race was represented in Father Adam before he sinned; and thru Christ, eventually the earth will be filled with perfect human beings. Then heaven will not come into that sect accord with the Lord will die the Second Death. Theirs will be the perlasting life and the glorious heart, which St. Peter mentions—the punishing with an everlasting destruction, mentioned by St. Paul (2 Thessalonians 1:9; Thess. 1:9.) But nothing in the Bible implies an everlasting torture of anyone.

In the Bible presentation there is a special place for the Church of the Gospel Age, called out of the world before the Restitution Times. Her acceptance of the Call implies her attempt to live in fullest harmony with the Lord under present imperfect, unsatisfactory conditions—even to the extent of laying down life for the brethren, for the service of God and His Word. To this Church class, the Bible assures us, will come a still higher blessing than Restitution. The Church is of have the highest form of spirit nature, as St. Peter declares—2 Peter 1:4.

Truth Biblical, Scientific, Sanctifying

We commend Christian Scientists for their endeavor to hold fast to the Bible and to regard them that not the letter of the, Bible merely will enlighten and sanctify, but its spirit, its real meaning. This is obtainable, not by confining definitions, but by simplicity of mind in accepting the words for which they are and putting them together in logical order.

Let us give Mrs. Eddy credit for desiring to be logical; but in so doing she used her language was confusing when she said, "There is no death, no sickness, no pain." The most that can be reasonably by the most generous. Then clan is that there should be no death, no sickness, no pain, no sorrow. If things were in right condition, no things are not in right condition, as the Bible declares and as all can see; there will not be so until the number who redeemed the world by the sacrifice of Himself shall assume His kingly office and remove the curse. Then there will be no sin, no death, no sorrow, no pain.

But since Mrs. Eddy and Christian Science fail to recognize and state these facts clearly, it follows that however attractive her teachings may be to many people, they cannot be accepted upon, because they are off the true foundation—recognizing neither the facts of sin and death nor the necessity for redemption therefrom by Jesus' sacrifice of for the coming Restitution. Furthermore, Christian Science does not appreciate between the Church which has been in process of selection for more than eighteen centuries, and the world which will ties in the Wicked One, and which will not be dealt with until the Church shall be glorified, with her Lord shall constitute the Kingdom.

Jesus prayed for His Church, "Sanctify them through Thy Truth." While Christian Scientists and people of other denominations, and some heathen as well, are, many of them, moved by sincere, honorable, low claim to be sanctified. Indeed the sanctifying features of Truth they ignore or do not see. We see with Him, and therefore a tendance or of rejection of profanity, liquors, etc., as sanctification. The Apostle declared that the filth of the flesh is indeed, commendable, but is only a primary step in the right direction.

God is now calling a sanctified class, a set-apart people—whom He is testing under the promise, "He thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of Life." This does not signify faithfulness to a denomination or a cult, but faithfulness to the Lord, to His institution in His Word, to the principles of righteousness, to self-surrender to walk in Jesus' footsteps.

We will not discuss at length the scientific element of Christian Science. To some it seems very unscientific—inharmonious with the Truth. We believe that the only way that anything scientific could be associated with it is by adding to it the thought that sorrow, sin and death are in the world only temporarily, by reason of transgression of Divine Law, and that they are to be exterminated by Messiah's Kingdom.

Christian Scientists tell us that they have benefited mentally and physically from following Mrs. Eddy's theory and denying that there is any pain, etc. We quite agree that the will is a powerful factor in resisting disease—that if we brood over sorrows, difficulties, aches and pains, they are increased by the operation of our minds. We agree with all physicians that the mind should be diverted from our diseases. But it is illogical, irrational, and, above all unscriptural, to say that we are without pain when we have pain. No lover of truth can consent to this. Honesty must be the basis of all successful people, and surely is pleasing to God.

A very Pernicious Teaching

There is one doctrine held by Christian Scientists—and by many other denominations that is exceedingly pernicious, very untrue, very unscientific very unscriptural. This is the teaching that God is omnipresent—present in everything and in every place. Nothing in the Bible so declares; and when we attempt to believe that it is written, we surely made a mistake.

Whoever thinks of God as omnipresent necessarily thinks of Him as impersonal; and the more he thinks, the more vague his God becomes, until finally he has not merely the God of some Christian Scientists, including Mrs. Eddy, express it) believes in a principle of good and calls that principle God. He has a wish to worship a supreme Creator, but by her erroneous reasoning they mislead their own intelligence and deceive it. They invented God. An omnipresent God is not a person.

The Bible recognizes a personal God—a great Spirit Being—and gives Him a home, or locality. Jesus taught us to pray, "Our Father which art in heaven." How different this is from saying that God is in everything useful or beautiful, and that disease is useful for the development of fruits; in the chair, because useful to sit upon; in the table, because useful as a convenience! Such reasoning is absurd. A way from sanctification of heart and life and from the faith which the Bible inculcates.

Canadian Army Boots Praised

Officer at the Front Asserts That Canadian Boots are Better Than English

The following letter concerning Canadian boots has been received by Major-General Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, from Lieut.-Col. David Watson, of Quebec, officer commanding the 3rd Battalion, Canadians:

"At the Front, April 5th, 1915.

Major-Gen. The Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, Ottawa.

"Sir—My attention has been directed to certain articles appearing in the press relative to the issue of Canadian boots to the troops now at the front, and maliciously attacking the value of these.

"I must at once point out that at an inspection of my regiment on the 3rd inst. I took the occasion to ascertain the opinion of the men personally re the relative merits of these boots, and in almost every instance it was intimated that the Canadian boots were most satisfactory and particularly comfortable. It must be remembered that the conditions and experience of a fighting line are the best and only winter were calculated to destroy any boot made. The continued rains and heavy mud conditions rendered any special attention to boots impossible. The boots were soaked in well any attempt made to dry them only hardened and shrunk the leather and rendered them in consequence unfit for service.

"When the new English issue was distributed it was found that they wear out much quicker than the Canadian boots, they are much more heavy and harder on the men's feet. I was pleased to note the large number of men still wearing the Canadian boots, many having taken over the same and having them resoled a couple of times.

"It is therefore most unfair that these malicious reports regarding our Canadian boots should be allowed to pass without pointing out the injustice of same. I would also call attention to the issue of Canadian puttees as against the value of the issue we received over the English. English issue is threadbare and almost valueless already, and one can easily pick out the Canadian article, as they are of much better wearing quality and numbers of our men are still using the original Valentier issue.

"I trust I have made these points quite clear, and find in speaking with several officers of other units that their experience and opinion on these matters quite concur with my own.

"(Signed) D. WATSON."

KIDNEY TROUBLE AFFECTED HIS SPINE

Suffered For Forty Years Until He Used "Fruit-a-tives"

BROWYE, ONT., OCT. 31ST, 1913.

"For about forty years, I was troubled with the Lame Back brought on by Kidney and Bladder Trouble. I was never confined to my bed with the trouble, but it affected my spine and I had to rest for a time. I took advertised remedies which never did me any good. Then I saw "Fruit-a-tives" advertised and decided to try them. They did me more good than any other remedy.

My son suffered from the same trouble and frequently had to leave off working, but "Fruit-a-tives" relieved it for him. I would strongly advise anyone suffering from Kidney and Bladder Trouble to use "Fruit-a-tives".

A Popinjay

By MARGARET C. DEVEREAUX

Two men were standing on a street corner chatting. Each was well dressed, though professionally they had no connection. A dapper young fellow who looked as if he had just come out of a bandbox passed them.

"Who is that guy?" asked one crook, "Him?" said the other, and waited till the young man had got beyond hearing; then he added: "That's a Popinjay. I know him since he was a fly, the slickest in the business. I'd know him through any makeup."

"What's he doin' here?" asked the other nervously.

"Reckon he's workin' on the Tenth National bank business. I've been let into it that the best men in the Pinkerton service are on that case."

"Come off, Tom; you're coddin' me."

"You needn't believe me, Bill, if you don't want to. I've only given you what I think anyway."

The crook who had first imparted his information tried to look unconcerned, but the other noticed that he was much disconcerted. Bill walked away, and Tom looked after him with evident amusement. "What a sucker!" he said to himself. "I believe he had something to do with that bank job or he wouldn't have let on about it. He's a green one. The idea of that popinjay bein' a detective!" And he smothered a laugh.

That same afternoon Bill met the popinjay again on the street. He looked at him so hard that he attracted the other's attention. This was probably the reason why he looked hard at Bill. At any rate Bill shuddered and passed on.

"He's on to me, sure!" he muttered. "I wonder if I could get out o' town without his knowin' it." Then he added, "I'll try a makeup."

When the 6 o'clock train pulled out of the station an elderly countryman with a pair of old fashioned green goggles on his eyes was in it. He sent by himself looking as if he had just come from the haying field. The door at the other end of the car was closed, and he should come in but the popinjay. The lady sent several times, but Bill kept on and the newcomer took it. The farmer's eyes being covered by the goggles and the lower part of his face by a long white beard, no one could see the contortions of his countenance. He seemed to be pulling himself together and said in a low tone to the man beside him:

"What is there in it for me if I give up the stuff?"

"What stuff?" asked the other, surprised.

"Why, I'm on to you same as you're on to me. No need o' fencin'. If I put you on to where the money is bid will you let me out o' the game?"

The stranger turned, looked the speaker full in the face, surprise, admiration, fear, all sorts of other expressions struggling for the mastery, finally he said:

"Can you turn it over without the matter leaking out?"

"I can."

"Do you want to go anywhere?"

"Reckon I'd like to try South America for a while."

"How much would you need?"

"How much can you let me have?"

"How much money have you to turn over?"

"All that was taken."

The popinjay was stalled. He didn't like to ask what he was supposed to know. He concluded to take a risk.

"Would five hundred do?"

"If you can't do any better."

"Very well. Where do we get off?"

"At Winchester."

There was no further conversation between the two till they reached Winchester, where they left the train together.

"Far?" asked the popinjay as they stood on the platform.

"About two miles."

"Cab?"

A station cabman drove up; the two got in and were driven beyond the outskirts of the town, stopping at a small house in half open country. A man came to the door, followed by several children whose faces peered from behind her. The couple went in with all the disguise while in the cab and appeared as himself. The woman looked from one man to the other anxiously. Bill said to her: "I've got tired o' this business. I'm goin' to give up the stuff and take you and the children to a new country to make a new beginnin'."

"I'm mighty glad of that," gasped the woman. "I'm dyin' with this load on me."

Going into the house, Bill went to the cellar and brought up a package, which he handed to the popinjay. The latter opened it and, finding a number of bank bills, counted out a thousand dollars and handed it back to Bill.

"I thought you made it $500."

"I didn't know you were going to begin over with your wife and children. There's $500 for you and $500 for them. I'm no robber. You give yourself away to me needlessly. Our meeting on the train was a coincidence. I'm a millionaire. I took this little money to the bank and restore it. Reminding what I've given you this I need help at any time let me know."

He wrote his address on his card and then drove away, the man in the wagon a "God bless you."

The next day, a young man dressed in the height of fashion called at the Tenth National bank, asked for the president, told his story and left the amount of a recent loss by robbers.

Cookery Points

German Cheese Cakes.

Here are some recipes for the dainties known as cheese cakes which will be found delicious. Try some for the Easter day menus.

Any good cook would be more appropriate to speak of it as cheese pie—it is made from ordinary short pie crust filled with a custard mixture made with eggs, sugar, pot cheese and various flavorings. The cheese can be made at home from sour milk or bought by the pound in the delicatessen shops or bought in prepared cakes of different sizes. If one desires to make them quickly, hot water may be poured into clabbered milk and the curd will separate. Then the water must not be too hot. Here is one recipe:

Rub together until smooth one pound of cottage or pot cheese and a cup of sugar. Add three beaten eggs, a tablespoonful of melted butter, half a cupful of cream or rich milk, the juice and rind of a lemon and a teaspoonful of cinnamon. Beat all until the mixture has a smooth, creamy consistency. Then pour into pie plates in which has been lined with pastry and bake in a quick oven for forty-five minutes. This can be varied by using a meringue made from the whites of three eggs and two tablespoonfuls of sugar. The meringue should be put on the pie when it is almost done and then put back in the oven. It should not be put on to the "cheese" cake as the heat of the oven will cook after being taken from the oven.

Some cooks bake the pastry for cheese cake before putting in the custard, laying it over the outside of the pan and cooking with the bottom of the pan uppermost. They prick the crust with a fork so that it will not blister and, after putting in the custard part, set the crust back into the oven just long enough for the pastry to brown. Some German cooks use a sugar pastry in their cheese cakes, but at this season, when eggs are so high priced, most of us will find that home-wives will prefer to use the ordinary short pie crust. Here is a good recipe:

Allow three level tablespoonfuls of shortening to every cupful of flour or an extra tablespoonful if a very short crust is desired. Also allow four level teaspoonfuls of salt and half a level teaspoonful of baking powder to every cupful of flour. Work the shortening into the flour with the finger tips or with a knife or spatula until you have a mixture resembling soft breadcrumbs.

Mix to a stiff paste, using as little cold water as possible, first making a "well" in the center of the flour. Mix only long enough to take up all the dry flour. Toss the ball of dough out on a lightly floured board and roll it get a thin film. Do not press so hard that the pastry sticks to the board, as stirring spoils the pastry.

Crust pastry can be used with cheese cakes. Line stoves, and pour in one to one and one-half tablespoonfuls of shortening and use cream in place of water in mixing. If very thick the cream is used the shortening may be omitted altogether, the salt and baking powder and flour and the flour. Pastry made from thick cream is a very rich one and usually very digestible form of pastry.

Gluten Bread.

Pour a pint of boiling water into a pint of milk. Add a teaspoonful of sugar and a teaspoonful of salt. Let stand until lukewarm; then add a well beaten egg, a quarter of a yeast cake dissolved and enough gluten to make a soft batter. Cover and stand in a warm place to rise; then add enough gluten to make a soft dough and knead it well. Form it into four loaves and let rise again. Bake for one hour.

Gluten bread requires less yeast and less time to rise than ordinary bread.

Colors and Flavors.

Certain flavorings seem to fit certain colors. No good cook would think of flavoring pale yellow custard or cream with pistachio, almond or rose or a pink dessert with lemon, pistachio or orange. Rose extract is always reserved for sweets of pink or white tint, almond for white, orange for yellow, lemon for white or green and pistachio, of course, for green. A discord is noted between color and flavor in a pale dessert flavored with pistachio or a green dessert flavored with rose, no matter how "good" it may be.

CUPID'S TOIL.

I think that I never saw so remarkable a likeness—to her young sister—in my life. She might have been Bab herself, but for her dress and some striking differences. Miss Guest could not be more than eighteen, in form slender as fairy-like as the little one, with the same child-like innocent look on her face. She had the big gray eyes, too, that were so charming in Bab; but in her they were soft and tender and thoughtful, and a thousand times more charming. Her hair too was brown and wavy, only, instead of hanging loose or in a pig-tail, anywhere and anyhow, in a fashion I well remembered, it was coiled in a coronal on the shapely little head, that was so Greek, and in its gracious, stately, old-fashioned pose, so unlike Bab's. Her dress, of some creamy, gauzy stuff, revealed the prettiest white throat in the world, and arms decked in pearls, and, so far, no more, recalled my little fishing-mate than the sedate self-possession and assured dignity of the girl, as she talked to her other neighbor, suggested Bab making pancakes and chattering with the landlady's children in her strangely and wonderfully acquired Norse. It was not Bab in fact; and yet it almost might have been as theoretical, queerly, womanly Bab, who perfectly turned to me:

"Have you quite quite settled down after your holiday?" she asked, staying the apologies I was for pouring into her ear.

"I had until this evening, but the sight of your father is like a breath of fresh air. I hope your sisters are well."

"My sisters?" she murmured wonderingly, her fork halfway to her pretty mouth and her attitude one of questioning.

"Yes," I said, rather puzzled. "You know they were with your father when I had the good fortune to meet him, Miss Clare and Bab."

"Eh?" dropping her fork on the plate with a great clatter.

"Yes, Miss Guest—Miss Clare and Miss Bab."

I really began to feel uncomfortable. Her color rose, and she looked me in the face in a half-proud, half-fearful way as if she resented the inquiry. It was a relief to me, when, with some show of confusion, she at length stammered, 'Oh, yes, I beg your pardon, of course they were! How very foolish of me. They are quite well, thank you," and so was silent again. But I understand now. Mr. Guest had omitted to mention my name, and she had taken me for someone else of whose holiday she knew. I gathered from the aspect of the table and the room that the Guests saw a good deal of company, and it was a very natural mistake, though by the grace look she bent upon my plate it was clear that the young hostess was taking herself to task for it; not without, I might have read in the twinkling smile at the corners of her mouth, a humorous sense of the slip, and perhaps of the difference between myself and the gentleman whose part I had been unwittingly supporting. Meanwhile I had a chance of making a her speedy[illegible] and a Dresden chinaman, she was so frail and pretty.

"You were nearly drowned, or something of the kind, were you not?" she asked, after an interval during which we had both talked to others.

"Well, not precisely. Some of us fancied I was in danger, and behaved in the pluckiest manner—so bravely that I can almost feel sorry that the danger was not there to dignify her heroism."

"That was like her," she answered, in a tone a little soothed. "Bab always must have thought her a terrible tomboy."

While she was speaking here came one of those terrible lulls in the talk, and Mr. Guest, overhearing, cried: "Who is that you are abusing, my dear? Let us all share in the fun."

"It is no one of whom you have ever heard, papa," she answered archly, "it is a person in whom Mr.—Mr. Hersapith" [I had murmured my name as she stumbled—"and I are interested. Now, tell me, did you not think me unmannerly in apparently leaving the slightest bit toward me, and opening her eyes as she looked into mine, I saw that it was a boy who had spent the day in a dusty room in Great Scotland Yard was sufficiently interesting.

"No," I said, lowering my voice in imitation of hers. "No, Miss Guest, I did not think so at all. I thought your sister a brave little thing—and careless, as children are apt to be, but likely to grow into a charming girl."

I wondered, marking how she bit her lip and refrained from assent, whether, impossible as it must seem to anyone looking in her face, there might not be something of the stern about my beautiful neighbor. Her look, when she spoke of her sister, seemed to import no great good will.

"So that is your opinion?" she said, after a pause. "Do you know," with a laughing glance, "that some people think I am like her?"

"Yes?" I answered gravely. "Well, I should be able to judge, who have seen you both and yet am not an old friend. And I think you are both like and unlike. Your sister has very beautiful eyes"—she lowered hers swiftly—"and hair like yours, but her features are not even very distinctive. I can no more fancy Bab in your place than I can picture you, Miss Guest, as I saw her for the first time—and on many after occasions," I added, laughing as much to cover my own hardihood as at the queer little flame I had evoked up.

"Thank you, Mr. Hersapith," she replied with coldness, though she had blushed darkly to her ears. "That I think, must be enough of compliments for to-night—as you are an old friend." And she turned away, leaving me to curse my folly in saying so much, when our acquaintance was as yet in the bud, and as unexplicable to everyman as to a transportee below zero.

A moment later the ladies left us. The flush I had brought to her cheek still lingered there, as she swept past me with a wondrous show of dignity in one so young. Mr. Guest came down and took her place—that of host—at the "head of berries," and our adventures there, while the rest—older friends—listened indulgently or struck in from time to time with their own biggest fish and dead-Best flies.

I used to wonder why women like Miss Guest [illegible] they [illegible] more joy—I am fain to think they do—out of a scrambling tea up three whirs of stairs in Penny Court, than from the very same materials—and comfort without—in their own house. I imagine it is for the same reason that the bachelor finds a singular charm in a lady's drawing room, and there, if anywhere, sees her with a reverent mind—a charm and a subservience which I felt to the full in the Guests' drawing room—a room rich in school orders and a curious blending of luxury and comfort. Yet it depressed me. I felt alone. Mr. Guest had passed on to other, and I lived aside, the case that I was a pod of those people troubling me in a manner as new as it was absurd. If I had been in the [illegible] of a despising "society." Miss Guest was at the piano, the centre of a circle of soft light, which showed up also a handsome, dark-skinned boy, seen leaning over her with the air of one used to the position. Everyone else was so [illegible] that I may have been alone as well as felt, forlorn, and meeting her eyes could have fancied she was regretting my presence, and wishing me out triumph. It must have been mere fancy, bred of self-consciousness, for the next moment she beckoned me to her, and I was by her side.

"There, Jack; Mr. Hersapith is going to talk to me about X-ray now, so that I don't want you any longer, please, and won't mind stopping for the school-room—Fraulein and Clare are there—and telling Clare, that—that, anything!"

There is no piece of ill-breeding so lead to my mind as for a man who is at home in a house to flaunt his favor with the face of another guest. That young lawyer's manner as he left her, and the quelle of perfect intelligence with which passed between us, was such a breach of good manners as would have ruffled anyone. They ruffled me—yes, me, although it was no affair of mine—but the calm of Miss Guest, or how he conducted himself—so that I could do nothing but stand by the piano and sulk. One bear makes another, you know.

She did not speak, and I, content to watch the slender hands sliding over the keys, would not, until my eyes fell upon her right wrist. She had put off her bracelets and no disclosed a pretty little [illegible] about which—not its newness—so startled me that I said abruptly, "What is very strange! Pray tell me how you did it?"

She looked up, saw what I meant, and, stopping hastily, put on her bracelets; to all appearance so vexed by my thoughtless question, and anxious to hide the mark, that I was quick to say humbly, "I ask because your sister hurt her wrist in exactly the same place on the day when she thought I was in trouble, and the coincidence struck me."

"Yes, I remember," looking at me as if thought with a certain suspicion, as though she were not sure that I was giving the right motive. "I did this much in the same way. By falling, I mean. It's [illegible] intelligence, isn't it?"

Bishop Farthing and Public Life

His Lordship Appeals to all Parties and Sections to Follow the Premier's Lead

"It is a grand lead that Sir Robert Borden has given us in this present crisis," said Bishop Farthing at St. Matthias' church Montreal, on Sunday, "and I would appeal to all political parties, and all sections of the community to sink every other consideration and unite with him to drive out unrighteousness from the administration of public affairs, and to purify the public life of Canada—to put country before party and God before self-interest."

"This is a time of crisis, not only in the Empire, in the physical struggle taking place in Europe, but also in the Dominion.

"We are all suffering in the present war, but what is pressing upon my mind and causing me apprehension is the question, 'What if this suffering should all be in vain?—What if this people turn a deaf ear to God and, when the war is over, go back to worldliness and covetousness and unrighteousness?

"There are signs of discouragement and signs of great encouragement. Our hearts are oppressed when we see the carelessness and the covetousness which prevails in some quarters, when we would even risk injuring the efficiency of our soldiers and endangering their lives in order that they might add a few dollars to their profits.

"On the other hand, there are great encouragements. When we see the noble response made to the appeal for men, when we see the self-sacrificing spirit of many, one feels that there is much indeed to encourage. But there has been no sign of greater [illegible]-than when the Premier of this dominion placed himself at the head of the movement for national righteousness, when he so scathingly denounced the graft which was revealed. That his denunciation of the wrong within his own party should be followed by such a splendid response on the low standard prevalent in our political life."

Brutal Cruelty Of The Uhlans

Canadian Gives Personal Testimony of Atrocities Committed by German Soldiers

In the course of a letter to a Canadian friend, Corp. Denis Cockrill of the 5th Battalion, Canadian first Contingent writes:

"It's the same story all along. No one can realize what things are like here. You hear in Canada all sorts of tales from Germany and about the war, but, like a whole lot more, thought they were just yarns. At——we needed some linen and I had on a pair of underliners. I rode into the village to find a blacksmith. I found the forge but no blacksmith. He was in the village, but he is crippled for life. As the Germans beat through the village, about a dozen of them stopped at the forge to have some shoeing done to their horses. I was through they informed him that he would never shoe any horses for the Germans and believe me, I was glad to see what they meant they had put his hands on the anvil and smashed them with a sledge hammer.

"At our No. 3 company billet, they had shot the old man and the son had his legs all scarce, where the Germans had run forks in to make him dance. The girl, about 14 years old, was about the same and she could be when our doctors arrived. It's sure the limit the way the Prussian horse and foot went through the country. The Saxons seem to be good scouts. When you come and listen to these things you feel like tearing the soul casing off every German you meet. Another of the regular machine gun corporals was telling me of the great time they had when they [illegible] by surprise. The Germans, it was supposed, had all been beaten it, as our boys came up. He was amongst the first aside.

"As they were passing the convent which is right on the left of the main road, a few boys issued a scream. The section, about 16 men, beat it to and, surprised about a dozen Germans who had been told too busy to think of retreating, or who, apparently, did not know anything about it. There was no trial, the evidence was too plain. I asked him, 'What did you do?' and there was a volume of meaning in his brief reply, 'We saw them off.'

Clearing Shoes.

Very few people have the least idea of how to clean a pair of boots. The mistake that nearly every one makes is of failing to brush the boot clean before putting on the blacketing. After other blunder is that of putting on too much blacketing and not working it well into the leather before starting to polish the boot. When cleaning brown boots it is best to put all the dirt out before putting on the polish. Otherwise you cover the dirt with a coat of polish and have it there for good.

ARCTIC CENSUS TAKING

M. VANESSE HAD A HERCULEAN TASK IN THE FAR NORTH.

Canadian Government's Agent Who Counted Noses In Baffin Island and at Port Burwell and Hudson Straits Found Out Many Curious Things About the Eskimo—Canoe and Comic Opera Fun.

"Not lost, but gone into a big book" is not an incorrect manner of speaking in regard to much valuable information collected at great cost by Ottawa officials, and which fails to reach the eye of anybody save the diligent browser amongst Government archives. Germany has Sir Ernest Shackleton's present expedition into the far north, and current controversy concerning the blond Eskimos met with on a former expedition, but the south side of Hudson Straits, is worthy of attention. M. Vanesse was historiographer of the Canadian Government Scientific Expedition under Capt. Bernier. Although the census was taken under instructions from the Census and Statistics branch, his report covers many points of considerable importance to ethnological grounds.

The Bernier expedition was experienced by the officials, notwithstanding the fact of an experience. Asked their age, the invariably reply was "I don't count, no," and endless calculations barking back to outstanding local events, scores of years since, had to be entered into by the native before the officials could make their approximate entry in the census returns. Eskimos count easily up to 20, above that their mode of determination is as long as intricate. The terms "year," "month," "day," "hour" are absolute mysteries to an Eskimo, and his language has no equivalent for them. Where only "summer and "winter," the latter lasting nine or ten months of the year. There was a wonderful difficulty to ascertain from the head of an Igloo if he was married or single, for these words they have no counterpart either, save for "child" and "family." M. Vanesse in the end managed to make himself understood by asking first if they had a wife (family home), a koney (wife), a pickaninny (child), and the number of family surnames effectually hides the number of the married relationships of the same generation, or of the generation before, which added to the census-taker's perplexities.

Their inability to reckon with much accuracy higher than the total number of fingers and thumbs of their pair of hands made it burdensome to ascertain any idea of an individual's yearly earnings. On an average these vary somewhere between from $800 to $1,000, but worthy of course, a vast deal more if these centers of the frozen solitudes could market the product of their toil and vator in 1870 to civilization's commercial markets. Such an income as given would be accounted for by the hunter's capture of 40 or more polar bears, of anywhere from twenty-five or thirty to one hundred foxes, of possibly twice as many foxes, of eight to ten wolves, and probably of hundreds of large salmon, each weighing ten, twenty, or thirty pounds, and which he throws to his dogs.

Were the Eskimo honestly treated by the trading ships which visit his bleak way annually, an Eskimo's fortune would be so handsomely fortunate. The traders "skin" him as thoroughly as he skins the fur bearing of his prowess with spear or gun. He will go on the floe or in his kyak on the frigid, funereal waters of the inlets. Subsequently at the outpost factories he will receive equally guileless — his money, or any remaining [illegible] happens to have, for a few pounds of biscuits and tobacco, a few quarts of molasses, pipes, matches, some few yards of showy cotton goods. God help the poor Eskimo! And the Indians of Quebec or Ontario were not better off. Nobody under either French or English auspices, it may be, but at least he passed his life and pursued his hunting under circumstances in which the savage life is little short of a "cold-storage hell."

M. Vanesse bears testimony to the zealous work of English Church missionaries among these northern and high latitudes, especially in influencing them to abandon polygamy, accomplished practically in the past thirty years. M. Vanesse met only one case of this pagan vice in taking the last census, and the lady (igloo chief) who acknowledged it seemed to be ashamed of it." Generally speaking, he states, the Eskimo does not attain a very advanced age. Some have been met, however, aged 60 to 65 years. The average length of life of this people is from 25 to 40 years. They are entitled early for domestic pairing. There are couples of 9 and 11 years. The children live together in the igloo as man and wife. The union is dissolved regularly for the wants of the companion. After a few months or even a few years, the husband becomes a married life; if any friction occurs under the igloo between the two, the couple separate without noise, and for the time being live in igloos apart again. A Christian can hardly honor the name of "marriage" as the unions of the Eskimo. They are unions, are, for the most part, simply provisions pairings. There he tells es to the gradual change in affairs that is coming about through Anglican mission effort as mentioned.

Her Name.

"I beg your pardon, madam," said the society reporter, approaching one of the occupants of a private box at the opera, "but will you oblige me by giving me your name?"

"Mrs. Archibald Jo Neese," replied the lady haughtily.

"Pardon me," rejoined the reporter, "I did not quite catch your first name."

"Jo Neese."

"May I ask you to spell it."

"Certainly," said the woman; "J-o-n-e-s Neese."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Tattooing on the thighs shows that a Burmese boy has reached manhood. The First Language.

No one of the existing languages has any legitimate claim to be considered the original of the family or languages standing to the others as Latin, for instance, stands to Italian and French. Of an original primitive language of mankind the most patient research has found no trace. All of them—Assyrian, Phoenician, Hebrew, Arabic—are sister languages, pointing back to an earlier parent language, which has long disappeared. Since the historical period man has done little in the way of the absolute creation of language. The work had already been accomplished ages before the birth of written literature.—New York American.

Chinese Filial Piety.

The following Chinese story illustrates the national regard for filial piety. A man and his wife maltreated the husband's mother. As a punishment the sons of the act was openly cursed, the active agents were put to death, and the mother of the wife was beaniooed, branded and exiled for her daughter's crime. The house in which the offenders lived was dug up from the foundations. Moreover, the school are of the district were precluded from attending public examinations, and even the magistrates were deprived of their offices. These drastic measures were designed to render the empire filial.

GRAND TRUNK CAMPAIGNS TO BRING AMERICAN TOURISTS TO CANADA

The Grand Trunk System, by giving the widest possible circulation to its illustrated folders descriptive of the beauties of Canada, and by its general advertising, is inviting the thousands of United States tourists who ordinarily spend the summer pleasures in Europe to visit Canada this year.

"The most charming summer resorts in America," is the claim put forward by the railway for these Canadian beauty spots. Among the literature which is being used in this campaign is a handsome illustrated booklet of sixty four pages entitled "Playgrounds of Canada." It deals with practically all the Dominion's summer resorts and gives visitors full information as to the game and fishing laws, canoeing regulations, etc. It is an admirable guide for Canadians who are planning vacations as well as for their cousins to the south, and it can be obtained on request from C. E. Horning, D.P.A., Toronto, Ont.

Overwhelmed With Congratulations

The Canadians' Brilliant Charge Excites Warmest Praise from All Quarters

Premier Borden and General Hughes Minister of Militia are overwhelmed with congratulations concerning the bravery shown by the Canadians at Langemarck.

The Premier received the welcome news at his residence where he is still confined by ill-health. The Premier at once cabled his congratulations to General Alderson, commanding the Canadian Division in the following terms:

"Report of splendid gallantry and efficiency of division under your command has thrilled all Canada with pride. Warmest congratulations.

Premier Borden during the afternoon received the following cable from Earl Grey, former Governor-General of Canada:

"Reports gallant conduct Canadians have made me more proud, happy, delighted, than I can tell you. Ten thousand congratulations. Long live Canada."

Sir Robert answered this message with the following:

"Deeply appreciate your message. Canada is very proud that her sons have upheld so worthily the splendid traditions of our great pioneer races."

Another congratulatory cablegram reached the Minister of Militia from Colonel Lord Brooke, who inspected the last annual training camp at Petawawa:

"Heartiest congratulations on magnificent behavior of Canadian troops."

General Hughes sent a message in reply to Lord Brooke as follows:

"Sincere thanks for message. Please convey through Sir John to Canadians the pride and joy of their comrades in Canada for the part they have so nobly played. Canadians are justly proud that there was no surrender and also that by whatever fault the guns were lost, they were not allowed to remain in possession of the enemy."

The minister also received the following cablegram from Col. John Carson, of Montreal, his personal representative in England, which reads as follows:

"Our division has covered itself with glory and nobly upheld Canada's name and fame."

Speaking of the details of the battle, which have filtered through, General Hughes said:

Judging by he magnificen reports received from all quarters Canada has every reason o be proud of her splendid sons. They seem to have more than done their duty against overwhelming odds. While we rejoice at the victory, I personally mourn the loss of the gallant boys. Many of them have been my friends from their boyhood and others of them associates in rifle shooting and in drill. Many of the younger boys I regard as my pupils in military work and some of them I taught as pupils in Toronto in school life. We are proud of them all.

"Bitter and long though the struggle will be one thing must be accomplished. In addition now to the cause of fighting for liberty, Canada has the blood of her best boys to avenge."

The whole of the Paris press pays homage to the admirable and marvellous dash of the Canadian contingent.

Lord Charles Bersford, inspecting the Northamptonshire Volunteers, said their hearts had been thrilled by the story of the gallantry of the Canadians. The Canadians saved the day, and the story of their glorious achievement will run through the Empire, giving a fresh stimlus to our patriotic sons across the sea. They had already set what the Canadians were capable of in previous wars.

Praise For Tommy Atkins

A Canadian Shows Admiration for English Tommies in Expressive Slang

Corporal Denis Cockrill, who is with the machine gun section of the 5th Battalion, writes thus to a friend in Canada:

"Naturally I have been lots of England Tommies before, and always thought they were a kind of slim lot, but, believe me, they are copper bottom, all wool and a yard wide, when it comes down to brass tacks. It's just great to see the way they pull together. I never met a finer bunch. They are tough guys from away back, but have hearts of gold."

Declaring that her husband laid her husband laid her over his knee and spanked her with a clipper, Mrs. John F. Bebbel, New York has sued for a separation.

Moving by parcel post is a new idea which promises trouble for the postman.

Recruiting Brisker After the Battle

Men are Rushing From all Points to Don Uniform for the Front

OTTAWA, April 26.—Fighting at the front is sending men to recruiting offices all over Canada. From every part of the Dominion comes the word that volunteers are more numerous and more eager this morning than at any time since the first wild rush at the beginning of war.

Volunteers have been amply sufficient from the first. Patriotism, taste for adventure, the example of friends and neighbors and desire for employment in an attractive service have been the chief motives which have led men to don khaki.

To-day the spirit has changed. Red-blooded lust for fight is hurrying men to the points where rifles may be had. The news that Canadians have stood up in the man gauge, have exchanged blows with fighting Germans in force, recovered their guns which others lost, and throughout three fierce days beside and against seasoned soldiers so conducted themselves that they gained praise from their commander and thanks from their king; these things have moved young men strongly.

That is the word from all Canada this morning. "More men offering than ever before" is the word which comes from every divisional commander.

WENT TO SAVE CAT, GETS SHOCK OF 22,000 VOLTS

FORT WILLIAM, April 26.—Norman Taylor, chief engineer of the tug Morrison, is in the hospital in a very serious condition as a result of burns and shock received when he came in contact with an electric power line containing 22,000 volts, late Sunday night.

Taylor climbed one of the high poles for a cat which had ran up to the cross arms. When he reached the top he placed one hand on the cat at same time his foot came in contact with a ground wire running down the pole. He was knocked off and fell horribly burned. The cat was burned to a cinder. The city was thrown in darkness for about ten minutes and the street railway service was put out of commission for some time.

DOING THEIR SHARE.

Canadian Farmers Engaged in Greatest Seeding In History.

The farmers in Canada are now engaged upon the work of seeding, the greatest acreage which has ever been given over to the production of grain in the history of the Dominion. While statistics portraying the actual increase in area will not be given until the Federal authorities at Ottawa compile in the late spring the reports from their correspondents on work done, the findings of investigations which have already been completed point clearly to the conclusion that the additions throughout the western provinces, at least, will be very considerable in extent. Officials of the Canadian Northern recently inaugurated a survey of fall plowing along the lines of the company in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta. Figures which were sent in, of course, deal with C.N.R. only, but they may be taken as an indication of the manner in which the farmers west of the Great Lakes have responded to the call for a greater production of foodstuffs in Canada. Five hundred and thirty-nine agents contributed to the report in order that it would be thoroughly representative of the territory served.

Altogether, along the Canadian Northern lines in the prairie provinces the increase may be averaged at forty per cent. The figures give a total acreage plowed last fall of 6,181,278 acres. This is an increase of 1,766,108 acres over the preceding year. Figured at 21.28 bushels to the acre—the fall acreage of the yield in western provinces in 1914 for wheat, oats and barley—the grain yield from fall-plowed lands along the Canadian Northern in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta would be 132,167,818.88 bushels. On the yield basis of last year the increased acreage would produce 37,576,389.04 bushels. But this will be cut off per for grain production in the West and that average will probably be exceeded in 1915.

The largest acreage for any one station was reported from Star City, in the black loam district in Northern Saskatchewan. It was given as 110,000 and the increase over last year as 40 per cent. Salsberry, close to Star City, reported 75,000 acres. Melfort, nearly on the same line, claimed an increase of 100 per cent.

Heathern reported an increase of 300 per cent. over last year. Rosthern Lake's 50,000 acres is an increase of 75 per cent. To the north, Hafford, on the new line connecting the cities of Prince Albert and Edmonton, reported 72,000 acres, an area 36 per cent. greater than in 1914. To the south of the Saskatchewan, Delisle, on the Saskatoon-Calgary line, reported 88,000 acres, which is an increase of 25 per cent. Marshall, on the main line towards the Alberta boundary, returned 50,000 acres. In Alberta, the town of Innisfail reports 40,000 acres, an increase of 20 per cent. Stetler, in the central portion of the province, gave 30,000, an increase of 20 per cent. Calgary, close to Calgary, reported 40,000 acres and Delia, the next station, 47,000 acres, which is an increase of 200 per cent. Two towns on the same line, closer to the Saskatchewan-Alberta line — Cereal and Chinook — report 15,000 acres each. In the former the increase is given at 1,400 per cent., while of the latter place there was no fall plowing done in 1914.

Even in the older-settled parts of the West, there are gratifying increases. At Morris, in Manitoba, the acreage is given at 20,000, and the increase 35 per cent. At Gladstone there are 20,000 acres, which represent a 25 per cent. increase. At Spiritwood, in the Carman subdivision, the agent reports 40,000, which is an increase of 15 per cent. At Dauphin the Hartney district the figures jump to 70,000, which represents an increase of 70 per cent. Kipling reports 25,000, an increase of 90 per cent. As these are the conspicuous returns only it is apparent that Canada is doing her allotted part of the task which is at present confronting the Empire.

The Use of Iron.

Iron has been known to men for a very long time. In the time of the Assyrians it was extensively used, iron saws, knives and other tools having been found by Layard at Nimrud. Homer refers to the forging of iron, while the hardening and tempering of steel appear to have been operations in common use among the early Greeks. The employment of a kind of bellows for the forging of tools, presumably of iron, figures in Egyptian sculpture of 1500 B. C. Cast iron appears to have been discovered about 250 B. C. Through the agency of the Romans the manufacture of iron was introduced all over the then known world.

OTTAWA, April 28.—(Special.)—Gen. Hughes intimated last night that orders for shells for the allies to the extent of 175,000,000 were being executed in Canada. He gave the further most important information that arrangements at Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., and Cydney, B.C., were now far forwarded that henceforth Canada would refine her own copper, purify her own nickel and manufacture her own brass for war munitions.

SOLDIERS OF CANADA ARE POISONED BY THE GERMANS

LONDON April 27.—(Special.)—The following announcement was made by the War Office last night:

"It is officially reported on medical evidence that Canadian soldiers lost their lives in the recent fighting not from wounds, but from poisoning gases employed by the enemy, which means of warfare is contrary to The Hague Convention."

The War Office has issued an appeal for home-made respirators for the troops as a protection against the asphixiating gases used by the Germans.

Snake Causes Auto Wreck

Runaway Follows Owner's Effort to Kill Copperhead on Seat

EAST ORANGE, N.J., April 27.—James Morrison of Orange went automobiling with his family this afternoon and when over the Second Mountain drove into a dirt road so that his wife and two children could pick wild flowers. They left the car under a large oak tree and sauntered off.

Half an hour later Mrs. Morrigan a her two children returned to the car for the return trip. Coiled up on the front seat was a large copperhead snake. The mother and children, dropping the flowers, ran away screaming.

Mr. Morrison returned to the car, and as the branches hung low over it, pushed it back to the macadam road of Eagle Rock Avenue. Getting a stout club from the woods, he swung at the snake, missed it, and accidentally gave the car a push and down the hill it went.

The grade was very steep and the automobile ran through a wooden fence into the farm of Jacob Miller, striking a calf, killing a couple of chickens and finally halting after it had torn away part of Miller's back porch. By this time there was not much left of the car, and Mr. Morrison with his wife and two children walked four miles home. The snake escaped.

Capture German Trenches and Guns

The French and Belgians Have Captured Six Quick Firing Guns and 200 Prisoners

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, April 28.—An official announcement given out from the Belgian Army headquarters reads: "The situation on April 27th at 6 p.m. showed that the Germany artillery was evidencing little activity on the front held by the Belgian army.

"The French, aided by Belgian artillery and infantry, have taken Lizerne and several German trenches in the direction of Hetsas. More than one hundred dead were counted on the battlefield. The booty comprises six machine guns and 200 prisoners. The attack continues."

WHERE ARE THE 48TH HIGHLANDERS

(Canadian Press Special)

TORONTO, April 28.—The usual weekly cable from Colonel Currie arrived today saying simply: "I am safe." It was sent from Hazebrouk and seems to dispose of the theory that his regiment (15th battalion) were at St. Julien. Possibly the Highlanders were in reserve.

The Dangers Of Prohibition

Senator Martine of New Jersey, Thinks Prohibition Lowers the Standard of Morality

CHICAGO, Ill., April 27.—"Prohibition is a failure, and a failure of hypocrisy," said Senator James E. Martin, of New Jersey, in Chicago on his way to Honolulu with a party of seventy legislators and their families. "I say sorry to see Illinois towns voting for it. They will regret it later. Statistics show prohibition does not prohibit. It changes a legitimate business, capable of being regulated, into a soaking business in dark corners. It lowers the quality of liquor sold. Statistics show consumption is as large as ever. Georgia is a shining example. In the biggest and finest hotel in Atlantic I saw more highballs and cocktails than I have ever seen anywhere else in my life. We tried prohibition in my own home town of Plainfield. In place of a reasonable number of regulated saloons we soon had hundreds of little sneak holes. Supervision was impossible. Knockout drops and every vile substitute for liquor was sold, and in that one dry year we had five times the usual number of arrests and drunkenness and disorder. At the end of that year everybody voted for the saloons to come back. The people of the West will find they are lowering instead of raising their standards of morality, and they will be glad to go back to the license system."

Ypres Battle Still Raging

But German Design Has Failed, and Allies' Position Firmly Established

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, April 28.—The Times correspondent in northern France says the German design to turn the left of the British position at Ypres and drive the Allies out of Belgium has failed. The battle still rages furiously, but the German advance has been definitely checked. A deep bid plan to force the passage of the Yser canal has failed, and the Allies are again firmly established on the eastern side of the canal. Large reinforcements have been brought up and the new line has been strengthened and consolidated. There are signs that the German offensive is already weakening.

KINGSTON PRISONER COMMITS SUICIDE

(Canadian Press Special)

KINGSTON, April 28.—Edward King, serving a life sentence for murder committed in Manitoba eight years ago, committed suicide by hanging in his cell, while temporarily insane.

FIRED ON ORPHANAGE

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, April 28.—Refugees are coming in from Poperinghe, Belgium, which is being shelled by the Germans. The Germans fired on an orphanage killing three nuns who were assisting to remove the children, and injuring several inmates.

Barbarous Work Of German Soldiers

Scathing Criticism of German Military Methods Passed by Lord Kitchener

LONDON, April 27.—The British parliament occupied itself solely today with discussions on the treatment of British prisoners of war in Germany. In both the house of lords and the house of commons gratitude was expressed for the efforts that have been made by the United States to ameliorate the conditions of the prisoners.

Lord Kitchener made a scathing indictment of German military methods. He said:

"Germany has for many years posed before the civilized world as a great military nation. She has abundantly proved her military skill and courage. But surely it was also for her to set up a standard of military honor and conduct which would gain the respect, if not the friendship of nations. Instead, she has stooped to acts which will surely stain indelibly her military history, and which would vie with the barbarous savagery of the dervishes of the Sudan.

"I do not think there could be a soldier of any nationality, even amongst the Germans themselves, who is not heartily ashamed of the way which has been brought upon the profession of arms. The usages of war have not only been outraged by the infliction of cruelties on British prisoners, but by a contrivance which must have arrested your forethought and which would vie with the barbarous savagery of the dervishes of the Sudan.

A Village Tale

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1915, by the McClure Newspaper Syndicate.

It was when Uncle Ebenezer Davidson was home after a fortnight's visit that Silas Thompson and Ben Goodheart met at the postoffice one evening, and as they sat around and whittled and waited for the mail to come Silas finally queried:

"Eben, you've been to Cat Hill a hundred times, I reckon, and just how far do you call it from Hopeville?"

"Just as far as it is," answered Eben after thinking for about three minutes.

"And that's ten miles?"

"Who said it was?"

"I say so. I carried the mail on that road for three long years, and I reckon I know the distance purty well. I asked you because some one said you call it only nine and a half miles."

"And that's what I'm saying this minit. It's nine miles and a half to an inch."

"Say, Eben, didn't you measure it with a purty short tapeline?" asked Silas as he whittled away.

"It's just nine and a half," answered Eben in a short way.

"It's exactly ten."

"Not an inch over nine and a half!"

"Not an inch under ten miles!"

"Silas, are you crazy or a born fool?" asked Eben as his hair began to curl.

"I ain't a fool nor crazy, but it's nine miles and a half to Cat Hill!" yelled Silas in reply.

They jawed about it half an hour longer, and they parted bad friends, for the crowd of two or three who'd been put up a sign reading, "Cat Hill—Ten Miles." That made things worse, and a fair dozen families were mixed up in the quarrel. Almost every night in the year the two men met at the postoffice and declared they wouldn't notice each other, they had their own reasons for feeling each other's feelings. Silas would scowl across Hen Billings and giggle and chuckle and say:

"Did you hear that Cat Hill had moved itself a half a mile, Enos? She used to be ten miles from Hopeville, but she moved up to nine and a half to accommodate certain smart folks."

Eben would be hurt and mad, too, at even, and he'd look at Jabez White and say:

"Heard about that escaped lunatic, Jabez? They say he's measurin' the road from here to Cat Hill with a tow string and that it keeps him crazy because he can't make but nine and a half miles of it."

The two men never came to blows, but they never met without trying to hurt each other's feelings. If one reported anything the other opposed it, and they were contrary in politics, religion and all public improvements. One day Moses Crawford, who lived by a cave-in, and though Silas helped to dig him out the chance was one to say:

"Mebbe this narrow escape from death will make him turn to the truth in the future and admit it's ten miles to Cat Hill."

It wasn't four weeks after that when Silas had a new log roll over him, and as he lay there all flattened out Eben came up and looked on him and said:

"He seems to be a goner, but if the Lord lets him live it will be that he may take half a mile off the distance to Cat Hill and save his soul from perdition."

Folks thought the dispute might wear itself out in a year or two, but it didn't. It went on for nearly long years and never grew cold. Eben would have given a dollar to live, but he didn't want to leave Silas behind to crow over him, and Silas would not go to Syracuse to run a sawmill for the same reason. At length Eben lay on his dying bed, and just the minute the doctor told him his case was hopeless he sat up and said:

"Then I want you to send for Silas Tompkins. I've got something I want to say to him before I die."

Silas didn't hang back about coming, and after he'd arrived and said he was sorry Eben said to him:

"Silas, how far is it to Cat Hill?"

"It's just ten miles, Eben, jest ten."

"But I'm a dyin' man."

"Yes, I know, but it's jest ten miles."

"It's only nine and a half, Silas, and you are as big a fool as you was twenty years ago!"

"Your own words, Eben!"

"Mine and a half!"

Silas went away, and Eben died and a year later Silas was called to go. When he realized it he said to his wife:

"Martha, don't let anybody bluff you when I'm gone. It's ten miles to Cat Hill, and you stick to it if you have to dive on cold taters."

"I'll do it, Silas," she answered.

In a day or two he was dead and buried, and as the usual crowd met at the postoffice in the evening the talk was all about the two men and their lifelong dispute. Some said one was right and some said the other. There was a stranger present, and by and by he pricked up his ears and asked:

"Was you folks talkin' about the distance to Cat Hill?"

"We was," says Jesse Campbell, and he goes on to explain about Eben and Silas.

"Why, they were both blamed idiots!" says the stranger when he had the facts in hand. "I'm the man they operated and surveyed that road, and it's just exactly nine and three-quarters of a mile long!"

Words Not Adequate.

Human emotions may be portrayed with words. Anger and every emotion are common qualities, generally understood. But the external spectacle, the flashes of color of the 21st Battalion. Citizens are suggesting that it would be a nice thing to have Mayor Sutherland declare a half holiday for the occasion so as to make it possible for all to see the interesting ceremony.

An order has been issued by the Adjutant-General at Ottawa, stating that in accordance with the expressed wishes of His Majesty, King George, there will be no dinners, revues or celebrations among military units on his Majesty's birthday June 3rd. Flags may fly, but the King desires all other military demonstrations to be cancelled.

Maj.-Gen. Hughes, Minister of Militia has officially designated the mobilization points in each military district for camps this summer. They are as follows: Nova Scotia, Aldershot; P.E.I., and New Brunswick, Sussex; Quebec, Valcartier; Ontario, Kingston, Niagara and London; Manitoba and Saskatchewan, Sewell; Alberta and British Columbia jointly with the exception of cavalry at either Vernon or Sidcam, on the mountains near Kamloops.

Early Western Banking.

Here is an odd item written by an observer who visited Cleveland in 1846. It will have an amusing flavor for the modern banker.

"In the western states the business of private banking has become to a considerable extent. A deficiency of banking capital and the demands of commerce called it into existence, and the competition for money has made it the most certain, and perhaps the most profitable business of the west."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Dark Blue Gabardine Used In This Chic Spring Gown.

WITH SHORT SKIRT.

The tailored suit must be reckoned with in the spring as one of the necessities. Worn with a handsome blouse the tailored frock becomes suitable for an afternoon tea and with a plain blouse can be used for shopping and morning wear. The tailleur shown in this illustration is simple, but built along graceful lines. The skirt is short and gored; the hip length jacket has high placed, simulated pockets bound in braid. The buttons are of dark satin, and the collar and cuffs are of blue and white checked pique.

THOSE TO BE ENVIED.

Those are most to be envied who succeed learn to expect nothing for which they have not worked hard and who never acquire the habit of pitying themselves overmuch, even in the days when hope seems to work in vain.—Lord Macaulay.

Within The Military Circle

What is Transpiring Among the Soldier Boys at Belleville and Kingston.

All articles and notes under this head are passed by the commanding officer of the 39th Regiment and authentic in every particular.

BELLEVILLE

The members of the 49th Regiment had a march out this morning. Though not in uniform the men made a creditable appearance.

Sgt. N. Yelland and Drummer E. Morrow, of the 46th Regiment, Port Hope, have been ordered to report at Belleville and will leave in a few days.

The soldiers made a fine appearance as they returned from parade yesterday afternoon, and as they swing from West Bridge to Everett street, to the strain of the new military band, the step was perfect, and the stocky boys carried themselves as though they would not object to a "turn with the Germans."

The band which has been organized in connection with the 39th Battalion here, is improving in way of furnishing music. It turns out daily to parade with the battalion, and the marching tuns are much appreciated by the men.

KINGSTON

The local staff of the R.C.H.A. has been cancelled according to a recent militia order. This will mean that the staff of the unit will be organized and maintained overseas. The unit will total over 40 officers and this may mean that officers now serving at Toronto Point Frederick may be called overseas to make it possible for the staff to be maintained.

Lieut.-Col. Hughes has promised the citizens of Kingston a big treat out in cricket field some day this week by bringing the colors of the 21st Battalion. Citizens are suggesting that it would be a nice thing to have Mayor Sutherland declare a half holiday for the occasion so as to make it possible for all to see the interesting ceremony.

HOW TO GROW BEANS

A popular bulletin on "Vegetable Growing," No. 231, by S. C. Johnston, B.S.A., has been issued by the Ontario Department of Agriculture. Both backyard gardening for the urbanite, and the farmer's garden, receive special treatment, and the instructions given are in the main simple enough for the comprehension of a school boy. A list of the best varieties of vegetables for home growing is given, together with a very useful planting calendar, and illustrations of the implements needed for garden work are given. The making and controlling of hotbeds and coldframes is also fully described. In fact all that an amateur vegetable grower should know is told. The bulletin may be had free upon application.

HORTICULTURAL SOCIETIES

The annual report of the Horticultural Societies of Ontario for 1914, just issued, gives interesting particulars of the activities of these organizations, and in addition supplies a number of instructive articles on the culture of sweet peas, roses, peonies, and other flowers, and also, together with references to the latest novelties in horticulture. Articles are also devoted to back-yard development, to home gardens and surroundings, to school gardens, and to the educational features of public parks. The report is profusely illustrated with photo-engravings of model gardens and borders, and of roses and other popular flowers.

A Physician's Opinion

A physician who uses Grape-Nuts in his family was recently asked his opinion of this food. He said—

"It is a concentrated, palatable, nourishing and healthful food. Sweetened slightly with good rich cream, Grape-Nuts makes a very toothsome dish."

There's a reason for these excellent qualities in Grape-Nuts. This food is made of whole wheat and barley, thoroughly baked and processed to render it easily and quickly digestible —generally in about one hour.

Grape-Nuts contains all the rich nutriment of the grains, including the phosphorous, iron, sulphur, and other mineral elements so necessary for proper nourishment of body and nerve cells. It's a healthful food, and economical also.

Prof. Buck's Address to Canadian Club

Present Conditions in Germany Subject of Former Professor of War

The crowded lecture hall of the Y. M. C. A. last night to hear Prof. Buck Lucke narrate his experiences as a prisoner of war in Germany, was a tribute to Mr. Lucke as a Canadian Belleville Boy, and also an evidence that Belleville's interest in the war is unabated. The address itself was in the form of an eyewitness' testimony and occupied nearly two hours. There were no "purple patches" or orator ical efforts. Mr. Lucke appeared in the role of a survivor in a grim disaster and the audience—to a man—realized that it was listening to a Canadian boy who had miraculously escaped from the jaws of death and the mouth of hell "De Profundis" (out of the depths) was the keynote of the address, which was listened to with eager and unflagging interest throughout. As Prof. Luck described his experiences in Germany; from the first fateful morning of the war, it seemed like a modern Dante's Inferno through whose depths, and tunnel-shaped hell, with its hideous horrors, we were being conducted by a living "Vergil." And it was with a sigh of relief and thankfulness—which the lecturer himself found breathing many times, he assured us—that we followed our guide out of the contracting circles of gloom, and into the pale precincts, and dreary concentration camps of Germany, into Holland, England, and Canada. This was a Paradise worthy of the contrast it was to make for Bernard. Prof. Luck has been pursuing post graduate studies for three years at the University of Leipzig, and has been in close contact with German thought and militarism, and has also been a close observer of the customs and life of the common people. Speaking generally Mr. Luck described the habits of the social set in Germany as licentious and loathsome. The State-church is municipal rather than moral and confirming the citizens—by royal mandate—but contributing nothing to the latter. The people are morally and spiritually. From August 1 to 3 Prof. Luck said Germany fully expected England to remain neutral. But on August 4th there was bitterly disillusioned, for on that crucial Tuesday when Germany treated her solemn "scrap of parchment" as a mere "scrap of paper," and marched her armed hordes into little Belgium, appeared the handwriting on the wall, which struck terror to the heart of the Kaiser. "Belshazzar" and his drunken war-lords —"Britain presents an ultimatum to Germany!"

Prof. Luck declared that the statement, published around the world, that all foreigners received 48 hours' notice to leave Germany, is a mistake, and that, far from being true, any foreigner attempting to leave the country without passports ran the risk of being shot on sight, as a spy. Mr. Luck related insane lengths, being especially directed against the Russians in the first month of the war. Everyone within sticks were stated to be full of cholera bacilli, and imaginary pestilences walked in darkness, and visionary and fantastic destruction wasted at noon day. Prof. Luck declared that the English ambassador was not friendly "Englandized," and was at no service to them at all in the hour of their need, and, indeed, pooh-poohed the imminent danger, while at that very moment he himself and entire staff were packing up to get out of Germany. Sir Edward Goschen should certainly be relieved of his unfriendliness, indifference and disdain to Canadians. I am afraid that forty years of diplomatic service is sometimes destructive to those noble qualities that make a good Christian gentleman and that the niceties and observations of court life and palace environment make some ambassadors like unto the Priest and the Levite, who "passed by on the other side."

"The Doctrine of Frightfulness" was dealt upon at length by the speaker. The atrocities at Louvain and Liege perpetrated on civilians, are admitted by the Germans, and justified on the plea of punishment and retaliation. Their inhuman treatment of thousands of Belgian women and girls, of hundreds of nuns and Red Cross nurses is confirmed by eye-witnesses. It is plain that the German soldier has an utter disregard for women, and have openly robbed thousands of innocent girls of their virtue in the most dastardly manner. The campaign of hate is carried to the most unheard of lengths. "A man will get a bang in the face," said Prof. Luck, if he uses the words, shame and pardone in Germany today. This is the result of the movement to expunge all foreign words and phrases from the German language. Belgium alone has refused against the English that are as devoid of any sense of humor as the cuckoo of a wooden clock. "To Englishman" in German is a synonym for "to tell a lie," and as a lasting shame to all English people a dull-witted farmer of Saxony has actually had the word "to manure-pile shall be known as "an Englishman." German women or their children, who have an English husband or father are persecuted with rigor and nefariousness that are unthinkable. Thirty Canadians are imprisoned in concentration camps near Berlin. They want bread, as the allowance is meagre and of wretched quality. Prof. Luck believes that representations on the part of our Canadian government to send food to these poor prisoners of war, would be successful, through our British Parliament and War Office. With the arrangement whereby food and clothing and letters can be sent to these Canadians in Germany has of late, and I her next harvest is good she cannot be starved out for over a year, is Mr. Lucke's belief. She is practicing scientific economy and is turning every sark and flower bed into a cabbage or potato patch, throughout Germany So the Allies must push on and batter down the German defenses and administer a decisive and crushing defeat before victory and peace can be secured. Mr. Lucke believes the war will be of considerable duration and increasing severity, for we have a dogged, persistent and brutal foe to face. But the Allies will win, and German tyranny will fall—and great will be the fall thereof.

A hearty vote of thanks was passed to the speaker, on motion of Rev. A R. Sanderson and Mr. D. V. Sinclair. Mr. J. L. Wills, the president, presented the thanks of the club in a felicitous speech, and presided over the meeting with grace and dignity.

Back From the Firing Line

FIRST AID TO THE WOUNDED

LONDON, April 28.—A: almost every station on the railroads you will see the Red Cross nurses wrecked by fire, men who must face the future horribly mutilated, and yet they accept their fate without a murmur and without bitterness. It is the same in England, in France and in Belgium. Everywhere that all soldiers are bearing their suffering with the greatest of fortitude. The best aid these men have is with themselves. The human body will best resist suffering when the mind itself is healthy, strong, active and with all its functions fully alive and working. The best aid to this condition is a vegetable tonic and alterative that will first put the blood right, for these are dependent on one another, and without sound good blood and likewise good blood means good stomach.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is the best remedy to do its work naturally and properly, stimulate the liver. The system is freed from poisons, the blood is purified. Every organ is rejuvenated. This "Medical Discovery" of Dr. Pierce's contains alcohol or narcotics. DRESSY COAT.

Much thought and careful planning is expended upon the toilet of the small maid. The pretty coat shown in the illustration is one of the smartest models shown this season.

Black and white checked material was used. A wide belt of the material is finished in front with a sash of soft satin. The collar and cuffs are of embroidered plaque, lace trimmed. A chic bonnet of French blue satin has a double frilled brim, soft crown, with trimming of red cherries.

WOMEN WEAR PLUMAGE.

Men Are Relegated to Background in Clothing Decorative.

To the very beginning of things it was man who was the highly decorated animal. Up to within a couple of hundred years ago the dress of men remained more ornate than that of women. Feathers, satins, ruffles, thick buckles, all contributed, with the aid of paint and powder, to make man a bird of gayer plumage than his mate.

But times have changed. Man has solaced. He now does not decorate himself unless he is an army officer, a youngster or a lodge member. He wears clothes that are practically a uniform. The uniform varies, but it is essential it is a uniform.

Woman retains her privilege to wear plumage. She received this privilege long after the man. Doubtless she will be long after man in giving it up.

Anyway, the world never before saw such extraordinary human dress as the way of costume as are done today. The keynote was struck long ago, as may be seen in the unearthed queens of Egypt. If the Greek women were content with flowing lines the queen of Sheba was proudly splendid in garb.

The fantasies of today are impartially distributed in the ballroom, on the street and on the stage.

The hair is worn high or falls like a shower of gold. The hat is planned to a Gaby motif, waving like a small forest, or it shrinks over plastered hair until it is barely bigger than the lid of a pomader box. The woman's wrap is flung as a spider's web, or it buries her to the eyes in fur. Fur has been epidemic. She has not worn it on the edges of her handkerchief. Certainly she has worn it on everything else, and what is the end?

One Hostess' Secret.

A very successful hostess was asked the secret of her success with her guests. She said that when she heard a friend mention a dish that he liked or disliked very much she decided it down in a small memorandum book, and when she planned her dinner she consulted the list. The consequence was she never served string beans to those who disliked them nor lee cream to the woman who couldn't "endure cream in any form."

Origin of Pygmies.

Man being instinctively a pugnacious animal and the fist being the simplest and most natural weapon, it may be assumed that pugilism, as a mode of settling difficulties, is coeval with man himself. So far as is known boxing as an art was introduced in the Olympic games in the twenty-third Olympiad, 720 B. C., and for boys in the thirty-seventh Olympiad, 616 B. C.

KINGSTON

St. George's Day was duly honored by the 21st Battalion by a grand street parade in the afternoon. There were 1,175 men in line. The two bands—the pipers and the brass band—gave a concert on the cricket field. The members of the band were proud in the evening the S.O.E. gave a banquet and programme in their hall. The hall was decorated with flags and bunting. Two lady members of the order offered roses for sale at the door. Rev. T. W. Savary asked the blessing. He was presented with a life membership in the order. The programme was well rendered and consisted of songs and instrumental music and loyal toasts.

The successful and strenuous campaign of the Daily Standard closed last night at 10 o'clock. The Red Cross Society, on account of the great pressure of work, was unable to undertake the sock campaign. The Standard was bound that our boys should not suffer for want of socks while fighting for King and Empire in France and Belgium. Much enthusiasm was shown by the workers and citizens in general, and some did not forget to add sweets and tobacco.

People wonder why such distinguished treatment should be given to the war prisoners at Fort Henry. They are better fed than the average citizen's family. Why should not the British prisoners in the hands of the brutal Huns receive cruel treatment and we pamper the prisoners of Austria and Germany?

The anniversary service in connection with the I.O.O.F. celebration was held in Cooke's Church on Sunday afternoon. The members of the order marched to the church, headed by the famous Pipers' Band of the 21st Batt. Prof. Ball conducted the service and preached an appropriate sermon with a lot of good advice to the members of the order. Most sympathy is felt for the pastor of Cooke's Church, who was away attending the funeral of his mother.

Rev. G. Cosbie Magee, curate of St. George's Cathedral, preached his farewell sermon in St. Luke's Church.

PRESENTATION TO MR. BENSON

Just before the close of the service at Benhan Sunday evening, April 25, Messrs. Fred Smith and Stanley Prest, were called forward, while Miss E. Parker read the following address:

Dear Mr. Benson,—

We, the members Benhah Epworth League seek to acknowledge our appreciation of the many kind deeds you have volunteered in the interest of the League since your coming to this charge. We are also anxious that while you are away in the navy some take up on to remind you that you will not be forgotten by us. Not only are you in the navy by force, but in a very definite way we feel that you belong to us, for you are one of our representative. We ask you to accept this little token of our love, (a ring in the shape of a life preserver) and hope that, as you carry it, it may be a source of encouragement in time of weakness; a source of heroism in the hour of danger; a source of great consolation in trouble and a source of faith in God, in the presence of death, not because of its value, but because it is a token which represents the interest which you and a host have in your welfare.

We are sure that you appreciate the cause you represent. It demands the best, and if we, the League, are to give you our best, the triumph in the end has been assured whether that end results on land or sea, as it does in the trenches. We are certain that the cause is worthy. We are confident, however, that you will prove yourself worthy of the cause. Signed on behalf of the League.

ARTHUR WOOD
STELLA MITTS
JENNIE FLAMING

Mr. Benson thanked the League in a few well chosen words after which the Pastor, Rev. Mr. Bick, gave a short, address that while Fred was representing us in the firing line, our best wishes and prayers for his safe return would follow him wherever he might be called to go.

The service was closed by the singing of a patriotic hymn and the benediction.

A SECOND PRESENTATION

On the following evening about one hundred of the friends and neighbors gathered at Mr. Benson's home to spend the evening with Fred, as he was leaving the following morning for Belleville, where the Third Contingent to which he belongs is drilling.

After some time spent by the older folks in social intercourse and by the young folks in games on the lawn, the guests were called to order. Mr. Hiram Rollins, who was asked to be chairman then came forward and invited Messrs. Fred Benson, Wm. Shaw, T. E. Fleming and A. M. Reid to join him. Mr. Shaw then read the following address while at the proper time Mr. Fleming and Mr. Reid made the presentation:

Mr. Fred Benson,—

It is with feelings of sorrow that circumstances constrain us to bid farewell here to-night upon your departure from us. Yet, as duty's call is great, we would not withhold you from the country's service. Your constant dwelling among us, the bond of friendship has constantly increased until you unto us as a brother in many ways than we can express. Although we, at home, are removed from the roar of the cannon, we would not like to appear as if we were not represent us in the firing line; in the defense of the things that are most dear to us. Therefore, great for ever a thousand years. The country has called you and you have nobly responded and one thing that gladdens our hearts is the united front of all the units of the Empire who, with out compulsion or even request have so nobly offered to the assistance.

We remember that we are in the fight, not for mastery, but for freedom and we feel confident that you will not fail to joyfully perform your duty with undying glory in the trying hour.

Not only do our best wishes, but our prayers accompany you, with the trust that the God who governs the destinies of grand old Britain, will protect you and return you to us.

Kindly accept this wrist-watch, bracelet, and this gold coin ($10)—a feeling accompanying which speaks for more than its value. May the Almighty God of heaven and earth shine upon you wherever you are located. May His loving arms encircle you in the hours of your path of duty, and finally, when the struggle is over may we grasp the hand that has fought for the right in the contest against greed and butchery is the wish of your friends. Signed:

T. E. FLEMING
A. M. REID
T. S. TUMMON
WM. SHAW

Mr. Benson, in a few words, thanked the people for their thoughts of him.

Several others were then called on for speeches and all expressed their appreciation of Fred's loyalty to his country and his worthiness of all trust placed in him. Mr. A. M. Reid, who had drilled with him for several years, spoke of the high esteem in which he was held by the officers and members of the military company with which he had been associated.

Lunch was then served by the ladies, after which a short impromptu programme, consisting of patriotic songs and recitations, was given. All present then joined in the singing of that very familiar hymn, "God be with you till We Meet again," which was the expression of the sentiments of everyone.

HOW TO PREVENT ACID STOMACHS

AND FOOD FERMENTATION BY A STOMACH SPECIALIST

As a specialist who has spent many years in the study and treatment of stomach troubles, I have been forced to the conclusion that most people who complain of stomach trouble possess insufficient acid, a condition that is unhealthy and normal. The real trouble, that which causes all the pain and difficulty, is an excess of lactic acid stomach, aggravated by food fermentation. This excessive acidity is the deadly lactic fluing of the stomach and food fermentation causes wind which distends the stomach abnormally causing the full bloated feeling. Too much acid and fermentation interfere with the normal processes of digestion. The stomach is usually healthy, and normal, but irritated almost past endurance by these foreign substances. Gas and wind in all such cases—and they comprise over 90 per cent—are caused by acid difficulties—the first and only step necessary to relieve them is to neutralize the acid and stop the fermentation by taking in a glass of water after meals immediately after eating, from one to two teaspoonfuls of pure bisurated magnesia, which is doubtless the best and only really effective antacid and corrective known. The acid will be neutralized, and the fermentation stopped immediately, and the gas and wind will at once proceed to digest the food in a healthy, normal manner. Be sure to ask your druggist for the bisurated magnesia, as I have found other forms utterly lacking in its peculiarly valuable properties—F. J. G.

GERMAN KULTUR.

To throw bombs which emit poisonous gases and cause asphyxiation, and then to bayonet the senseless soldiers, is the latest phase of German Kultur. This diabolical action is the device of cowards. It demonstrates that the Germans consider they are outmatched in fair fighting, and that to achieve their ends they must resort to any conceivable tactics, no matter how inhuman. The fact that it is a contravention of an international convention does not concern Germany in the least. She has been violating these international agreements since the commencement of the war; and if it is possible for her to resort to any further practice which she thinks is to her advantage, we can rest assured that she will adopt it, quite regardless as to whether it is a breach of honor and is opposed to humanitarian ideas. A special convention drawn up at The Hague in 1899 and signed by all the nations now engaged in war contained this clause: "The contracting powers agree to abstain from the use of projectiles the sole object of which is the diffusion of asphyxiating or deleterous gases."

Germany probably regards this convention as a mere "scrap of paper" which she can tear up as it suits her purpose. That this convention has been deliberately broken there can be no doubt. The official report of Sir John French on the German attack north of Ypres last week makes this statement: "Yesterday evening the enemy developed an attack on the French troops on our left in the neighborhood of Bixschoote and Langemarck, on the north of Ypres salient. This attack was preceded by a heavy bombardment, the enemy at the same time making use of appliances for the production of asphyxiating gas." The quantity produced indicates the long and deliberate preparation for the employment of devices contrary to the terms of The Hague convention. The false statement made by the Germans a week ago, to the effect that we were using such gases, is now explained. It obviously was an effort to diminish neutral criticism in advance." An official French statement gives this description of the effect of the gas bombs: "Thick yellow smoke emitted from the German trenches and driven by northerly winds, produced an effect of complete asphyxiation among our troops, which was felt even in our second-line positions." The French partially support their charge by admitting the loss of an important position on account of gas bombs.

The only effect of the use of this barbaric form of fighting will be to prolong the war and to cause the loss of thousands of more lives on both sides. Under the stupefying effects of these poisonous gases the Allies have been forced to retire; and upon recovering from the poisonous fumes they have charged the Germans and retaken the lost position. It is not comforting for us to think that this devilish method of waging war is to continue, and that an investigation will be held as to these charges at the conclusion of the war. It would be much more to the point if the neutral nations would protest now against the violation of an international convention. It would be necessary first to hold an investigation into the truth of the charges, and the Allies would gladly welcome such an inquiry.

CANADA AND THE WAR.

Despite the hostility of Laurier and his lieutenants to the raising of additional revenues by war taxes in order to carry on the war, those taxes are now in operation. The Liberals in Parliament fought the taxes on two grounds, apart from their pretence that they were not really war taxes at all. They said that the people would be burdened. They represented the people as being as unwilling to pay the taxes. They said the revenue would not be restored. The Opposition, as usual, misjudged the Canadian people. They thought the Canadian people were of the same stamp as the Liberals in Parliament, which was, to say the least of it, hard on the people of Canada. Throughout the Dominion the war taxes are being paid, not only readily, but cheerfully. They are not a burden. Real Canadians are glad to take their share of supporting the arms of the Empire. There are many hundred thousands of people in Canada who cannot serve in the ranks, but are willing to help in other ways. The magnificent response to various patriotic appeals has proved it. The war taxes are being paid in that same spirit. As to the taxes being sufficient to meet the needs of the country there can be no doubt. Every indication points to the complete success of the measures taken by the Government to cope with the financial situation created by the war.

The part which Canada is taking in the war illustrates anew the tremendous importance which attached to the reciprocity struggle in 1911. Canadian history has demonstrated how much the welfare of the Empire hung upon the decision which the Canadian people gave in rejecting the anti-British trade policy of the Laurier Government. It was argued then by the Conservative party that reciprocity, as proposed in the Knox-Fielding agreement would place the natural resources of Canada absolutely at the mercy of the United States. Liberals denied it, but they favoured reciprocity in any price, just as Laurier years ago announced that he would take the American dollar any day in preference to the English shilling.

Where would Canada have been in this war if the Laurier reciprocity bungle had succeeded? What help would this country have been able to give to Great Britain in ensuring a sure food supply at moderate cost? Could it have been done at all? The Laurier policy would have placed the Canadian food supply absolutely in the hands of the United States, and in the hands of those who control the "market of ninety millions." Canada, with the other Dominions, has contributed enormous stores of cheap foodstuffs for the Motherland. The United States have held out for the highest price for their food supplies. Reciprocity would have enabled them to exact that highest price on Canadian food supplies; but Canada is to-day in the best possible position to prevent the cornering of supplies by her powerful neighbour. This should afford food for some thought by those Liberals who worked so hard to destroy the fiscal independence of Canada.

Now for the Canadian reinforcements.

CURRENT COMMENT

The Soldiers Vote Act is now on the ocean on its way for the approval of the British Cabinet.

To put the enemy to sleep by means of asphyxiating bombs, then bayonet them, may be warfare according to the Teutons, but it is not fair war according to civilized notions.

Germany will never be without one explosive while von Tirpitz is still left. For as everyone knows, he is very good at blowing things up, and shooting his mouth off.

The Jewish Political Association of Toronto will hold its first open meeting in the Orange Hall, College Street. It is expected that Hon. W. H. Hearst, Premier of Ontario, will deliver an address.

America heads the list with 60,602 post offices. Germany is second, with 49,848, they follows England with 23,726; Russia, with 16,000; France, with 13,000, and Italy and Austria, each with 9,000.

The Toronto Hebrew Conservative Association will be addressed by Hon. W. H. Hearst, Premier of Ontario, and Hon. F. W. McGarry, Provincial Treasurer, at a concert and smoker in Broadway Hall, Spadina avenue.

Notwithstanding the criticism that has been made in regard to soldiers' boots, letters continue to arrive from the men at the front expressing great praise for the Canadian boot over the British boot, both for comfort and durability.

Major J. Cooper Mason, D.S.O., of the Home Bank, received a cablegram from Capt. Morton with the cheering news to-day that his wound is not serious, and that Lieut. Cronyn's wound is slight. Capt. Morton wired from the hospital at Boulogne and stated that he was sailing for Eng land.

Many are starving to death; others are committing suicide to escape the pangs of hunger, and thousands are on the verge of starvation in the Province of Szechuan, China, because of famine, according to advices to the State Department received from the American Consul at Chung-king.

The Legislature of New Brunswick has amended the liquor license law in the province so as to make it an offence to have alcoholic beverages in members of the militia in uniform. People think that the framers of such an ordinance should have shown their good faith by making it sell-denying and ruling off their own rights.

The House of Representatives has adopted a bill to permit a land owner to shoot deer with a shotgun on his own land at any time in the year. The Senate had rejected the bill. Members of the House declared that deer are a nuisance; that there are more to the square mile in Connecticut than in any other State in the Union; that herds of twenty-five are ordinary sights in farmers' backyards, and that peach and apple growers suffer severely from the animals like from any other single cause. This is the State for sportsmen!

It has been declared in the Senate of Prager that 27 per cent. of the workers at home on household linen have been made from two and a-half cents to four cents an hour by intense labor. In Paris some workers on undergarments make forty dollars a year. Artificial flower makers, who are skilled craftswomen, make only the best from eighty cents to a dollar a day; but a large percentage get only from thirty to forty cents a day. In the provinces many women work for as low as twelve cents a day. Sewing in European countries should be cheap.

WAR NOTES

London, April 27.—The National Relief Fund of the Prince of Wales to-day reached the total of $5,000,000 (25,000,000.)

Dublin, April 27.—Brigadier-General Hill, commanding all the troops in the Dublin district, has issued an order forbidding the sale of alcoholic liquors to soldiers or sailors.

Berlin, April 27.—The Admiralty announced today that the German auxiliary cruiser Navarra was blown up on the 11 by her captain to prevent her capture by the British. The Navarra was a vessel of 5,784 tons, owned by the Hamburg-American Line.

Ottawa, April 27.—Among the flood of telegrams received by Major-General Sam Hughes today were the following: From Major-General Drain of Washington, D.C.: "Sincerely mourn terrible losses, but glory in magnificent showings of Canadians."

Ottawa, April 27.—Here is the Spartan way one Canadian wife regards the wounding of her husband. Mrs. D. L. Redmond of Calgary, the wife of Captain D. L. Redmond of the 10th Battalion, who is among the wounded, has asked the Minister of Militia to forward the following telegram to her husband: "Congratulations, dear old veteran, on your latest badge of honor. Everybody well. Best love."

Calgary, April 27.—Stirred by the stories of the Canadians in action, when recruiting for the 56th Battalion, fourth contingent, opened, today, five hundred men clamored to be taken on. The band of the 103 Militia Regiment played to a man. At the close of the day Col Armstrong announced that one hundred and thirty men, as many as could be handled by the recruiting officer in a day had been examined and accepted.

Declaring that her husband laid her husband laid her over his knee and spanked her with a slipper, Mrs. John F. Bebbel, New York has sued for a separation.

Lost His Life In Burning Barn

Victim of Sunday Night's Electrical Storm—Farmer Burned to Death

AURORA, April 27.—In an attempt to rescue stock from a burning barn which had been struck by lightning on Sunday night, a young man named Klinck living in this vicinity lost his life.

The rapidity with which the flames spread, made it dangerous to venture into the building to get to get free the cattle, but young Klinck, who was employed by his brother, the owner of the farm, finally forced a way through. When he failed to return attempts at rescue were made but before they could be carried out the roof of the barn and then the sides fell in, making further efforts impossible. The charred remains were found when the fire had burned itself out. The dead man was twenty-four years old and had lived in this section for two months.

Agricultural News

SOME DIFFERENCES

Here and there amongst our dairy-farms are such splendid results attained that one can only be astonished at the complacency with which other less successful men continue to be content with the pitifully small average yields of milk per cow. Why do the huge differences exist?

Just a few miles from here is one of those poor herds—six cows, with an average of only 3,338 pounds of milk; the highest yield only 4,000 pounds. We reported to that, and good herds in western Ontario indicate the possibilities for the man whose eyes are open to what milk records have to teach. One herd of 12 grades average 10,657 pounds of milk and 317 pounds of fat; the second herd of 22 grades averaged 9,502 pounds of milk and 350 pounds of fat.

These marvellous differences in herd yields drive home hard facts. Men differ in their methods of feeding and handling cows, feeds differ in value, cows differ considerably in their inherent capacity as milk producers; they are not all cast in the same mould.

In the above two good herds the constant use of milk records has proved an excellent lever in raising the production. Cow testing pays.

KAISER IS PREPARING FOR FOUR YEARS' WAR

LONDON, April 27.—A telegram to The Evening News from Copenhagen quotes the German Counselor of State, Herr Gottschalk, as saying that systematic efforts were being inaugurated in Germany for the purchase of sufficient foodstuffs for a four years' supply. This is being done, it is said, on instructions to German Chambers of Commerce from Dr. Von Bethmann-Hollweg, the Imperial Chancellor "that Germany must be prepared for at least this length.

EVERY MAN HIS OWN DICTIONARY

The English language is not dead, just because it is embalmed and wrapped up in dictionaries like an Egyptian mummy in his sarcophagus. Every now and then some word comes to life, sits up, turns over, smashes a piece of the sarcophagus, tears a yard or so out of the winding-cloth, and foes to rest in an entirely new attitude. Take the word "Allies." There is not a dictionary of English anywhere that will not tell you to pronounce that word with a strong accent on the last syllable, English, Scottish, American, they all agree. But we, the English-speaking people who are amongst the "Allies" of this greatest of Alliances in all history—we have changed all that. A word which has for generations reposed in dusty histories and been heard only in the stillnesses of musty class-rooms and lecture-halls that word has become ours again the property of all the people; and all the people have given it a new pronunciation. I do not care what Webster, Stormonth, the New Encyclopaedia, the Oxford and Cambridge, or any dictionary says about it. We, the people, have remade that word, and henceworth the pronunciation has the accent on the first syllable—of course with the long I distinctly pronounced in the second. We have it to the Germans to put the accent on the "lies."

Hill Number Sixty is compared to an active volcano. The capture and retention of this important position by the British will go down in history as one of the greatest events of the greatest war.

Widely Known Soap Man Dead

William Colville of Toronto, Figured in Many Callings—Headed a Round the World Trip

TORONTO, April 27.—One of the most widely known commercial men in Canada, Mr. William Colville, died in Toronto today after a year's illness from hardening of the arteries. He was sales manager for Pugsley, Dingman and Co., Comfort Soap, having been with that firm for the past twenty years. When The Daily News conducted a voting contest for the most popular commercial travellers in Canada, about six years ago, Mr. Colville headed the poll and with Messrs. James Lumbers, Valentine, Wells and W. Reilly, took the trip around the world, which was the prize. His entertaining letters regarding the trip were highly appreciated.

The late Mr. Colville was one of the founders of the Drummers' Club, the social organization of the travellers. He was at one time editor of The Dresden Herald and he also conducted a newspaper in Cookstown. In lawn bowling circles he had many friends, being a prominent member of the Riversdale Club. He was one of the managers of St. Enoch's Presbyterian Church and a member of Sydenham Lodge, A.F. and A.M., Dresden. In politics he was a strong Conservative.

Deceased is survived by his widow and one daughter, Mrs. J. W. Charles, Toronto. Mr. R. J. Colville of the Railroad Department of the Y.M.C.A., and Mr. H. A. Colville of The Wallaceburg Herald are brothers.

SPAIN CASTS EAGER EYES ON GIBRALTER

That Country Would Realize Territorial Aspirations if it Could

PARIS, April 27.—Public men of Spain are now beginning to discuss the possibility of that country "realizing its territorial aspirations" in view of the probable reconstruction of Europe after the war. Senor Alcazar, first vice-president of the Spanish Chamber of Deputies, in an address which has aroused wide comment, declared his country should take advantage of the present opportunity to complete the integrity of her territory by obtaining the cession of Gibraltar from England.

"I do not share the general enthusiasm for Tangier," he said. "Its possession would be a burden to us but we could exchange Ceuta (a seaport town in Morocco, 17 miles southeast of Gibraltar for Gibraltar and in that way England would continue to dominate the Straits, the Ceuta of Gibraltar would be removed from our flesh and the bonds of friendship binding us to England would be made closer."

REFUSED TO SELL SUPER DREADNOUGHT

Profit of Six Million Dollars Failed to Influence Argentina

NEW YORK, April 27.—The Argentine Government, it became known here this morning, recently has refused offers from European countries for the purchase of the super-Dreadnought Moreno, which was built at Camden, N.J., and which sailed for the Southern Republic today. One offer it is said came from Greece, the bid being about $17,500,000. It is understood that the Italian Government also tried to buy the battleship. The Moreno, one of the largest warships afloat, was built at a cost of $12,000,000, but a possible profit of $6,000,000 failed to influence Argentina.

Manuel J. Molina, acting Consul for Argentine here, confirmed the reports of overtures for the purchase of the

TWO CHATHAM MEN KILLED BY LIVE WIRE

CHATHAM, Ont., April 27.—Samuel Ford and Louis Bechard, two employes of the local Hydro system were electrocuted at Ontario Hydro Electric substation just outside the city today. Ford came here when the Hydro was first installed and Bechard is a Chatham boy. They had been working at linemen on the local system. They were placing an extension ladder against the side of the station preparing to go up and repair the lightning arresters. One of the men slipped and the ladder fell against a wire carrying 20,000 volts of electricity. The wire was carried down a fine wire which ran down both sides of the ladder and immediately killed both men. Theo. Pickering, another lineman, who was also holding the ladder, was thrown a distance of 20 feet, but escaped with a badly burned hand. The foreman, which is kept in readiness at the station, was brought into use, but the life of both men was called before the machine could be adjusted.

WEST TAKING ON A BRIGHTER OUTLOOK

C. A. Abraham, Prominent Western Publisher, Says Crop Situation is Full of Promise

MONTREAL, April 27.—C. A. Abraham, president and business manager of the Winnipeg Telegram, is in the city as a guest at The Windsor. He states that a distinct improvement is noticeable in conditions west of the lakes. There is an increase of at least 25 per cent. in acreage under crop and the season opens with an exceptionally attractive crop outlook.

The Winnipeg Telegram under Mr. Abraham's management has made splendid progress. A few months ago the morning edition was abandoned with a view to concentrating their entire energies on the evening edition. The experiment has been highly gratifying in every respect and the Winnipeg Telegram which is now an exclusive afternoon newspaper is showing exceptional development.

WIFE-BEATER TO FEEL THE LASH

TORONTO, April 27.—Another wife-beater got a taste of his own methods today, when Charles Hall, was found guilty in the Police Court of brutally assaulting and beating his wife, and sentenced by Magistrate Denison to 90 days' imprisonment, with the lash at the end of 20 days and ten more at the end of 60 days. The case was a particularly brutal one, Hall being a big, strong, muscular man, and his wife, a rather frail and sickly woman. He was drunk when the brutal attack on his wife was made.

He who wishes to get a hearing nowadays should not talk about the war, but about the prospects of peace.

The Last Raider Quits the Seas

The Kron Prinz Wilhelm is to be Interned at Newport News

NEWPORT NEWS, April 27.—Commander Thierfelder of the German auxiliary cruiser Kronprinz Wilhelm, last night informed Collector of Customs Hamilton that he wished to intern his vessel.

Continued serious illness of more than 60 members of the crew was given as the reason for Thierfelder's decision.

The men are suffering from beri beri. The Kronprinz had until midnight, April 30, to intern or put to sea.

The vessel within a few days will join her sister raider, the Prinz Eitel Friedrich, at the Norfolk Navy Yard, there to remain until the cessation of hostilities in Europe.

Hoped to Put to Sea.

Amplifying verbally his brief written notice of internment, Commander Thierfelder informed the Collector that it would have been more to his choice to have put to sea again, and that it had been his hope and expectation to do so.

"I used all taste possible to make my ship ready to resume her work at sea and this morning begun the taking on of coal," he said, "but my surgeons after a conference this afternoon informed me that there was no prospect of the early recovery of the 60 men and that they could not, till how much longer they would have to be kept in the hospital on shipboard."

Note—The truth is more likely to be found in the facts that English vessels were waiting outside the harbor to greet her when she ventured out. The German commander's excuse is a good one, even though not true.

Duke of Connaught And Langemarck

As an English Officer he is Proud of His Canadian Comrades

OTTAWA, April 27.—The Minister of Militia today received from the Duke of Connaught the following letter apropos of the Canadians' part in the fight at Ypres:

"Sam: General Hughes,—I write you, as Minister of Militia, to express to you my deepest sympathy in the heavy losses of valuable lives amongst our 1st Division in the splendid fight they have made at Ypres.

"Canada has every reason to be proud of the gallantry of her sons, who have nobly done their part in this great struggle for the liberties and honor of our Empire against the tyranny and injustice of Germany.

"As an English officer, I am proud of our Canadian comrades, and feel that they have brought honor to the British army as well as to themselves, and that their heroic work will thrill the Dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

"Assuring you again of my heartfelt sympathy for the relations of all these Canadian officers, N.C.O.'s, and men who have so nobly fallen on the field of battle,

"Believe me, yours sincerely,

"Arthur.

"P.S.—His Majesty, Lord Kitchener and Sir John French have cabled to me their admiration of the conduct of our Canadian troops. I have answered them, and have also cabled to General Alderson, expressing my appreciation."

TOLD EASILY

A witty political candidate, running in an agricultural district, after making a speech, announced that he would be glad to answer any queries that might be put to him.

A voice came from the audience.

"You seem to know a lot, sir, about a farmer's difficulties. May I ask a question about a mesmerious ong?"

"Certainly," replied the candidate nervously.

"How can you tell a bad egg?" went on the merciless voice.

The candidate waited until the laughter died away. Then he replied:

"I find anything to tell a bad egg I think I should break it gently."

He won the place.

"The Store With The Electric Man"

CUPID'S TOIL

Chapter II. (Continued)

No, it was no disfigurement. Even to her, with a woman's love of conquest, it must have seemed anything but a disfigurement had she known what the quiet, awkward man at her side was thinking, who stood looking shyly at it and found no words to contradict her, though she asked him twice, and thought him stupid enough. A great longing to kiss that soft, scarred wrist was on me—and Miss Guest had added another to the number of her slaves. I don't know now why that little scar should have so touched me any more than I then could guess why, being a commonplace person, I should fall in love at first sight, and feel no surprise at my condition, only a half consciousness touching fully to justify it that in some former state of being I had met my lover, and read her thoughts, and learned her moods, and come to know the bright womanly spirit that looked from her frank eyes as well as if she were an old, old friend. And so vivid was this sensation, that once or twice then and afterward, when I would meet her glance, another name than hers trembled on my tongue and passed away before I could shape it into sound.

After an interval, "Are you going to the Goldmeezes' dance?"

"No," I answered her thumbly. "I go out so little."

"Indeed! with an odd smile not too kindly; "I wish—no, I don't—that we could say the same. We are engaged, I think"—she paused, life attention divided between myself and Boccherini's minuet, the low strains of which she was sending through the room—"for every afternoon—this week—except Saturday. By the way, Mr. Herapath—do you remember what was the name—Bab told me you teased her with?"

"Wee bonny Bab," I answered absently. My thoughts had gone forward to Saturday. We are always dropping to-day's substance for the shadow of to-morrow; like a dog—a dog was it not?—in the fable.

"Oh, yes, wee bonnie Bab," she murmured softly. "Poor Bab" and suddenly cut short Boccherini's music and one chat by striking a note of discord and laughing merrily at my start of dissatisfaction. Everyone took it as a signal to leave. They all seemed to be going to meet her again next day, or the day after that; they engaged her for dances, and made up a party for the last week, and tossed to and fro a score of laughing catchwords, that were beyond my comprehension. They all did this, except myself.

And yet I crept away with some thing before me—that call upon Saturday afternoon. Quite unreasonably I fancied I should see her alone. And so when the day came and I stood outside the opening door of the drawing room, and heard voices and laughter within, I was hurt and aggrieved beyond measure. There was quite a party, and a merry one, assembled, who were playing at some game as it seemed to me, for I caught sight of Clare Wingfield all on fire with a bandage from her eyes, and striving by her offfeet air to give the lie to a pair of flushed cheeks. The black whiskered man was there, and two men of his kind, and a German governess, and a very old lady in a shred-chair, who was called "grandmamma," and Miss Guest herself looking, in the prettiest dress of silvery plush, to the full as bright and fair and graceful as I had been picturing her each hour since we parted.

She dropped me a courtesy. "Will you play the part of Miss Caroline Wilhelmina Amelia Skerge, Mr. Herapath, after our honest Pennsylvanian and say 'Fudge' or will you turn out and play games with neighbor Flaw borough? You will join us, won't you? Clare does not so misbehave every day, only it is such a wet afternoon and so cold and wretched, and we did not think there would be any more callers—and tea will be up in five minutes."

She did not think there would be any more callers! Something in her smile belied the words and taught me that she had thought—she had known—that there would be one more caller—one who would burn lots and play games with her, though Rome itself were afire, and Tooley Street and the Mile End Road to boot.

It was a simple game enough, and not likely, one would say, to afford much risk of that burning the fingers which gave zest to the Vicar of Wakefield's nuts. One sat in the middle blind-folded, while the rest disguised their voice, or as many as could, and spoke one by one some gibe of quip at his expense. When he succeeded in naming the speaker the detected satirist put on the pole and in his turn heard things good—if he had a corner of himself to spare for soul's health. Now this sole unhappily soup-fell to me, and proved a heavy one, because I was not so fortified with the other's voices as were the host and Miss Guest—whose fainted tones I thought to have recognized in a wondrous knack of cheating me, now taking off Clare's voice, and now—after the door had been opened to admit the tea—her infant's. So I failed again and again to earn my release. But when a voice behind me cried with well-feigned eagerness—

"How nice! Do tell me all about a fire!"

Though no fresh cracking of the fire had perched me, nor warning been given of an addition to the party, I had not the smallest doubt who was the speaker but exclaimed at once, "That is Bab. Now I cry mercy. I am right this time. That was Bab."

I looked for a burst of applause and laughter, such as had before attended a good thrust home, but none came. On the contrary, with my words so there fell upon the room a silence, as if it was clear that something was wrong, and I pulled off my handkerchief and, before repeating, "That was Bab, I am sure"

But it it was, I could not see her. What has come over them all? Jack's face was reddening and the bald-headed friends were clearly bent upon saving. Clare looked horrified, and Miss Guest, who had untied his friends were clearly bent upon sugfrowned, and called "grandmamma, grandmamma!" while Miss Guest, she had risen and half turned away toward the window, and stood there as one in a state of grand contrition. What was the matter?

"I beg everyone's pardon by anticipation," I said, looking round in a bewildered way, "but have I said anything wrong?"

"Oh, dear no!" cried the fellow whom I had called Jack, with a manifestly that was in the worst taste—as it had meant to apologize to him! "Most natural thing in the world!" "Jack how dare you!" exclaimed Miss Guest, stamping her foot. "Well, it seemed all right. It sounded very natural, I am sure."

"Oh, you are unbearable! Why don't you say something, Clare?"

"Mr. Herapath, I am sure that you did not know that my name was Barbara."

"Certainly not," I cried. "What a strange thing!"

"But it is, and that is why grandmamma is looking so shocked, and Mr. Buchanan is wearing threadbare and old friend's privilege of being rude. I freely forgive you if you will make allowance for him. And you shall come off the stool of repentance and have your tea first, since you are the greatest stranger. It is a stupid game, after all!"

She would hear no apologies from me. And when I would have asked why her sister bore the same name, and thus excused myself, she was intent upon tea-making, and the few moments I could with decency wait by her call gave me scant opportunity. I blush to think how I eked them out, by what subservience to Clare, by what a slavish anxiety to help everyone Jack to muffins—each piece I hoped might choke him. How slow I was to find hat and glove, calling to mind with terrible vividness, as I furled my back upon the circle, that again sad again. in my experience and acquaintance beam by a dinner had ended with the consequent call. And so I should have gone—it might have been here—but that the Jack-himself was stiff, and Miss Guest came to my aid as I fumbled with it. "We are always at home on Saturdays, if you please to call, Mr. Herapath," she murmured carelessly, not lifting her eyes —and I found myself in the street

So carelessly she said it then, with a sudden change of feeling, I vowed I would not call. Why should I? Why should I worry myself with the sight of a fellow fellows paraded in favor? With the bable of that society chit-chat, which I had so often scorned, and—and still scorned, and had no part or concern in. They were not people to suit me or do me good. I would not go, I said, and repeated it on the Monday and Tuesday—on Wednesday only so far modified it that I thought at some distant time I might have a call-to avoid discourtesy; on Friday preferred an earlier date; to wiser and more polite, and on Saturday walked shame-faced down the street, and knocked and rang and went upstairs—to taste a pleasant misery. Yes, and on the next Saturday too, and on the next, and the next, and that one on which we all went to the theatre, and that other one on which Mr. Guest kept me to dinner. Yes, and on other days that were not Saturdays, among which two stand high out of the watch of forgetfulness, one when I was invited like twin pilars of Hercules, through which I thought to reach, as did the ancient of old, I know not what treasures of unknown to be stretching away under the setting sun, if first that me on which I found Barbara Guest alone and blushed and sighed and had audicity to wish to make her my wife; and then heard, before I had spoken one word—told my tale, the wheels of grandmamma's chair outside.

Clean Mouth Promotes Health

Oral hygiene is quite properly focusing the attention of the medical profession as well as the laity. A noted authority is quoted as saying: "There is no single thing of more import ant in the whole range of hygiene than hygiene of the mouth."

In the process of sterilizing the mouth—destroying disease germs—deterious drugs are placed on absorbine, Jr. This germicidal liniment has been tested under severe laboratory tests and its use as a germ destroyer and preventive is becoming quite general. It is unlike the usual germicides because it is non-poisonous and is safe and harmless to use.

Prof. J. D. Hird, Biological Chemist, Washington, D.C., after an extensive laboratory examination of Absorbine, Jr., pronounced it "that one drops of Absorbine, Jr., to an ounce of water is sufficient to thoroughly cleanse the mouth and teeth of injurious bacteria, without injurious action on the teeth." LITERARY NOTES.

In The Canadian Magazine for May, Mr. Herbert B. Ames, M. P., honorary secretary of the Canadian Patriotic Fund, gives a most interesting description of how the fund has been organized and is being distributed. One noteworthy feature is the announcement that the large organization costs the fund nothing, because all expenses so far have been met by the current interest on the money deposited in the bank. "Our National Benefaction" is the title of the article, and Mr. Ames is careful to point out that the assistance given to dependents of soldiers is not charity, but the rightful reward of those who bow for the benefit of the whole country.

HE QUELLS THE UNRULY

BUT SERGEANT-AT-ARMS GLACK. MEYER HAS A LIGHT TASK.

It Is Years Now Since the Guardian of the Dignity of the Ontario Legislature Has Had to Prevent the House From Being Stormed —He Has Held Office For Almost Half a Century.

One drowsy spring afternoon a year ago, when the daily session of the Ontario Legislature had resolved into a faint vocal murmur, and scarcely a member on the back benches were meditating an uprising time, a stranger blundered into the chamber, and without salutation of any kind strode down the strects of sacred carpet leading to the Speaker. Immediately, a tall, keen-eyed old gentleman in semi-military regalia rose from a little desk, and proceeded slowly after the intruder, his long sword clanking gently at his heels. A step on the one and after and the stranger was guided out through a short aisle, his intrusion and disappearance occurred within the space of time required to turn his direction, the voice of the time debater droned on, and the interruption ended before it had well begun.

The guardian of the occasion was Fred. J. Glackmeyer, generally known to the House as the sergeant-at-arms, and a figure who has been associated longer with Ontario legislative proceedings than present members of the assembly will realize. This is the 48th year in which he has served in his capacity, and many a political reputation has risen and fallen during his tenure. Men who have remembered him only through their association with the basic statutes of the province placed on the records years ago, talked from the arena in the centre of their prime, and then passed out—some to obscurion, and some to honorable memory. The appellation, sergeant-at-arms, is apt to convey to the mind of the stranger an entirely different conception from that corresponding to fact. One might be led to expect the vision of a short, chunky, red-faced officer bristling with importance, and resplendent in scarlet and gold lace. As a matter of fact the conirast between the fact and the popular conception is as sharply drawn as could be. There is no spindle about Mr. Glackmeyer; his trappings are not brilliant, and his demeanor is not ostentatious. He has a habit of unassuming but none the less impressive.

Looking down from the galleries on days occasions visitors are wont to ask, "Who is the benevolent-looking old gentleman in uniform?" For it there is one outstanding characteristic he possesses, it is a kindliness and gentleness of expression that fairly beams with sympathy for his fellowman, and to new members coming in from outside points where a knowledge of Parliamentary constitution is absolutely necessary to successful conventions, he is a guide, philosopher and friend.

There is no one more familiar with constitutional procedure than the sergeant-at-arms. He is the embodiment of decorum as he carries the Speaker's mace a long orange stick, ment, to its place on the table, or removes it as the House rises in the evening. While the legislative session is under way his duties are more or less formal, concerning as they do the carrying of the mace to and from the House. But during the year he is the sort of honorary bodyguard of the Speaker, and is capable of assisting in the management of the social functions which provide so brilliant a part or Ontario parliamentary life.

Although even frequenters of the gallery and those most conversant with the doings of Ontario statesmen in the last fifteen years are not generally aware of it, there is a ceremony of the Legislature that with one exception, has not been performed since the Assembly Chamber was moved to Queen's Park from the old Front street site many years ago. No man has been called to the Bar for dishonorable conduct.

It would be interesting to say that of all those who take a casual interest in the Legislature there is no member who is ignorance of the fact that there is an official bar before which offenders may be summoned. Having the Speaker, and hinged to a pillar of the chamber it hangs there year in year unused, in readiness for the time when it will be snapped into a crochet across the doorway, and the sergeant will stand at one side guarding a prisoner.

In the old days, when politicians were distinguished by violence of speech, and men on the floor expressed their opinions of each other as freely as they did on the country hustings there were many occasions in which they were lined up to answer for themselves. To-day, however, the sense o' the chamber generally is so omnipresent that Parliamentary decorum is seldom outraged or served, and when a passionate or careless word should slip, the member speedily follows with an apology. The dignity of the Ontario House is a thing to marvel at. It is also a matter of great credit to the province.

It was at the time of Sir John Sandfield Macdonald that he first entered the civil service, and through the reign of Edward Blake, Sir Oliver Mowat, A. S. Hardy, George W. Ross, Sir James Whitney and Hon. W. H. Hearst, he has retained his little seat in the middle of the floor.

Mr. Glackmeyer is English in appearance, through not in birth, but his love for British precedent is very marked. His forbears left Germany in 1760, the year following the capture of Quebec, and settled in the old island of Mount Royal. His grandfather, Jacob Glackmeyer, represented the riding in the old Parliament of Canada from 1805 to 1815.

More in His Line.

"You may make a chess player," said the coach. "You are slow enough to mate."

Upper Canada Old Boys to Provide a Motor Ambulance for the Front

The boys of U.C.C., as was mentioned in The Mail and Empire last week, are proposing to the Canadian Red Cross Society a motor ambulance for use at the front; in this they are being assisted by several friends. Since that notice appeared other Old Boys of the college have asked to be allowed to bear their share, and the undersigned have been constituted as a committee to whom subscriptions may be sent, and who now avail themselves of the courtesy of the publication press to thus bring the matter before as large a number of Old Boys as possible. The committee has already gained a ready co-operation among Old Boys, and has accordingly arranged for the purchase of a Wolseley ambulance which will be delivered almost immediately. It is hoped that out of 250 or more old U.C.C. boys on active service an Old Boy will be appointed to act as driver of the ambulance.

"Courtship of Miss Canada"

Successful Performance of Operetta Under Auspices of Ladies' Aid of Tabernacle Church

Miss Canada did not blush last night at the Griffin Opera House when she was wooed in public, for the simple reason that she did not seek the attentions of her flatterers, and declared that while remaining a loyal daughter of her Mother she intended to be mistress in her own house. There was a large audience to witness the performance of this pleasing operetta, which was given under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid of the Tabernacle Church. It is just the kind of play to be produced at the present time, for it breathes throughout a spirit of loyalty to the Motherland and exalts the glory of the Union Jack. As a spectacular display it was well worth seeing, the dresses being pretty and the scenery appropriate. There was a succession of marches and drills by girls attired in attractive costumes; and the dialogue—always intensely patriotic—had been brought up to date and included some appropriate references to the war.

The Provinces were represented by young ladies who — supporting Miss Canada,—were prettily attired in dainty costumes in which the Union Jack was ingeniously introduced. The entry of the flower girls, in the first act, was one of the prettiest scenes, and their song was one of the most effective numbers. Sixteen cadets went through a drill with excellent precision, and the wheel drill, given by a number of girls was a very pleasing performance. "O, Canada" was effectively rendered by Mr. Cameron. In the second act Mrs. Grant gave a delightful rendering of "We'll never let the old flag fall"; Mrs. Duff, representing Ireland, gave a rir aous rendering of the popular "It's a long way to Tipperary"; and Miss Brown, dressed in Scottish costume, sang "I love a lassie." Of the nations who came to woo Miss Canada none met with so warm a reception as the King of the Belgians. Miss May Wallace, representing Yukon, admirably recited "John Bull is the Daddy of them all"; and the act closed with the children dancing around John Bull, while the chorus sang "What's the matter with Father —he's all right." The third act took a religious turn, when Miss Canada placed herself beneath the Divine protection of the Almighty.

The operetta was on the whole, well presented, and reflects the greatest credit upon all concerned in the management. Too much praise cannot be awarded Miss Florence Davis, who had a busy time at the piano, and a large orchestra rendered some lively music.

The characters were well taken, the principal mistake, made by a few, being that their words were scarcely audible. Mrs. Francis Nicholson looked and acted well as Canada, and Mr. J. E. Walmsley made a typical John Bull. Mr. Jesse Wallace was admirably taken by Dorothy Clark, Eva Davis, Muriel Greenleaf, and Wilda Palmer, who tripped gracefully about the stage as lightly as the winds.

Belleville Boys Are All Well

"If I Do go Under Remember I Died Fearing Nothing", Says Pte. R. B. Anderson

The following letter from France, dated April 10, written to his mother, is from Private R. B. Anderson, who is on active service:—

Dear Mother:—I am as usual fine. Received your parcel O.K., and can assure you it was fine. I appreciate a parcel from home very much, but going to the expense of sending large parcels it would be as well to confine your parcels to tobacco and writing material. A fountain pen would be fine. So any future consignment would be welcomed. I see the Belleville boys quite often and all are well. I made friends in Devizes who keep me supplied with cake and such such things as relishes. Also a few Plymouth friends send me little treats; lots of letters and pencils, and I had three letters from Canada yesterday. Oh, how I love to hear from people at home. I love the name from you. They are dandies. I have lots of socks and mits. I have not been ill one day since enlisting; so you have no cause to worry. I think the war is in a fair way to end soon. I have every confidence that I will pull through O.K. We were thirty-four days in action and are at present at our recreation camp taking a rest. We expect to be at it again in a couple of days. Well, mother, I will have to close now. Do not worry; I am all right, and if I do go under remember I died fearing nothing, but I am not going under. So good-bye, mother, and love to all.

R. B. Anderson.

It must be nice to be the sister of a deputy sheriff when war contracts are being passed out.

Brantford Soldier Decorated

Recommended for Distinguished Conduct Medal for Bravery

BRANTFORD, April 28.—Special—According to information received yesterday, Pte. Edward Hodson, a British reservist, who left here at the outbreak of the war to rejoin his old regiment, the Second Bedfords, has been recommended for the Distinguished Conduct Medal for conspicuous bravery. This decoration corresponds with the Distinguished Service Order, which is conferred on officers only. What his particular act of bravery was is not stated, but he was through some of the fiercest fighting in the early part of the war, and has just been discharged from a hospital, having been wounded in the head as a result of German treachery. His company had a body of Germans in a tight corner when they raised a white flag. The British advanced, not expecting a fight, but when they got close to the Germans trenches the later opened fire. The British casualties were heavy, but those who remained changed the trenches and either killed or captured every German in them. Hodson was an employee of the Massey-Harris Co. in this city.

De Witt Foster Resigns Seat

Member for Kings, N. S., Acted on Premier's Broad Hint

OTTAWA, April 28.—A. Dewitt Foster, M.P. for King's N.S., has sent in his resignation as a member of parliament.

In the dying days of the session Sir Robert Borden virtually read Mr. Foster and Mr. W. F. Garland, M.P. for Carleton, Ont., out of the Conservative party.

Both of them had become involved in war contracts, the former acting as purchasing agent for horses, the papers in connection with which were not forthcoming, and the latter got his drug clerk appointed as a middleman for the supply of field dressings and drugs.

This is the first time in Canadian political history that a premier took such strong action regarding members of his party, who failed to live up to the standard required of members of parliament.

Special Call For Princess Pats

OTTAWA, April 27.—More Canadian soldiers are going forward to take places in the ranks of the first division and as batteries, regiments and divisions to take their places in the line at the front.

This will be Canada's answer to the attack of the German army last week.

Every day shows that there are plenty of men, for the news of fighting has set the country ablaze.

Call For the Pats.'

A special call is being made for men to reinforce the Princess Patricia's who have suffered so severely right out few of the original thousand remain. Enlisting for this force began yesterday in Montreal.

The men who have been drilling all winter in Canada are almost ripe for service. All they need is some training in shooting. They go to camp Petawawa in the seven big camps which are about to be opened.

There is a feeling that the performance of the Canadian first division in Flanders has given the Old Country professional soldier a new view of men sent from Canada. This is expected to work somewhat to the advantage of the second Canadian overseas division, which is not likely to be kept in England quite so long as the first and is not likely to be out in so wet a place.

ACTIVITIES OF WOMEN.

There are ten women investors where there was one ten years ago.

Women in New Jersey are now citizens to appointment as police officers.

The rule regulations at Radcliffe college compel the girl students to learn the use of the shin down the rope fire escape.

The United States supreme court was sustained California's right to bar out for women hotel waitresses.

Los Angeles, Cal., has been offered a $300,000 tract of land by Mrs. Henry E. Huntington to be used for park purposes.

The Sarah Berliner fellowship for women, carrying with it a gift of $1,000, has been awarded to Miss Janet T. Howell of Baltimore. It is considered one of the highest honors that can be won by a woman in this country.

Oregon has five women miners.

India is to have a women's college.

The Finland diet has twenty-one women members.

Arizona, Oregon, Wyoming and Colorado have women legislators.

SILK STOCKINGS.

Lengthen the Life of Your Hose by Good Care.

With a little care and attention silk stockings may be made to wear two and even three months. If before wearing they are washed through lukewarm water they become more glossy and also strengthened, as silk takes very kindly to water.

After each wearing, also, the stockings should be washed in lukewarm water and white soap.

As the stockings are white, they should be put in a dark room to dry. Never dry white or colored stockings in the sun. The Japanese are said to put all white silks in a dark closet to dry. This will absolutely keep them from yellowing. The use of hot water, according to those who know, is prohibited in the washing of silks. Also avoid rubbing.

And now as to the wearing of silk stockings. They absolutely must not be worn tight. If the stocking is pulled to its full length and caught at the hem there will be few, if any, "runners" occurring within a reasonable time. Wear your stockings comfortably, not too loose or too tight. One extreme is as bad as the other.

A stocking with a hole too small for it will wear better than an all silk one.

Choice of a Room in Resting Eyes.

When your eyes are tired try bathing them at night time in a little warm water to which a piece of boracic powder has been added. Use no soap for the purpose.

It is a good plan to lie down in a darkened room for about twenty minutes every day if you can. This rests the eyes splendidly. In choosing your room, if you have weak eyes be careful that it has not too sunny an aspect, and try if possible to have a bedroom with green blinds.

White blinds only serve to increase the morning glare, and if the sun beats down fiercely upon your face from early sunrise not only will your rest be disturbed, but your eyes will suffer as well.

WORTH KNOWING.

Orange blossom girdles are a feature of the new bridal robes.

Much in demand will be the buttons of brass, silver and steel.

A straight line at the base of the skirt is decidedly trying.

Sashes now often meet the hips, but require the greatest care in arrangement.

The braiding on velvet gowns is most elaborate.

Half and half stockings are new and striking. The upper part of these new stockings is in decided contrast to the lower part.

In the coming season there will be a great deal of black millinery braid used, also neutral shades and shades matching the dress goods.

Long trains of white brocche metal tissue are used in a deferred way on robes of soft white chiffon or charmeuse.

Bran Gems.

One egg, one cupful of flour, two cupfuls bran, one teaspoonful salt, three tablespoonfuls of molasses, one tablespoonful of shortening, one teaspoonful of soda, buttermilk to make a stiff batter. Raisins may be added if desired. Bake twenty-five minutes.

BELLE ISLE BRIDGE DESTROYED BY FIRE

DETROIT, April 28.—(Special.)—Belle Isle bridge, connecting Belle Isle and Detroit at East Grand Boulevard and Jefferson avenues, three miles from the centre of the city, was virtually destroyed by fire late today. Shortly after the outbreak of the fire the entire centre of the bridge collapsed and fell into the river. The bridge is said to have caught fire from a tar wagon crossing the bridge. No loss of life is reported.

A city engineer estimated the loss at $250,000 and said the bridge, the only which links Detroit to Belle Isle, will have to be entirely rebuilt.

Remarkable Deliverance in Most Vicious Battle of the War—Belleville in Order for Congratulation

A cablegram from London, from George Macbeth Brown, European Manager of the Canadian Pacific Railway, received by Col. W. N. Ponton, reads as follows:—

In Memory of Heroic Dead

Public Service in Commemoration of Canadians Who Have Fallen In Battle

OTTAWA, April 28.—A public service in commemoration of those Canadians, who have recently fallen in battle was held this morning at 10.30 on Parliament Hill. His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught and suite attended as well as members of the Ottawa garrison, overseas troops in training in the capital, members of the cabinet, and the general public. The troops marched past His Royal Highness after the service.

Arrangements are under way for the holding of a series of memorial services at all the Anglican churches of Montreal on Sunday morning next, in honor of the brave Canadian officers and men who met their death saving the British lines at Ypres and other points, during the heavy fighting last week. A number of those reported dead were members of Anglican Churches in the city, and all these Church it is likely military representatives will be present. Plans for similar services at Presbyterian and other churches are also being discussed, and it is likely that next Sunday will be a general memorial day for the Canadian dead.

Fierce Fighting At Sulva Bay

Entire Turkish Battalion Captured by Allies—Turks' Heavy Losses

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, April 29.—A despatch from Athens to the Exchange Telegraph Company says fierce fighting throughout Wednesday on the shores of Suvla Bay, on the western side of the Gallipoli Peninsula, eighteen miles north of the southern extremity, resulted in a success for the Allies. The losses of the Turks were serious. One entire Turkish battalion was captured by the Allies.

War to End This Summer

So Dr. Baylis Believes—Counts on Russian Army

Dr. Charles T. Baylis, Brooklyn, N.Y., former Congregational clergyman, and in Toronto to lecture for the Canadian Patriotic League, is back from Belgium with a mass of information, and this morning gave The Telegram that opinion that the war will be over this summer. He bases his prophecy on the reported Russian army, the strategy in the Dardanelles, and the shooting of Dr. Dereschuk, who brought up hostages and heavy artillery to advance positions. Then they threw shells of high explosive into Ypres, and covered with a curtain fire every avenue through which our reinforcements might pass. In this final bombardment the destruction of Ypres was completed. The famous Cloth Hall has been completely ruined. There is scarcely a house in the town left standing. Every village on the Ypres-Poperinghe road has had its share of shells. Some noncombatants have been hit in Poperinghe, and suffered severely.

"I have learned of the wonderful change in the Russian army first-hand," he said, "and when they sweep over the Carpathians, as they surely will, it will be a factor in putting an end to the conflict. If a million fail, another million will take their places. Keep your eye on the Russian army. Then again, the doings in Turkey, and their sure success will aid the dawn of peace. But above all, when the movement from Ostend starts, and the British army is behind the German army, I am told in London the great settlement will have arrived.

WOULD REFUSE TO RULE

LONDON, April 28.—"The Queen of Holland has announced her intention to abdicate her throne if her kingdom is dragged into the war by either side," stated Mr. J. L. Elderkin, of Halifax, N.S., in discussing the position in the Netherlands. For some months past Mr. Elderkin has been in Rotterdam superintending the distribution of Canadian relief ships for Belgium. He has also persuaded a few Dutch families to try life in the province of Nova Scotia for which he is emigration agent. The mothers of families, however, were much afraid of the submarine peril and in one case refused to venture on the ocean just yet.

Public feeling in Holland, Mr Elderkin asserted, was becoming more intense every day. The people in the street did not conceal their pro-Allies sympathy.

Canadian Troops Now Relieved

Dominion Troops Have Retired to Their Rear Lines for Well Deserved Rest

NORTHERN FRANCE, April 28.—During the last thirty-six hours the enemy attacked our lines east of the Yser Canal with redoubled violence in the last desperate effort to gain a footing on the western bank. They expended their force in vain. The allies still hold firm on the western side and every attack was repulsed and enormous losses inflicted upon the enemy.

Appreciable progress has been made by the French north of the line and by the British in the south, in the direction of St. Julien. British troops now hold a new line of trenches north and northeast of Ypres. The Canadians, worn out by the four days and nights of unceasing struggle, have been relieved and retired to their rear lines for a much needed rest. They retired covered with glory, but with their ranks badly thinned.

The most critical days were Saturday and Sunday. The Germans on those days brought up howitzers and heavy artillery to advance positions. Then they threw shells of high explosive into Ypres, and covered with a curtain fire every avenue through which our reinforcements might pass. In this final bombardment the destruction of Ypres was completed. The famous Cloth Hall has been completely ruined. There is scarcely a house in the town left standing. Every village on the Ypres-Poperinghe road has had its share of shells. Some noncombatants have been hit in Poperinghe, and suffered severely.

Prisoners and Guns Taken

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, April 29. — (Afternoon's statement)—In Belgium we have continued to progress, in conjunction with Belgian troops, in a northerly direction. On the right bank of the Yser canal we took 150 prisoners, as well as two machine guns. There is nothing new on the heights of the Meuse nor in the Vosges.

The enemy has bombarded by means of flying machines using incendiary shells the open town of Epernay, occupied exclusively at the time by hospital detachments.

Definite information which has come to hand sets forth that the Zeppelin airship which eight days ago threw bombs on Dunkirk was seriously damaged by our artillery. Finding it impossible to navigate further, the machine was wrecked in the trees between Bruges and Ghent.

BOY DROWNED AT CHATHAM

CHATHAM, April 28.—Wilson Crone, the seven-year-old son of Robert Crone, was drowned this afternoon while wading in the Thames River. The little fellow got beyond his depth. His elder brother endeavored to save him, but failed. Efforts to recover the body had not been successful up to a late hour this evening.

Glasgow Officers To Make Shells

Members of Officers' Training Corps to Work in Shell Factories

GLASGOW, April 29.—Special—One hundred members of the Glasgow Officers' Training Corps will begin tonight a self-imposed task of making shells, in response to the appeal from Earl Kitchener for unlimited amounts of ammunition. These volunteers belong to the 2nd battalion of Glasgow and most of them will go to the shell factories in their own automobiles. They have undertaken to work six hour shifts, after a preliminary course of training.

KILLED UNDER FLAG

PARIS, April 28.—Three hundred refugees from Poperinghe, eight miles west of Ypres which has come under the fire of German artillery, have arrived in this city. Most of them are inmates of an orphanage and a home for the aged, conducted by Franciscan Sisters.

When the bombardment of Poperinghe was begun on Sunday, the Sisters declare, the institutions were not evacuated although they were flying the Red Cross flag. Two children were killed. Several of the inmates were wounded.

Private Tom Vance Wounded

A cable was received by Mr. and Mrs. Vance, Trent Road, this morning stating that their son, Pte. Thomas Vance, had been wounded in France and particulars would follow.

Ottawa, April 29.—The Militia Department today gave out a list of 30 non-commissioned officers and men wounded in recent fighting. Twenty of them are in the 1st Battalion, the remainder in the 2nd, 3rd, 4th, 5th, 7th, 8th, 10th, 12th, 13th, 14th and 16th battalions. Residences of two are in Russia, one in Greece, 2 in Australia, thirteen in the United Kingdom, and only one in Canada. He is private D. E. Scott, wounded, Alliston, Ont., 1st Battalion.

TO JOIN SECOND CONTINGENT

(Canadian Press Special)

TORONTO, April 29.—Edwin F. Carson, Captain of the United States National Guard, has arrived from Denver to join the Canadian expeditionary force. He is a cousin of Sir Edward Carson and served in the Boer war with the Seventh, whose athletic instructor he was.

Austria and Italy

Ordinary Railway Service Has Been Suspended, Troops are Rushed to Frontier

VERONA, April 29.—Railway service on the Austrian side of the frontier has virtually been suspended for ordinary purposes. All lines are being used to carry troops to the Italian frontier.

Drink Question Baffles Gov't

Lloyd George Pledges Himself to Never Politically Touch Drink Again

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, April 29.—Introducing this afternoon in the House of Commons the Government's scheme for restricting liquor, Lloyd-George indicated the difficulties he had met with in saying: "After weeks trying to find a solution of the question I am prepared to take a pledge never to politically touch drink again."

He outlined his plan to deal with the question of too great a consumption of alcoholic liquors in England. He proposes a very heavy surtax on both spirits and beers containing more than seven per cent spirits and the duty on spirits is to be doubled.

Lieut.-Col. Carrick Has Important Interview With Lord Kitchener

(Canadian Press Special)

PORT ARTHUR, April 29.—Lieut.-Col. Carrick cables that Sir John French sent him over to see Lord Kitchener regarding further Canadian forces, and he had a most satisfactory interview with Lord Kitchener today.

"In the face of continual opposition the allied troops have now established themselves across the end of the Gallipoli Peninsula from a point northeast of Eski Hisarlik to the mouth of a stream on the opposite side.

"They have also been beating off all attacks at Sari Bair, and are steadily advancing.

The Germans belonging to the crew of the Turkish torpedo boat Demirhisar, interned at Castro Chios, attempted to escape. They are now closely guarded.

BERLIN'S VERSION.

Berlin, April 28.—A well authenticated report has reached Berlin that the left wing of the Allies' landing forces on the Gallipoli Peninsula, which is under the command of Sir Ian Hamilton, commander of the Turkish forces, reported yesterday as holding out, has now succumbed to the Turks.

Halil Bey, former President of the Turkish Parliament, who is now in Berlin, received a telegram from Constantinople last night stating that 8,000 French and British soldiers had been driven to the sea, and that 12,000 had been captured by the Turks as a result of the attempt of the Allies to land forces to attack the Dardanelles fortifications.

German Prisoners

(Canadian Press Special)

LONDON, April 29.—In view of the widespread belief that German submarine prisoners in Great Britain are being treated with severity, Mr. MacNamara explained in the House of Commons today that the only difference between their treatment and that accorded other prisoners is that they are kept separated from other German prisoners.

Pending the fitting up of a fortress, where it is purposed keeping German submarine prisoners hereafter, Mr. MacNamara said: "They are at Chatham and Devonport detention barracks. They are not in solitary confinement, and they have all the privileges and rations accorded other prisoners. STEADILY REFORMING BULGE IN ALLIES' LINE

Impression Grows That Von Hindenburg Was Responsible for Attempted Coup at Ypres—Big Battle is Developing in Arras

North of France, April 29.—Special—Fort by fort it is true, but after all, with considerable speed, our line is again being straightened out to its original positions north of Ypres, and the bulge caused by the savage onslaught of the two army corps, with which Von Hindenburg attempted to push apart the French and British armies operating in the district, is steadily being repaired. It seems fairly certain that Von Hindenburg is paying his long promised visit to the trenches and that his apostle of massed formations has been hurling his hordes to death with the same brutal recklessness as he displayed on the Vistula. His success has been even less than in Russia, for the Allies' recovery from the first shock has been more rapid than the original plan, which it appears was to effect a breach in our lines, may already be said to have failed.

Fighting is still going on, but is we who are again on the offensive. At the little place have been utterly destroyed: St. Julien, Wieltje, Fortuin, the suburbs of Ypres, Bricleen and even Vlamertinghe.

Meanwhile, in the Arras district, another great engagement is commenced. I am told that from the number of guns employed and the concentration of fire the artillery preparation that is now going on exceeds in intensity even the great bombardment of Neuve Chapelle and Ypres. Details are not yet to hand of the scope of this newest phase.

It has been persistently reported for several days that Von Hindenburg is on the western front.

Changing flags—Sir Wilfrid Laurier abandoned Reciprocity for the time being.

A Venetian Episode

By WILLIAM CHANDLER

Many years ago, when the principal method of getting rid of an enemy or a rival was either by the stiletto in the dark or by poison, there lived in Venice an andree Canisi, a gentleman of wealth, whose only daughter, Lita, was just coming to a marriageable age. The Palazzo Canisi stood on the bank of the Grand canal, between the Rialto and St. Mark's.

Naturally among the Venetians were at that time usually contracted for by the parents of the bridegroom, but in that case, Signora Canisi having fallen in love with a young man of equal rank with herself, no objection was made to their union. Signor Ricardo Cenitmiri was a young man of wealth and family, respected by every one, and the match was regarded as an excellent one.

One afternoon, when the Grand canal was a promenade for the wealthy business of Venice, Signora Canisi and her dance were riding in the lattor's gondola, bowing to their friends and acquaintances as they passed. A stranger from Rome was also riding in a gondola with a view to seeing the beauty and fashion of Venice and as the Signora Canisi was struck with her beauty.

This man was one of the De' Medici Family, who in its time played an important part in the history of Italy and whose members committed so many crimes, though his relationship came through the mother. His name was Lorenzo Crispi. On seeing Signora Canisi he inquired who she was and on being informed took measures to secure an introduction.

When a Italian noble of those days, especially a De' Medici, saw a woman he wished to possess, he stopped at nothing. Crispi visited the Palazzo Canisi and, being a member of the most powerful family in Italy, was received with marked favor. Though he knew that Signorina Lita was betrothed to Ricardo Cenitmiri, he proposed for her hand.

The proposal interrupted the pleasant conditions which pertained to the engagement of Lita and Ricardo, for Signor Canisi instantly began to manifest bristling with him and accepting Crispi. This at once threw the lovers into a sea of trouble. Lorenzo Crispi, having made his proposition, pretended to leave the city. He settled by the Canisi family, but really had determined that Lita should be his bride.

Signor Canisi found it very difficult to force his daughter to give up her lover and marry Crispi than he had supposed. After much persuasion and many threats he told Crispi that he should be most favor the honor done him by a member of the distinguished De' Medici family, for his daughter was so wrapped up in Ricardo that she met that it would be impossible to force her to marry him. He told Signor Crispi made his proposal earlier Signor Canisi had no doubt that all would have gone well. Crispi simply bowed to indicate his sorrowful obedience to the parent's wishes.

Soon after this Crispi left Ricardo debark from his gondola at the steps of the Palazzo Canisi. Crispi ordered his own gondolier to draw up at the steps and followed Cenitmiri to the house, calling for Signor Canisi. Learning that Canisi was not at home, but was expected, Crispi went into the library to wait for him.

Meanwhile Ricardo and Lita were in another room conferring as to what they could parry the efforts that were being made to force Lita to marry the stranger from Rome. Crispi with a lackey past through the hall with wine and cakes on a salver. Stopping the servant, he drank a glass of the wine and asked the man to whom he was taking it. The latter told him that it was for Signorina Canisi and her guest.

"Present my compliments to the signorina and ask if I may be permitted to join her," said Crispi.

Permission could not well be refused, and Crispi was shown to the room where the lovers were.

"I desire," he said, with a profound bow, "to congratulate you both on your engagement. I wish you, signorina, as great happiness as I feel disappointment for myself."

Regarding to these self sacrificing words, the lovers proceeded to reciprocate, the three pledging one another in a glass of wine. Crispi was deceived, but Lita was not. She believed that Cobbi had some sinister intention and resolved to be on her guard with a view to thwarting it. Presently she asked to be excused for a few moments and left the room together. Taking position in a room where she could see and could not be seen, she saw Crispi, when Cenitmiri was not observing him, drop something in his friend's glass.

She re-entered the room, and Crispi said to her:

"I was just about to ask Signor Centimiri to pledge me in token of his good will. May I ask the same of you?"

Lita consented. Taking up one of the three glasses on the table she handed it to Ricardo, the one Crispi had tampered with she handed to him and took the third herself.

"Let us drink," she said, "to a long friendship between us."

Over Crispi's face came a look that showed the realization of his defeat. Touching the glass to his lips, he set it down and, turning, left the room without a word. The same day he left Venice.

Milady's Mirror

Dew as a Beautifier.

The heavy dews of early spring mornings are beautifiers that are rarely found and used it escapes notice. The face and neck, arms and hands bathed in freshdew to be found on grass and plants at sunrise grow white and soft and pure in texture. Without the careful cleansing of the dust of the day, with the aid of gentle cold cream to fill the pores with cleansing essence to be absorbed, should never be neglected; then in the morning, with rubbers and warm wrappings, to bathe face and hands and neck and arms with cool dew will prove a wonderful aid.

After this is done bed may be sought again for a short, restful nap before breakfast, and women who long for beautiful complexions will eat a hearty morning meal. Nature is a great teacher, and only to watch the feathered bird turned and hairy creatures is to note that they are always busied in the morning. Better a couple of meals a day of the middle class lunch, than no breakfast and a hearty meal at noon.

Sour Milk For Facial Blemishes.

The application of sour milk to spare sour milk directly to the face to relieve it of blemishes is splendid—so it is said. A bank is made of Turkish toweling, the face coated with skin food, after which the bank is very well with hot sour milk and applied to the face as hot as can be borne. When it cools it is again dipped in the hot milk and again applied. One must use judgment as to how long the applications should be continued, for some skins are more tender than others. After the treatment the skin should be gently wiped with a soft towel and a soothing astringent lotion applied. This steaming treatment is ideal, for it cleans the skin, opens the pores and gives a becoming red and healthful glow.

The cure may be hastened, provided the skin will stand it, by holding the head over a heated stove or radiator when the mask is on the face.

Exercises For the Lips.

An exercise for beautifying the lips will making them facile and flexible is the pronunciation of the vowel sounds—"ah-oh," "ah-oh-ee," "ah-oh-ee-oo." This is to be repeated ten times each at ten different times a day. A sentence which is approved by many elocution teachers for the exercising of the lips is, "Most men want some and more royal margery."

Actresses and actors are given many exercises not only for the cultivation of pleasing voices, but to beautifythe lips, mouths and other features. It is through perfect exercise that the actor's face is kept so youthful and by which all the muscles of the face are perfectly developed without fixing it.

To Develop the Arms.

Extend the arms horizontally, then imagine a heavy weight in each hand. Slowly force this weight up until the palms meet over the head; at the same time resisting the effort to raise the weight. Lower the arms and the imaginary weight in the same manner. Massaging the arms with olive oil or cocoa butter will help to make them plump. Anoint the palm of the hand with the cocoa butter and gently but thoroughly knead the flesh from the wrist to the elbow, working in the cocoa butter at the same time.

Froze Feet In Trenches

Gilbert Cunnington of Toronto, son of Sergt. Cunnington who was for some time caretaker of the Belleville Armouries, is in the city visiting friends. Gilbert is a member of the Queen's Own Regiment of Toronto, and went to the front with the First Contingent. He has been invalided home suffering from frozen feet. He was in the front in Flanders and whilst in the trenches, had the misfortune to freeze his feet. His condition was such that he was unable to walk without assistance, and hence was invalided home. A representative of The Intelligencer was this morning in conversation with Private Cunnington, who regretted that he was compelled to return home as he was anxious to remain at the front. When he left the Canadians had seen some active service but nothing of a serious nature.

Spent Enjoyable Evening at Y.M.C.A.

The Ladies' Gymnasium Classes of the Y.M.C.A. gave some party soldier lads a very happy "social evening" in the Association Building last night. Arriving at Afternoon Parties.

A point that should be carefully borne in mind concerning an afternoon or evening reception where music or some such entertainment is provided for guests is that should a number be progressing when a guest arrives he or she should wait for it to be finished before entering the room; otherwise the whole company will be disturbed.

When the hours named are, say, from 5 to 7 may delay arrival until 4, and the greatest crowd will be found between 4 and 5 o'clock. If well acquainted with the hostess or ladies in the receiving line it is just as well to time arriving earlier, so the rooms will not be crowded. If the guests are well known very enjoyable chats can be had with many friends and acquaintances rarely seen.

Where any games are named, cards or anything of that sort, guests should be extremely careful to arrive a little before the hour. Nothing so annoys a hostess as to have her carefully arranged plans go for naught on account of a belated guest. She has probably planned refreshments for a certain hour; also she feels that the punctual guests are uncomfortable, and lastly the well bred person is always punctual, that being the virtue of kings.

Avoid Mannerisms.

The "slinker" stands, the "jump handle" slides and the exceedingly free way of sitting even in smart circles are being frowned upon these days.

Perhaps it is that we have advanced sufficiently in common sense to regard these hastily formed social peculiarities as showing nothing more than a lack of good breeding. Whatever the cause, the unnatural manner is now regarded as the "thing."

Naturalness—after all, has a charm which affectation can never attain. When we meet a person who displays a perfectly natural manner, is charming, vivacious in her own, not any one else's, way, we are so delighted that invariably the possessor of these natural manners is regarded as a woman of peculiar fascination, and though one can be natural if one will. There lies the trouble—"if one will." It is most difficult to be oneself—not to imitate others. It is so easy to pick up the forms of speech, the affectations of manner which our associates display, so easy and so dangerous to the cultivation of a natural charm. It is human nature to imitate and to imitate the bad as well as the good. But once good habits of thought are formed the problem solves itself.

Pats in the Drawing Room.

"I used often to have my dogs in the drawing room when guests were expected," said a hostess, who is a dog lover. "I thought them distinctly ornamental lying on the rug before the fire.

"One was a bull, whose fore belied his gentle nature. The other was a Pom, who, despite his habit of yapping furiously, would not hurt a fly.

"It did not strike me that strangers might be afraid of my pets. But one day when I went into the drawing room I discovered a nervous caller, positively too frightened to move from the spot whence she had first caught sight of my bull's ugly face. I often had to suppress a smile at the frantic looking of my Pom, but I discovered that to some people it was no joke.

"So I resolved that on at home days and like occasions my pets should be rigidly excluded from the drawing room; also from the front doormat, because a lady told me that even when she found them both 'lying in wait' for her there she took to her heels and ran away."

Correct Way to Introduce.

There is an art in introducing correctly. First of all, an introduction must be made in a clear, understandable voice. It is an insult to your hearers to mumble your words and also over the names of strangers who are being presented to each other. It is a slight also to express either an ignorance of the importance of the introduction or a lack of interest in this duty. So, above all things when you mention the names of strangers to each other mention them so that there will be no doubt about these names, about the married or single state and about the relationship which may exist between them and you.

Always present a gentleman to a lady, mentioning the lady's name first, unless the man is very elderly or very famous and the lady is a very young girl.

Hardships in The Trenches

Mr. Alwyn Forneri Gives Interesting Description of Life in the Trenches.

The following interesting letters were written by Mr. Alwyn Forneri, a son of Canon Forneri, of Kingston. Mr. Forneri, who is well known in Belleville, enters from a military standpoint, for his grandfather was a lieutenant of Napoleon's Body Guard.

March 7, 1915.

"Have gone a few miles farther, and been in two other billets, one a warehouse and the other a factory; now we are comfortably settled in another barn for a few days.

"We have roughed it more or less since our departure from England. Our rest at the first billet was a treat; fresh milk from the cow downstairs; fresh eggs from the hens roosting on our feet and fresh bread galore, in the village, a stone's throw away, cheap tobacco and cigarettes, but coffee at first and stones to cook anything you wished to bring in. There was also a cosy barber shop, where you sat on a kitchen chair and held a bowl of water under your chin, while the twelve-year old daughter rubbed in the soap and tickled you under the chin; then you moved to another chair where an older daughter scraped your face, imagining all the time she was shaving you. When she had removed all the skin and a few of the hairs you were directed to the kitchen sink where you removed the soap, then you met mother on the way out with her hand out for the change some penny and a half.

"I was guard at cavalier village, had to stop everything and everybody to see their passes. It's no pleasant job as it irritates the occupants of motor cars, if they are in a hurry, and we get their abuse. I tell them not to blame me, blame the army.

"Our guard house consisted of a large piece of canvas hung on a ball, stay and fastened to the ground, straw to lie on; a couch, store and lantern which made things pretty comfortable.

GERMANS DESTROYED VILLAGE.

"Cavalier village we were in has since been destroyed by German artillery fire; they take a great delight in destruction, and to no purpose, apparently making more people homeless and miserable.

"If some more seeks can be sent they will be very welcome, as they soon get wet and muddy and wear out; also some cheap candles; our billets are not lighted.

A LATER LETTER.

March 15.

"Our first 48 hour shift in the trenches was rather strenuous. We were with regulars, who made it very pleasant and interesting telling us their experiences in the early fighting which was desperate.

"We carried bricks and filled sand bags all day, and at night completed a piece of breastwork began the night before, covering up the bricks and bags of earth, which we dug up in front of the trench. We were bothered very little by our "sausage friends," only a few occasional shots when we made too much noise, and occasionally a few rounds from their machine gun.

"Our billet was several miles away from the trenches, and after crossing muddy fields, slippery bridges, barbed wire and through sticky ditches filth our load, bending double every time a star shell went up—by the time we reached our trench we were like rags. We never worked night and day both except this 48 hours, and I think it will not occur again as we will have our own trenches and our own officers. It's rather hard to get into the shift business, work a few hours and then sleep a few. No doubt my nerves kept me from sleeping.

72 HOURS IN TRENCHES.

"Our next billet was a factory a few miles away; stayed there 24 hours and then into the trenches 72 hours. Here we did no work except the sentry duty, listening patrol, wood and water fatigue. This trench was not as comfortable as our former one. Sleeping accommodation was limited, so we took turns. At night you could distinctly hear the "sausage boats" singing and whistling and calling out to one another; there would be an exchange of compliments and then a volley followed by wild laughs and more compliments. Our artillery commenced firing after breakfast. After a dozen rounds or so we woke up and with his trench mortars threw a few more souvenirs. Our trench was not shelled, but further along when the trench took a curve, the shells exploded all around them. The last day it rained all day and an uncomfortable drizzle made everything nice and sticky to lie in. My last shift out, one hand on the right got nervous, and opening fire they kept the two of us flat in glue while the twigs were cut above us, and an occasional thud in the bank made us think of our happy homes, and wonder why we left them. Most of the men got their wounds from sticking their heads over the parapet to shoot or have a look at our shells as they burst. So far it has been very tame, as we and the Germans opposite us have tried no stunts. Later on we may be in a battle or two, we don't know. In some places the line has advanced more than at other points, and so it is a case of wait and watch at these points.

A SHRAPNEL RECEPTION.

We had a reception of shrapnel one day, but we were in the trenches and quite safe. Had four days and nights of this. It's no cinch going through the mud, ditches and trenches with a load on your back and having to dash every two hundred yards. Just at present, with no moon, you can imagine walking blindly, falling over wire, brick, and sand bags, telephone wire and barbed wire, a rifle on your shoulder and a load of grub on your back, from that a bang for the bullet, and it's the dreadful load that nearly breaks your heart as well as your back and plays the mischief with your English."

Pleasing Event At Kyle House

Last evening the dining room of the Kyle House was the scene of a pleasing event. Through the kindness of Mr. and Mrs. R. Ludman, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. J. Smith were invited to take supper with the boarders. After the supper was over Mr. Ludman rose and Mr. and Mrs. Smith were presented with a handsome silver tea set by the boarders. Mr. Smith was taken by surprise, but Mr. Smith, recovering after a few seconds, made a neat lit the speech and warmly expressed his thanks for the gift. Then all partook of an excellent supper, after which Mr. and Mrs. Smith chatted with friends for a while and returned to their home, followed by the best wishes of all. Following is the address:—

Mr. and Mrs. Smith:—

We who have been with you at the Kyle House feel regret over your withdrawal from it, and we wish to express to you our deep gratitude for the courtesy and kindly interest you have shown us. We came here as strangers, but you have made us at once feel at home. The homelike atmosphere in our boarding establishment has given us reason to think from our hearts the kind and genial administers of this delightful home in a boarding way. Our most trifling wants were always met by you, and often even anticipated, when we did not express our wishes.

We hope to-day parted with friends who have made it their study to make our hearts as you, on e and all, in wishing you and yours a long, prosperous and happy life. We ask you to accept this testimonial as a slight token of our appreciation of your kindness to us all.

(Sgd.) B. LUFFMAN,
And boarders of the Kyle House.

Red Cross Appeal To The Farmers

The following appeal to farmers signed by Mr. Jas. W. Robertson, has been issued by the Red Cross Society at Ottawa:

Our country, with its Allies, is waging a great war for justice, for the protection of small nations in the enjoyment of their rights, for continued and growing freedom, and for the maintenance of its pledged word of honor. Much destruction and desolation are being caused. Lives are being lost by the thousand. Canada's first contingent is now in the thick of it. Some will fall sick; many may be wounded; some will pay the last full measure of devotion to their country and its cause.

The Red Cross Society exists to succor the sick and wounded in war. The need of Red Cross Service is great and growing greater as the war goes on. The price of progress towards lasting peace is very, very dear. It costs lives, homes, health and much besides. Canada's part in the process of payment, through giving for Red Cross work, is mercifully light and easy, even when all have given to the extent of really feeling it.

The soldiers and sailors pay the price exacted by the desolating struggle from week to week. What they paid in blood and did in sacrifice a month ago was not enough for them shall we say it was enough for us? What they are doing and suffering and achieving have put aside, for the time, all thoughts and plans for individual welfare, comfort and safety. They don't hesitate to establish precedents. But they are precedents of heroic sacrifice for our country and its honor, or any other cause and ideals that they may be upheld.

Farmers, individually as well as through their Institutes, Clubs and Cheese and Butter Factories, are in a position to help very greatly. Their business does not suffer from the war. Prices of nearly all farm products have gone up. While labor is scarce there is time to think of the boys at the front and to send the Red Cross Society a gift to be spent to the sick and wounded.

Farmers are generous in sentiment and generous in giving when their hearts and heads are in the way. This is a case when they go so point clearly persuasively and urgently. In this crisis, in the lives of nations and in the lives of stricken soldiers, none can pray too much, do too much or give too much.

I appeal to farmers to send me sums from $1 to $50 during the first week in May. Every $20 provides one additional hospital bed with the giver's name over it. By sending me about $10,000, you would serve your country well, bring credit to yourselves and make all of us very proud of you. For the sake of the wounded boys, make the gift substantial. It will be an investment toward the recovery of gallant Canadian soldier who stood in our stead that our cause might be upheld.

COOLER WEATHER COMING

The hot weather has been caused by a heat wave which is passing over Canada and the United States. Owing due to the winds which have all blown out of the south. At the Observatory Tuesday the mercury ascertained that Monday, when 84 degrees was registered was the hottest April day in 78 years, and 82 was recorded on Tuesday. The highest April temperature that ever was 62 degrees, while the warmest ever was 80 above in 1882. Sixty degrees for the beginning of a week Wednesday morning, this week's five degrees cooler than the previous day. New York reported 90 degrees on Tuesday, while Washington, D.C. swelled with a temperature of 96 degrees. The Weather Man forecasts fresh northwest winds, fair and cooler to day. Cooler conditions are spread due to the west, he say. A moderate depression over Lake Superior is moving fairly rapidly eastward.

MASSASSAGA.

The W.M.S. held their April meeting at the home of Mrs. Herb Snider on Thursday afternoon, April 22nd. Fifteen present. Mrs. G. F. Lent was re-elected as president for the ensuing year and seconded that all other officers remain as last year with the addition of Mrs. John Wesse as assistant organist. Two presented, Mrs. Wesse and Mrs. Lent. In her report said that $116 had been received during the past year.

Miss Jean Hamilton, a former grandmother, Mrs. Vermilyea of Belleville last week.

Miss R. Seeley and Mr. R. Maidens spent Sunday at the latter's home.

Several of the farmers are about all through with their seeding.

Mr. and Mrs. M. Brummel took tea at Mr. Dunlop's on Sunday.

Rev. Frank and Mrs. Hazard of Belleville spent Friday evening at D. Anderson's.

Mr. Earl McCoy of Queens University is spending a few days with his grandmother, Mrs. C. Robinson.

Mr. and Mrs. R. Hazard spent the week-end at Trenton.

Mr. Horwood of Albert College took charge of the services on Sunday in the absence of Rev. Hoare, who was attending the funeral of his brother near Lindsay.

Beautiful weather and extensive casualty lists seem to be related.

A CAPABLE TRIO.

War time has always been taken advantage of by unscrupulous persons in order to make inordinate profits. During the Crimean War a Bermondsey leather firm, in England, made a small fortune, while the British soldiers suffered terribly for the want of proper boots. The prompt investigation into Canada into charges that the boots supplied were inadequate—although it showed that the complaints had been exaggerated for political purposes—is a proof that in these days no such frauds will be allowed to be perpetrated. We were common during the wars of the last century. The Borden Government has fgiven an effectual proof of its sincerity in declaring that no such dishonorable methods will be tolerated by selecting three independent gentlemen to oversee the war purchases of the Government. That every effort has been made to appoint thoroughly impartial and representative men is shown by the fact that they have been selected from the three largest cities in the Dominion: Mr. H. Laporte resident at Montreal; Mr. George E. Galt, at Winnipeg; and the Hon. A. E. Kemp at Toronto. The latter gentleman isat Minister without portfolio in the Ontario Government, and is a man generally respected in Toronto for his probity and business capacities. A better selection could not have been made as all three men have had a large and successful business experience and their services cannot but be of advantage to the Dominion. The Government have been faced with a herculean task in equipping such a large army of men for active service, and it was impossible to have control over every little detail. By appointing three such capable men to supervise future purchases the possibility of exorbitant charges being made in the future is reduced to a minimum. The Government evidently bent on seeing that the country gets proper value for the money to be expended on war munitions.

CANADA'S TRADE.

Considering the disturbed economic conditions resulting from the war it was only to be expected that the trade of Canada would show a falling off. The statement issued by the Hon. J. D. Reid, Minister of Customs, for the fiscal year ended March 31st is eminently satisfactory as it shows but a slight falling off in trade compared with the previous year. Canada's trade was still over a billion dollars, being $1,078,173,-000, compared with $1,112,362,000 for the previous fiscal year. A noticeable increase in two of the principal exports is a very satisfactory feature. The export of manufactured articles totalled $85,339,000, against $57,455,000 for the year 1913-14. There was also a large increase in the exports of animals and their products, the figures being $74,390,000 as against $53,349,000 in the previous year. There was a slight decrease during the year in the exports of products of the mines, fisheries and forest. There is a considerable falling off in imports, both dutiable and free, the former dropping from $410,130,000 to $279,-717,000, and the latter from $208,-199,000 to $175,654,000, but there was a large increase in coin and bullion imported, the figures being $131,992,000 as against $15,335,-000 for the preceding year. Taking the financial report as a whole, there is every reason to take an optimistic view. Considering the paralyzing effect upon trade which the war had at its commencement it is satisfactory to find that it made a recovery, and that under the acute circumstances the falling off has not been greater. It is in itself evident that the trade of Canada rests upon a solid foundation. While some industries are feeling the numbing effects of this disastrous war others are showing renewed activity; and there is every reason to take a hopeful view of the future trade of Canada.

CURRENT COMMENT

Respirators for the Canadian soldiers are more urgently needed than socks or mosquito bells just now.

Helmets worn by miners who have to enter mines filled with poisonous gases may soon be part of the necessary equipment of soldiers in active service.

Boston Post: "My boy," said the successful merchant, "never let your pursuits be idle. Remember that money talks, but it does not talk in its sleep."

Montreal Mail: A pure food law for Canada becomes more and more an absolute necessity every time the report of the Dominion analyst is issued.

Harper's Weekly: We cannot understand why America did not lend the enormous weight of her influence to the cause of international morality by protesting against the violation of Belgium.

Should the allies feel impelled to retaliate for the use of poisonous gases by the Germans, it would be merely a case of fighting the devil with fire.

In his philosophical way Lord Bryce explains that German savagery and unscrupulousness can be traced to the German taith in the states as a nonmoral power in action, a supernatural agency, if it be intelligent, in pretty entire to become immoral.

Kingston women have sent 9,000 pairs of socks to the Canadian soldiers. That means an average of a couple of pairs for every woman in Kingston. In the matter of socks Kingston will probably done better than any other Canadian town.

Lite. (To the Kaiser)....
It might is right
(As you impress
In prose and song)
Losing the fight,
World without ends
That you are wrong!

Hamilton Herald: In Quebec the liberals are just aching for a general election so that they may thank their party will be able to make gains in that province. However, it would be safe to wager that Ontario Liberals are opposed to a general election by an opposite reason.

It is not surprising to learn that Dr. Dernburg defends the use of asphyxiating bombs by the Germans. The doctor reserves his opinion on illegal practices in war until it is certain that the German side or may has adopted those practices; then he is quite sure that the methods are permissible and right. His is a convenient creed.

Springfield Republican: History can hardly in the terms of the note presented by the German government to Secretary Bernstorff. It recalls strikingly the memorandum made in 1870 to the British government by the German ambassador in London about a Count von Bernstorff to complete the comedy-note on the sale of munitions of war when Lord Derby's "equitable" view, in spite of the so, could take advantage of the opportunity. It was Bismarck who raised the point then, but aside from stirring up the "equitable" press, he did not press the matter; no doubt realizing that he had no case.

Beck's Weekly: "Going dry" seems to be becoming a habit in the United States. According to a recent compilation of statistics it is shown that whereas in 1906 there were only four states totally "dry," in 1915 there are 18. The "dry" states embrace 35 per cent. of the total territory of the United States and fifty per cent. of the total of the population. The prohibition advocates figure that the entire country will come under the "dry" denomination within the next five years. On the other hand, the United States revenue shows a gradual but persistent increase in the per capita consumption of alcoholic liquors from 1906, when it was 6.91 gallons, to 1913, when it was 22.79 gallons. The figures for 1911 show a very slight falling off from the preceding year, the per capita consumption for that year being 22.76 gallons. Because a community votes against it using licenses to dealers in alcoholic beverages is no proof that the dwellers therein do not indulge in such beverages. Witness the smug suburbs as composed within the limits of Greater Montreal which could no more tolerate a saloon in their midst than they would permit mad dogs to wander at large in their streets, but in which practically every household maintains its sous cellar. Going "dry" does not always mean going dry.

Beck's Weekly: We must wait and see what President Wilson has in mind when he says the time of crisis is approaching. He is not much given to idle talking, and when he put it that way he probably had it definitely in mind that something is going to happen soon, or shortly. We know nothing. Indeed, when old Mr. Asquith says, as he did the other day, to claim her right to have a finger in the pie on a pretty wide scale that everybody else has been actively debating on the subject of poster. President Wilson has a staff of very efficient but not always official helpers, so we know he can always count when there is something that needs doing, and so this idea has been skipping back and forth in Europe a great deal of late.

We publish today a second appeal from the Red Cross Society, written by Dr. James Robertson, Dr. Robertson is well known to the farmers of Canada as Professor Robertson. He began his official public service at the Ontario Agricultural College nearly thirty years ago. Twenty-five years later he went to Ottawa as Dairy Commissioner for the Dominion. The Dairying Service of the Department of Agriculture soon became known throughout the world. From the Province Edward Island to Alberta, farmers profited by the Illustration Dairy Stations and the Travelling Instructors. The output of cheese and butter in Canada added to the reputation of its rural workers. Other publications of an instructional and growing value were inaugurated, while Professor Robertson was Commissioner of Agriculture. Among them were the Live Stock Branch, the Cold Storage Act, the Seed Grain Competitions, the Trial Shipments of Fruit to the Unit Kingdom and extensions to Dairy Institutes. In these and many other ways Dr. Robertson has given the farmers of Canada the best that was in him. He says he is their debtor, for many opportunities, for much kindness and for warm appreciations. But they are distinctions too. And he now requests them of that for the first time in or life he publicly exhibits his right and privilege to appeal to them for this worthy cause.

WAR NOTES

The citizens of Guelph, through the Canadian Red Cross Society, and the people of Wellington county have presented a motor ambulance to the society for service at the front.

The Yukon chapter, No. 1, of the Order of the Eastern Star, of Dawson City, Y.T., has forwarded to the Canadian Red Cross Society the sum of $1,000. The people of the Yukon Territory have supported the Red Cross in a generous manner.

Lieut. H. Sedley Pinkey, of the Duke of Cornwall's Light Infantry, promoted as killed in the list of British officers yesterday, was born in Montreal, and was a son of the late Mr. Charles Pinkey, B.C.L., a Montreal artist, who died nearly three years ago at his home at Hudson's Heights.

A call was received yesterday by Mr. Frederick Williams-Taylor, stating that Lt.Col. H. Kemmis Betty, of Ottawa, Director Adjutant of the 2nd Brigade, Canadian Expeditionary Forces, had been seriously wounded in action. Lt.Col. Betty is a relative of " Lady Williams-Taylor by marriage. His command included troops from Ontario and western Canada.

That the west is doing its share is shown by the fact that in the past three weeks two shipments of 6 cases each arrived from Calgary. A large consignment was also received from Hamilton and 2,000 socks from the Brandon chapter of the Daughters of the Empire. These latter articles were for the War Contingent Association.

It is an interesting fact to note that from August 30 to December 31 last 2,543 cases were sent from Montreal and from December 31 to April 15 the number shipped totalled 5,148. Thus 2,600 more cases were shipped during the past three and a half months than during the previous four months. These shipments do not include any article sent other than Red Cross supplies.

Another large consignment of Red Cross supplies left Toronto a few days ago when 425 cases were sent to Halifax en route to London, where they will be distributed by the Canadian Commissioners. In addition there is no less than 8,696 cases have left headquarters and supplies from all parts of the country still continue to arrive every day. Among the articles now received are 4,861 shirts and 5,595 socks besides a large assortment of other articles.

The Girls' Red Cross Auxiliary, of Aurora, Ontario, have for some time been making a small khaki bag containing bandages, wool pad, piece of gauze and waterproof. Altogether these bags girls have made of these little bags. Full description and directions are printed in English and French on the outside cover which also has the maple leaf printed above the directions.

While the appeal of the society for tobacco has been met in a generous manner, a large quantity is still needed if the Canadian troops at the front are to be supplied with this luxury. Pipes, tobacco in the plug tobacco and smokes of all kinds will be welcomed at headquarters and also money to buy them. It is not necessary to point out what a great deal of comfort and pleasure a few ounces of tobacco affords our soldiers in the trenches and in hospital.

One of the most interesting gifts received so far by the Canadian Red Cross Society reached headquarters recently in the form of one scarf and mitten. Fredericia, Denmark, was represented by Miss J. M. Barnards, of Ladies' Aid No. 1, and the unique little package was a note which said: "With love and lady's prayers and best wishes, who left Euclid in 1851." The accompanying the message was a photograph of a lady knitting. Fredericia is away in sunny Hawaii, has not for gotten our brave soldiers.

Colonel Gorrell, who is in charge of the Field Ambulance Transport Hospital at Cliveden, England, in a recent letter to Mr. Noel Marshall, chairman of the executive committee of the Canadian Red Cross Society, asked that the Canadian people be told that the soldiers specially appreciated this luxury. Colonel Gorrell will be glad to receive any maple product and the farmers' wives and lady friends could not be any better way than to send a box of the dear people who send Red Cross supplies. Then they would know what a blessing the things they have made are. They cannot make too many socks, shirts, mitts, helmets and pyjamas. They are valuable I can assure you.

Few Canadian regiments, so far as is known, have suffered so severely during the battles of the past week as the 13th Royal Highlanders of Montreal. Officers gallantly volunteered in a body for the purpose of forming a Highland Regiment for active service from the Canadian militia. The regiment left from the 5th and responded. Major H. Bruce Gordon was killed in action and Lieut. Melville Greenshields wounded.

It is understood that a number of the stations in Toronto are being utilized for the Third and succeeding contingents, and as reinforcements will be mobilized at Valcartier they will be trained there. A good deal of work is now being done on the enemy alien prisoners who have been sent to the big camp to clear it in preparation for this.

Most sympathy is felt by the officers of the 48th Highlanders, King St., Capt. Flag Mason, of that Regiment, who was killed in the battles. King St. regt., is reported killed, while serving with the 13th Battalion Canadian Imperial Force at the Ypres battle. Capt. Flag-Mason was one of an English military family, and he has relatives in Toronto. As soon as war was declared by the British Government Capt. Flag-Mason and joined the colours. Lieut. King Mason is now in Canada on recruiting service. Capt. King Mason, as soon a he could settle his business affairs at his home at Saskatoon, Sask., coming to Montreal and joining Lt. Col. Gunn's 41st battalion, in command of which the other son is serving with the Imperial forces in India.

Record Cement Order for Canada

Amounts to 2,500,000 Barrels to be Used in Finishing the Welland Canal

Probably what is the largest cement order ever placed on the American Continent, outside of that for the Panama Canal contract, has just been reported by Mr. F. P. Jones, general manager of the Canada Cement Company. According to Mr. Jones, it amounts to 2,500,000 barrels. This is not exactly a war order but in its beneficial effects it will be even larger, as profits will not be so near to costs.

On the local street, there has been the impression that business with the Canada Cement Company has not been good, but as confirmed by the Journal of Commerce recently, there has been a generally good business passing and Mr. Jones, who at the beginning of the war drew up a schedule, has been able to follow it very closely and, in fact, do somewhat better than it outlined. For some little time past, the company has been opening up its various plants and with the present order the company will be extremely busy.

Orders on the company's books at the present time are a good deal larger than they were at this time last year. This statement made by Mr. Jones is of interest to the many shareholders of the company and shareholders need not worry as long as the situation is maintained.

Bonar Law Sends Congratulations

Achievements of Canadians Excite Admiration and Sympathy of Opposition Leader

LONDON April 28. Bonar Law leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons, on behalf of the Canadian Associated Press last night the following personal message of congratulation on the gallant achievements of the Canadian troops in the recent desperate engagements:

"Please convey to the Canadian troops in the name of the House of Commons and myself our admiration and sympathy. We have followed with the deepest interest the splendid gallantry and dauntless heroism which have won for the Canadian troops the admiration of the whole British Empire. As a Canadian by birth I am proud of what they have done and are doing, but it is with saddened sympathy that I think of the sadness with which these deeds at the front have filled so many Canadian homes."

BLOOD-STAINED FLAG RETURNS TO CANADA

Had Been Given to Private Corcoran—Sent Back on His Death

HARRISTON, April 28.—Last August the Harriston boys went left for Valcartier to join the First Contingent they were escorted to the station by a large number of citizens carrying flags. One of the flags was presented to Private James Corcoran as he stepped on the train. He prized that flag very much, and kept it safely at Valcartier, and Salisbury Camps. Before leaving Salisbury for France he knew that he had to leave behind the trades in the event of anything happening him that they should send the flag back to the Daughters of the Empire. Private Corcoran was killed while tige trenches on March 5, and his comrades, true to their promise, sent the flag, which had been presented to him by Mrs. Meiklejohn, Regent of General Chapter. The flag has considerable mud of the trenches upon it, and several stains of blood, no doubt that of the gallant Canadian soldier who gave his life for his country.

He who wishes to get a hearing must always should not talk about the war, but about the prospects of peace.

Temperance Men Still Moving

They are Opposed to Compensation Men Entering Business Again

At the meeting of the License Commissioners held at Montreal, a deputation representing the Dominion Alliance and the Anti-Alcoholic League tried to get a ruling to the effect, that those men who get compensation for the loss of their licenses, shall not be allowed to enter the business again at any time in the future. It was represented that a man might get $5,000 for a license but through a ruling of the commissioners lose the right of another license at $2,000, and proceed with his business with an extra sum of $3,000 in his pockets.

Mr. S. J. Carter, president of the Dominion Alliance, congratulated the License Commission on the fact that seventy licenses would be wiped out after May 1st, in accordance with the law. He considered that it would be creating a very bad precedent if those who were compensated should be allowed to return to the business later, and he thought that the commission had discretionary power in the matter.

Rev. Father Daly, representing the Anti-Alcoholic League, considered that to allow men compensated for losing their licenses to come into the business would encourage the marketing of licenses. Rev. Fathers Tourneau and Villeneuve, Rev. Mr. Mc-Cutcheon, and Mr. John H. Roberts sustained the same views.

Chairman Choquet said that nothing could be done in the matter, as the list of licenses on which they had recommended compensation had been sent to Quebec, and some of the men had already bought new licenses.

GALLANTRY OF CANADIAN OFFICERS

LONDON, April 27.—Sergeant Bennett, of the Sixteenth Battalion, when seen in a London hospital said: "The Germans appeared to wait for us, and then having got the range proceed lead into us. But they could not withstand our attack. I saw two put up their hands and shout 'Kamerad, mercy, mercy.' They appeared to think we were French. I received a bullet wound in the wrist and just at that moment, in front I saw an officer fall. The Canadian officers led the men in true British fashion. I was going to see whether this officer had been seriously hit when a piece of shrapnel struck my elbow. I crawled about 100 yards when two bullets caught me in the side. There were also some brave women about when I got back to the dressing station. Not more than a thousand yards from the German firing line I saw two women serving hot drinks."

Agricultural News

A striking feature of the important position which Saskatchewan holds as a wheat-producing province of the Dominion is contained in a table of statistics published recently at Ottawa showing the stocks of wheat held in Canada on February 8th, 1915. This table divides this into two classes, (1) transit, and (2) the quantity of wheat in hands of farmers themselves. It is estimated that on the date named there were 79,130,503 bushels held in elevators, etc., and 29,584,000 held by the farmers of the Dominion. Of the latter amount it is interesting to note that one third is credited to Saskatchewan with 10,269,000 bushels, which is the best showing made by any of the provinces. Alberta comes second with 7,215,000 bushels, and Manitoba third with a total of 5,701,000 bushels.

FIELD BEANS

A special study of field beans is made by Prof C. A. Zavitz in Bulletin No. 222 of the Ontario Department of Agriculture. This bulletin is now opportune, when circumstances are leading so many Ontario farmers to turn to bean culture in an experimental way. From his long experience and observation the author is able to supply the very information that would be bean growers are seeking. The bulletin is for free distribution.

Vigilance the Price of a Good Complexion

To retain the natural beauty of the skin only proper care and treatment is needed. Our skins are naturally clear and healthy, but the demands of everyday life and unnatural living quickly spoil their freshness and beauty. So necessary is this care that no woman can afford to neglect it. The Nyal people have just issued a new booklet, "Your Complexion," which contains most useful and interesting information on how to care for the complexion in such a way that its beauty and freshness will be preserved for many years. Also includes directions for best methods of massage. The constant use of some good preparation, such as Nyal's Face Cream, is absolutely necessary to keep the skin really clean and healthy. It is a nourishing, oxygenated, tissueless skin-food which leaves no shine. Get a 25c or 50c jar and rub it gently into the skin. See how quickly it is absorbed, leaving the skin pleasantly refreshed and delicately fragrant. 1206

All Nyal preparations are justly famous, and none more so than Nyal's Face Cream, which we unhesitatingly recommend. Call or telephone us for your copy of this book, which contains most valuable information.

STOLEN JOY-RIDE ENDS IN HOSPITAL

TORONTO, April 28.—Michael Dorsay, aged 22 years, 106 Duchess street who was thrown from a rig which he had stolen, when he collided with a motorcycle at Wilton avenue and Seaton street last night sustaining severe scalp wounds, recovered consciousness today at St. Michael's Hospital and hopes are now held out for his recovery. William Mandrill 177 Seaton street, who was riding the motorcycle, needed five stitches to close up a wound in his head. He too, is progressing favorably.

The rig belonged to Mr. Richard Peak, 656 Ontario street, and it was stolen in front of Gladwicks' Hotel, Duchess and Sherbourne streets. Dorsay sprang in and drove madly up to Queen street and along to Seaton street, scattering pedestrians and traffic. He had almost reached Wilton avenue, when he crashed into the motorcycle. Both were buried to the ground. Dorsay will be arrested as soon as he recovers sufficiently. He is being guarded by a policeman at the hospital.

"Lest We Forget"

Premier Asquith Denounces German Calculated Cruelty and Crime

Speaking in the debate in the House of Commons on the treatment of British prisoners in Germany, Premier Asquith said: "It is a horrible story from every point of view—one of the blackest spots on even German method of war. My object in rising is to say with all emphasis and all deliberation that we shall not forget, and we ought not to forget, this horrible record of calculated cruelty and crime.

"We shall at the end of this war hold it to be our duty to exact such reparation against those who are proved to be guilty agents in this matter as it may be possible for us to inflict. I do not think we should be doing our duty either to those brave and fortunate men, to to the honor of our country, or to the plain dictates of humanity, if we should be content with anything less than that."

Canada Sending Help to Poland

WINNIPEG, April 28.—The Polish relief committee of Canada, with headquarters here, has received a wire from Paderewski, at New York in which the distinguished pianist says he doubts whether he can visit the Dominion before returning to Europe. "I am glad to hear," he adds, "Canada is starting the noble work of relief for devastated Poland, and our starving countrymen, and that it finds much support from the Government and generous Canadian people. Needs are enormous, help urgent; misery indescribable; two hundred towns and 7,500 villages destroyed; over ten million people menaced by famine; thousands dying daily of hunger."

FOR RELIEF IN BELGIUM

LONDON, April 27.—The appeal of the British committee for relief in Belgium has resulted in £99,000 ($300,000) being collected in less than 24 hours. New South Wales contributed $142,750. The Lord Mayor of Melbourne's fund aggregated $160,000.

Peace Congress At The Hague

British Government Limits Permits to Women to Attend the Congress

No fewer than 180 British women applied for permits to attend the peace congress at The Hague, but at the behest of the Foreign Office the list was weeded out to a maximum of twenty-four. Even these are still in England.

Reginald McKenna, the Home Secretary, questioned on this subject, said the Foreign Office considered it altogether undesirable that as many women as originally contemplated should attend a conference near the seat of war, where agents of Great Britain's enemies were active in endeavoring to procure fragments of intelligence concerning the movements of British troops and warships.

The Home Secretary repudiated the suggestion that the delegation of British women had in any sense an official character. He said the Government was not encouraging international congresses in the present circumstances. Mr. McKenna raised a laugh by remarking drily that none of the women selected to go had been able to depart, owing to the fact that since the permits were given communication between England and Holland had been stopped.

To Aid Allies

Russians at Odessa to Land On Eastern Coast of Turkey

PETROGRAD, April 28.—Russian expeditionary forces are to aid the western Allies in their campaign against Constantinople. Troops are being concentrated at Odessa, where they will be taken to the eastern coast of Turkey to effect a landing under the protection of the Russian fleet.

The Emperor Nicholas has gone to Odessa to review these troops before their departure. Announcement was made today that the Czar had arrived at Odessa, and it is believed the expedition will sail within a few days. Russian transports and Black Sea steamers have been assembled at Odessa to convey the troops to Turkey.

The recent bombardment of the Bosphorus forts was explained today as a move to prevent the egress of the Turkish fleet into the Black Sea. The Ottoman warships were driven back to watch Constantinople under the fire directed against the Bosphorus and Russian torpedo boats are lying off the Straits to attack any warships that emerge. It is declared at the Admiralty that the Turkish fleet has been completely bottled up.

In the meantime three flotillas of Russian torpedo boats are scouring the Black Sea in search for merchant ships. A despatch from Odessa states that during the operations of last week off the Anadion coast twenty-eight Turkish ships were sunk by the destroyers. Four of these were steamers.

To weaken Turkey further and prevent troops being sent from the Caucasus front to aid the Ottoman forces in Europe, the Russians have opened a sharp offensive in the Caucasus. The following official statement was issued today:

On the Caucasus front we are continuing our offensive along the coast of the Black Sea and in the direction of Olty. In the Alashkert valley our cavalry engaged the Kurds, scattered them, and drove them back ward."

The corpse was unclothed. An investigation has been ordered. The body was removed to the Morgue, the Chief Coroner notified, and an inquest will be held.

SPRING NOVELTY.

Tan Checked Worsted Used For Useful Garment.

SPORTS COAT.

The up to date girl is quite as much interested in accessories and sports as is her brother, and the clothing she selects to wear upon the occasions when she participates in a game of tennis is quite as smart as is his. The coat shown in the illustration is designed to be worn to and from the tennis court in the motor and is to this end built of heavy tan checked worsted. It is smartly short in front, sloping downward to three-quarter length in the back. The collar is high, and huge patch pockets snugly envelop the hands. The buttons are large and are covered with the material.

THE DETACHABLE LINING.

This Is For Wear Under Handsome Blouses of Silk or Crape.

The careful women will find it advisable to instruct her seamstress to make a detachable lining of fine net or habutai silk for wear beneath the blouse of georgette crape of radium or of some one of the new striped silks. Such a foundation should have sleeves rather loosely shaped and terminating just above the elbow. In warm weather they may be open across the back and on the arms is apt to stain or fade the due materist of the outer garment.

The lining should be made separately and then loosely tacked to the inside of the blouse about the neck and shoulders. It will then be easily removed for a visit to the laundry or for other renovation. Two linings for a fine waist are better than one, because this insures a greater preservation of the outer fabric through cleanliness of the inner, and while one lining is being laundered the other may be readily adjusted to the blouse. This same idea applies to the frock of silk or of linen. Of course it is not advisable where the outer fabric is of sheer material like organdie, this voile or kindred materials.

Allowance should be made for shrinkage when making up a new blouse or dress. A couple of extra blouse inches should be extended beneath the belt, and at the top of the skirt the material may be turned back so that after it comes from its first tubbing it may be let down without serious inconvenience.

Filling For Pincushions.

Coffee grounds rinsed in cold water and spread out to dry thoroughly on a sheet of paper make filling for a cushion which is warranted not to rust needles or pins thrust into it.

FADS AND FANCIES.

Shirring marks many frocks of soft fabrics. The skirts are shirred on cords about the hips, thus disposing of fullness that might otherwise be a forward in a skirt not cut on circular lines.

The fichu has many advocates this spring. There are some pretty frocks of taffeta, with handkerchief fichus of the sheerest muslin. Many lingerie frocks have ruffled fichus draped about the shoulders. And even some evening frocks show this quaint adjunct.

If one may judge by the shops, women are again going to buy separate leather belts, for many and good ones are shown. They are to wear with one piece frocks and with coats of linen and of wool.

There is some difficulty about getting imported laces owing to the war, but there is no difficulty in getting lacy and sheer effects in cotton fabrics that, for instance, a fabric with all the sheerness and irregularity of surface of all over lace, yet with a good deal of body and strength.

A student of New York University has invented a typewriter for the Chinese; there are 4,200 keys, each representing a character.

SKINS BY THOUSANDS

William Lech and Sons have purchased muskrat skins to the number of about ten thousand, within the last few days. This is the season of the year when the pelts are marketed by the trapper and by all accounts, this year's catch has been very good. The price paid is twenty-six cents a piece. This is about ten cents lower than last year and is an indication of the condition of the fur market. Mr. Lech states that it is the lowest price paid in fifteen years. They have been up as high as a dollar. The Indians around Rice Lake district are responsible for a large share of the catch, while a fair proportion of the pelts are obtained around Trenton—Peterboro' Examiner.

The Hungarian Chamber has refused to pass the new military credits. They fail to see any sense or reason putting more paint on a house that is about ready to fall to pieces.

CUPID'S TOIL

"Hush!" the girl said, her face turned from me. "Hush, Mr. Heraputh! You don't know me, indeed. You have seen so little of me. Please say nothing more about it. You are completely under a delusion."

"It is no delusion that I love you, Barbara!" I cried.

"It is! it is!" she repeated, freeing her hand. "There, if you will not take no answer—come—come at three tomorrow." But mind, I promise you nothing—I promise nothing," she added feverishly, and fled from the room, leaving me to talk to grandmamma as best, and escape as quickly as, I might.

I longed for a great fire that evening, and, falling one, tired myself by tramping unknown streets of the East End, striving to teach myself that any trouble tomorrow might bring was but a shadow, a sentiment, a thing not to be mentioned in the same breath with the want and toil of which I caught glimpses up each street and lane that opened to right and left. In the main, of course, I failed; but the effort did me good, sending me home tired out, to sleep as soundly as if I were going to be hanged next day, and not—which is a very different thing—to be put upon my trial.

"I will tell Miss Guest you are here, sir," the man said. I looked at all the little things in the room which I had come to know well—her work basket, the music upon the piano, the table cover, her photograph, and wondered if I were to see them no more, or if they were to become a part of my everyday life. Then I heard her come in, and turned quickly, feeling that I should learn my fate from her greeting.

"Bab!" The word was wrung from me perforce. And then we stood and looked at one another, she with a strange pride and defiance in her eyes, though her cheek was dark with a blushes, and I with wonder and perplexity in mine. Wonder and perplexity that quickly grew into conviction, a certainty that the girl standing before me in the short-skirted brown dress with the turned back collar and loose neck-ribbon was the Bab I had known in Norway; and yet that the eyes—I could not mistake them now, no matter what unaccustomed look they might wear—were Barbara Guests's!

"Miss Guest—Barbara," I stammered, grappling with the truth, "why have you played this trick upon me?"

"It is Miss Guest and Barbara now," she cried, with mocking courtesy. "Do you remember, Mr. Heraputh, when it was Bab? When you trusted me as a kind of toy and a plaything, with which you might be as intimate as you liked; and hurt my feelings—yes, it is weak to confess it, I know—day by day and hour by hour?"

"But, surely, that is forgiven now?" I said, dazed by an attack so sudden and so bitter. "It is atonement enough that I am at your feet now, Barbara!"

"You are not," she retorted hotly. "Don't say you have offered love to me, who am the same with the child you teased at Breidden. You have fallen in love with my fine clothes and my pearls, and my maid's work, not with me! You have fancied the girl you saw other men make much of. But you have not loved the woman who might have prized itself which Miss Guest has never learned to value."

"How old are you?" I said hoarsely.

"Nineteen!" she snapped out. And then for a moment we were both silent.

"I begin to understand now," I answered slowly as soon as I could conquer something in my throat. "Long ago, when I hardly knew you, I hurt your woman's pride; and since that you have plotted—"

"No, you have tricked yourself!" "And schemed to bring me to your feet that you might have the pleasure of trampling on me. Miss Guest, your triumph is complete, more complete than you are able to understand. I loved you this morning above all the world—as my own life—as every hope I had. See, I tell you this that you may have a moment's keener pleasure when I am gone."

"Don't! Don't!" she cried, throwing herself into a chair and covering her face.

"You have won a man's heart and cast it aside to gratify an old pique You may rest content now, for there is nothing wanting in your vengeance. You have given me as much pain as a woman, the vainest and the most heartless, can give a man. Good-by."

And with that I was leaving her, fighting my own pain and passion, so that the little hands she raised as though they would ward off my words were nothing to me. I felt a savage delight in seeing that I could hurt her, which slackened my own grief. The victory was not all with her lying there sobbing. Only where was my hate? Let me get my hat and go. Let me escape from this room where in every trifle upon which my eye rested awoke some memory that was a pang. Let me get away, and have done with it all.

Where was the hat? I had brought it up. I could not go without it. I must be under her chair, for all that was unlucky, for it was nowhere else. I knelt and stood and knelt, and I had to go to her, with cold words of apology upon my lips, and being close to her and seeing on her head, half hidden by fallen hair, the hat she had brought home from Norway, I don't know how it was that I fell on my knees by her and cried:

"Bab, Bab, I loved you so! Let us part friends."

For a moment, silence. Then she sat erect, her hand in mine. "Why did you not say Bab to begin? I only told you that Miss Guest had not learned to value your love."

"Good Gods!" I murmured, my brain in a whirl.

"Learned how age, poor girl!"

And she felt her short-lived fire of my regard looked into mine for a moment, and then came quite naturally into its resting place.

"Now, she said, when I was leaving, "you may love your hat, sir."

"I believe," I replied, "that you set store this time on purpose!"

And Bab blushed. I believe she did.

THE END

Striking a Match in Wind.

Kephart in his book on "Camping and Woodcraft" says: "When there is nothing to strike it on jerk the head of the match forward through the teeth, or face the wind. Only your hands back toward the wind, remove the right hand just long enough to strike the match on something very close by, then instantly resume former position. The flame of the match will run up the stick instead of blowing away from it.

"Change Seats."

As many seats as players save one. He who has no seat stands in the center, repeating the words, "Change seats," "change seats." All are on the alert to observe when he adds, "The king's come," when all change seats, and he must try to get one. If he should say, "The king has not come," the seats must be kept.

Labor Short In England

Free Transportation to England to be Given to Overseas Mechanics

Free trips to England and return are foreshadowed for skilled workmen in the United States and in the colonies of Great Britain who are willing to fill the shortage among the armament firms in the British Isles. Francis Acland, Financial Secretary of the Treasury, announced to the House that the Government was taking steps to obtain such help in the production of munitions of war.

Free transportation would be arranged, he said, if suitable labor were discovered without displacing the men already effectively engaged in these countries.

THE KAISER'S THREAT

Was It Meant for Italy or Greece ?

LONDON, April 28.—A Reuter despatch from Sofia says that the German Emperor recently sent to his sister, the Queen of Greece a telegram in plain language describing the German success both on the eastern and western fronts and affirming his conviction of eventual victory for Germany and Austria, adding that "this will serve as a warning to any countries venturing to join Germany's enemies."

CANADIAN DOCTORS FOR THE FRONT

LONDON, April 28.—Col. Pelletier, agent-general for the Province of Quebec, reproached the medical chief of the Militia recently with regard to the question of accepting Canadian doctors for service either in field or home hospitals. He has now been informed that the Imperial Government will accept any medics men approved by the Dominion Government for this purpose.

STEAMERS FOR WEST INDIES

ST JOHN, N.B., April 28.—This week the first steamer of a direct line between St. John and the West Indies sailed from this port with a large cargo. Another direct line of steamers from Barcelona to St John is under consideration. A representative of the Spanish Company is now in the city conferring with business houses and manufacturers. The provincial government has adopted legislation granting a bonus to wheat mills to be erected in the province. The government has also appropriated $10,000 for the purchase of seed wheat for the farmers.

The Russians are reported to have taken 70,000 prisoners in the Carpathians. Is there any German army left?

The women's peace conference at The Hague is now branded as a German scheme. Sounds not unreasonable as that.

Now for the Canadian reinforcements.

...anged its Stars.

When the French revolution broke out a number of scientists lost their lives, but Lalande, the astronomer, only paid the more attention to the skies and its constellations. When he found, after the reign of terror, that he had escaped the fury of the mob he exclaimed gratefully, "I may thank my stars for it." Would any apparent lest possess more genuine truth?

Most Glowing.

An old man attended a public funeral in honor of an American statesman a few years ago. In describing it to a Boston friend, a close relative, he said enthusiastically:

"Jim, it was grand. It was the most glowin' panegyric of words I have ever had 'casion for to listen to!"—Boston Record.

To Lullaby Town.
Ready for bed in her long white nightgown,
Patsy is ready for Lullaby Town.
Sweet is the music she hears on the way—
Ready for lullabies, tired of play,
Soft is her carriage; on rockers it goes,
As grandmother counts all the dear little toes.

Each little toe in a vision she'll see,
Safe on her journey on grandmother's knee.
"This is a mouse eating a piece of cake;
This is a butterfly; this is a bee;
This is a pig with a lovely pink nose,
And this last little one—why, it's my white rose."

Safely gone Patsy to Lullaby Town.

Simple Tooth Powder.

A safe and simple tooth powder is precipitated chalk and orris root, which may druggist will mix for you in small quantities. Another equally safe but less pleasing powder is finely shaved castile soap, one part, and precipitated chalk, two parts. If this powder is used every morning and then if after each meal and before retiring the teeth are brushed with tepid water containing an antiseptic decay can be warded off.

Benefits of Olive Oil.

Olive oil taken every morning half an hour before breakfast is good for removing liver spots and otherwise clearing the complexion. Take a teaspoonful of the best olive oil before breakfast and the same quantity half an hour after the latest meal. In a few months this will clear the skin and otherwise improve your health. Drink plenty of water between meals. Avoid hot bread, rich pastries and sauces.

Value of Sunshine.

Sunshine, in spite of tanning and freckles, is good for the skin. So is fresh air. Both multed give bloom and color to it, and, if the air and sunshine are taken early and regularly before the former has lost its morning fragrance and while the latter has not yet gained its power to tan, a beautiful bloom may be expected.

Old English Pines.

In the past if one Englishman called another a liar there was something to pay. The seventeenth century mayor, sheriff and city grandees generally were keen on this point of etiquette. The direct accusation cost 11s. 6d. (2.75c; the subtle hint 6s. 8d. ($1.60). And there was a reduction on repetitions.

Swearing, too, was promptly supressed. In 1650 a law was passed laying down the penalty for a first offense. The fines were graduated. That for a lord was 20 shillings ($7.20), for an esquire 10 shillings ($2.40), while all "inferior persons" could have a "few words" for 3s. 4d. (80 cents).

Von Holstein's Dress Coat.

Prince Bulow once invited Herr von Holstein to dinner, telling him that it was to meet the emperor. "But," replied Holstein, "I don't believe that I have a dress coat at present. I will try, however, to get one made in time, and if I can't perhaps the emperor will take me as I am." This was reported to his majesty, who said that Herr von Holstein was to appear in any garb he pleased.

When the meeting took place Holstein was in his usual frock coat, and the emperor laughingly tapped him on the shoulder and said: "I see that dress coat wasn't ready. It doesn't matter."

WEDDING BELLS

MACKINTOSH—CARLAW

At high-noon yesterday, the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Davidson Carlaw, Alexandra street, was the scene of a quiet but pretty home wedding, when their younger daughter, Cecile, was united in marriage to Mr. Jasper Mackintosh, ed., Ottawa and Hydro-Glen. The ceremony was performed in the drawing room by the Rev. E. J. Curtis, pastor of John street Presbyterian church, the bride having been a member of the choir of that congregation for some time. The young couple were unattended and the bride, who was dressed in Belgian blue with lace and chiffon blouse, was given away by her father.

The nuptial knot was tied in the presence of relatives and a number of the more intimate friends of the bride. In honor of the occasion the drawing room had been appropriately decorated with ferns and roses.

After the marriage ceremony, felicitations were extended to the happy couple by the guests, and a buffet luncheon was served.

The out-of-town guests were Mr. and Mrs. E. C. West, Dr. and Mrs. Bee, Mrs. H. T. Fee, Mr. and Mrs. A. S. Free, Miss Free and Miss Helen Douglas, Dr. and Mrs. Bonnycastle, Campbellford; Mr. J. H. Munro, of Orillia; Mr. Harvey B. Carlaw, of Toronto, and Mr. Douglas Carlaw of Trenton.

As tributes to her popularity, the bride received numerous charming and valuable wedding gifts from her friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Mackintosh left at 1.40 on their honeymoon trip to New York City. They will make their home at Hydro-Glen, where the groom holds an important position as Government engineer.

The best wishes of many friends accompany Mr. and Mrs. Mackintosh for a happy and prosperous wedded life.

Not more than 2,560 acres will be leased to one applicant.

A FEW WORDS FROM HORACE YEOMANS

Mrs. Dr. Yeomans received a letter today dated 12th April from her son Pat in which he said that he received the box of comforts sent by Mrs. C. J. Borell. Both boys wish to thank her very much for all the comforts and goodies and to say that they have already made good use of the football.

He said they were inspected the day before by an English General, which was a dismounted parade, and part of the infantry were inspected at the same time. He saw Melville Clarke Milton Vandervoort and Charlie Gibson for the first time since being at the West Down North Camp. They were all looking fine and feeling well.

He said they had a new song, which ran as follows:—

Here we are, here we are, and here we are again,
Here we are, here we are, and here we are again,
We beat you at the Marne; we licked you at the Aisne—
We gave you hell at Neuve Chapelle, and here we are again.

WANT TO SHOW FIGHT

Legal Contest to Determine Right to Bring in Willard-Johnson Fight Films

NEWARK, N.J., April 28.—A legal contest by the owner of Willard-Johnson fight films to bring the films into this country will begin here next Friday, according to an announcement by Charles A. Towne, formerly United States senator, counsel for L. Lawrence Weber, the owner.

The first step preliminary to the beginning of the legal battle was taken here yesterday when Mr. Towne made a formal demand upon the collector of the port that the pictures be admitted. Refusal was given on the ground that the federal statutes forbid it.

Mr. Towne then served notice that he would apply to Judge Thomas G. Haight in the United States district court on Friday for an injunction restraining the collector from refusing to admit the pictures. It is expected that argument will be heard about a week later, and that the applicants will contend that the law barring the pictures is unconstitutional.

AGREEMENT REACHED

LONDON, April 28.—Dr. E. J. Dillon, in a despatch to the Daily Telegraph from Rome says: "Partisans of neutrality were jubilant yesterday, and they should be, for the course taken by the negotiations since Friday morning presages favorable and permanent accord between Italy and the Central Empires in a basis which will enable the former country to pursue in peace its work of social, economic and political reorganization.

"They admit that the conditions of such an agreement would include the revival of the triple alliance, close friendship with Austria and Germany, correct relations with the powers of the entente, and temporary resignation to such a status in the Mediterranean as would ensue from the conditions.

"It would be an error to suppose that these results anticipated are impossible. They are wholly groundless. They rest on a basis of fact. Baron Burian and Count Tisza have seen their way clear to go somewhat further to meet the requirements, which would satisfy Italy's reasonable aspirations and place her patriotic sentiment at the Hapsburg monarchy.

"How far these latest and final concessions extends, I am unable to say, but am informed that they include the promise of local self-government to Austrian subjects of the Italian tongue in Trieste and the transfer to Italy of three islands."

WILLING BUT IGNORANT

They were very young, and very happy, and very foolish, and very newly-wed. And they kept a kitchen dictionary. "Angelina, darling," said the youthful husband, "as I was passing through the garden I saw some asparagus growing outside. Perhaps you'd like to go and gather the first fruit of the season yourself?"

"I'll tell you what," said the young wife, anxious to conceal her ignorance in the vegetable department, "we'll go together. You shall pluck it, and I will hold the ladder."

WANTS RESPIRATORS

LONDON April 29—(Special.)—The war office is appealing for home-made respirators to enable troops to fight German poison fumes and the Women's Emergency Corps yesterday purchased a quantity of material for making the articles. Within a few hours of the publication of the appeal one of the west end stores had a window display of respirators made in accordance with official requirements, which attracted large crowds. By noon some thousands of them had been sold.

The London County Council education committee yesterday granted facilities to allow the older scholars in their schools to make respirators for the troops.

ISADORA DUNCAN.

Art of the centuries destroyed by the ravages of war, culture stunned by blasting blows—where will the world of the future turn to seek inspiration and direction in the great arts when Europe's titanic struggle shall have finished?

Isadora Duncan, famous classic dancer, believes a renaissance of art, greater than the awakening after the dark ages, will follow in the path of war, rising phoenix-like from the ashes of the conflict of nations. Only as the present generation may aid in encouraging and showing the way to the next will the men and women of today participate in the revival, Miss Duncan believes. It will be the children of today and the children's children on whom will rest the toil of rebuilding, the joy of recreating. Miss Duncan, striking in unexpected fields, has come forward with an original suggestion, one which she firmly believes will be developed by herself, with time and of others, into a possibility and eventually into a worldwide movement for peace and the arts.

When the European war broke out, leaving her school of dancing, near Paris, Miss Duncan volunteered as a nurse in French hospitals, having first dispatched to this country under competent chaperonage more than a score of children who were her pupils. A few months ago she followed them to this country.

Just where she will continue her work with these little folk, to whom she is teaching the art of dancing which she discovered, is a matter she has not definitely decided. Their future is somewhat dependent upon the success of Miss Duncan's revolutionary project of colonization, which she believes will be an immediate success.

On one of the verdant Greek islands in the Mediterranean Miss Duncan is latent upon establishing her colony. Here she would assemble 1,000 children from England, France, Russia, Germany, Belgium and America. She would be in absolute control, and under her personal direction would be taught the art of expressive dancing, while famous masters would go there to teach other arts.

From such a recruiting station it is the dancer's idea there will be sent forth into the world competent leaders of thought. Should there be discovered from all this colony one or, perhaps, two or three children touched by the magic wand of genius, then, Miss Duncan believes, the venture would have more than justified itself in the opinion of future centuries. Another Michelangelo, another Leonardo da Vinci, another Wagner or Beethoven or, perchance, a Shakespeare or a Goethe may rise from such a community.

Arranging the Coiffure.

In order not to be plain one does not need to dress elaborately. First study the mode of arranging your hair and select that which is not only smart, but the one most becoming to you. Do not in the hustle and bustle to begin the day's work think that the quickest arranged coiffure will suffice. Neither be misled by the thought that a tight, closely arranged coiffure is suitable to all faces. In fact, there are but few faces that will not lose their beauty by such a coiffure.

LITERARY NOTES

MAY ROD AND GUN

Rod and Gun for May, published by W. J. Taylor, Limited, Woodstock, Ont., is out with an interesting list of contents. Edward T. Martin contributes an article "Have the Pigeons Returned" dealing with the possible reappearance of the passenger pigeon, which has been pronounced extinct by so great an authority as Prof. Hornaday of New York. "A Raw of the Stormycut" is a Western story of a ram whom its pursuers regarded as a creature of the evil one. How its propensity for vanishing into thin air was finally explained and the ram secured is most entertainingly related by Ray Giddings. Other stories and the regular departments combine to make an exceptionally interesting number of this well known sportsman's magazine.

The Germans are making a desperate effort to reach the English channel, according to a despatch. "Desperate" is correct.

TURKS ROUTED EIGHT THOUSAND MADE PRISONERS

Troops Landed at Four Points—Clever Ruse Deceives Turks—All Warships But One Enter the Narrows—Bombardment is Incessant

LONDON, April 29.—Special—A clear patch to The Express from Athens states that a demonstration in aid of allied landing party on the historic plains of Troy has resulted in the capture of 8,000 Turks. At other points numerous prisoners have been taken.

Troy is represented now by the ruins about the mound of Hissarlik, which is 3½ miles both from the Dardanelles and from Yeni Kaui, which lies on the Aegean coast, north of Besika Bay.

TENEDOS, April 29—Two towers of black smoke hang over the neighborhood of the Narrows. All but one of the allied battleships that yesterday were off the mouth of the straits have now entered, and the rumble of guns is continuous.

The way from here to Kum Kale is now clear of all but scattered detachments of the enemy. The French have advanced some distance on land and have taken 500 prisoners.

The landing of troops at the Dardanelles has been effective at least at four places, one on the Asiatic and three on the European side.

The prisoners taken by the allies in the land fighting already number 8,000, including many German officers. Among the prisoners are many with revolver and bullet wounds inflicted by their German officers, driving them to the attack while desperately endeavoring to prevent their retreat. The prisoners stated that fighting has been of the most sanguinary character.

One of these landings was made as the result of a clever comic ruse. Covered by a vicious fire from the British ships, nearly 1,000 donkeys, packed with dummy baggage and mountain guns, were put ashore at a certain spot. The Germans and Turks at once diverted a strong force in this direction; meanwhile the real landing force easily accomplished its purpose some distance farther up the coast.

A regiment of donkeys, decrepit animals, purchased cheaply, was annihilated.

Four Officers Killed.

According to an announcement by the Admiralty to-night, a naval commander, the fleet surgeon and two other officers were killed and a Lieutenant wounded during the operations in the straits on the days of April 25, 27 and 28.

The latest force to join the allied armies landed on the European side of the straits is the Australian contingent. These troops disembarked from a fleet of transports at Velos on Tuesday, and immediately proceeded with the installation of coast batteries.

Incessant Bombardment

MITYLENE, April 29.—The bombardment of the Dardanelles has continued without cessation since midday Saturday. It was preceding yesterday Wednesday afternoon.

It is stated that the allied ships have reached Vrysey, in front of the Chanak forts, about eight miles up the Dardanelles.

The town of Madytes as well as Gallipoli are said to have been occupied by the allies.

Although excellent progress is being made by the allies, the British and French losses have been severe.

St. Sophia Mined.

PARIS, April 29.—A telegram from Salonika says that General Limon Von Sanders, the German commander of the Turkish forces at Constantinople, has had the famous Mosque of St. Sophia mined, and intends to blow it up the moment the Government quits the capital.

Britain's New Liquor Bill

Raises Considerably the Tax on Wines, Spirits and Heavy-Brewed Beers

LONDON, April 30.—(Special)—The much-discussed measure to restrict the consumption of liquor, brought forward by Lloyd George, hits the liquor traffic hard.

The former duty on spirits was 10s a proof gallon. The bill adds 15s and 9d a gallon, more than doubling the tax. The taxes on other alcoholic drinks are increased in like proportion, varying, however, according to their strength and character.

On beer the new excise duty is graduated from 1s to 35s ($3.40 $8) a barrel, according to its strength. The duty on sparkling wines becomes 12s per gallon. On other wines the present duties are quadrupled. These rates take effect from May 3. The resolution imposing them was adopted by a vote of 74 to 6 without discussion.

ANOTHER ATTEMPT TO FIRE RHEIMS

(Canadian Press Special)

PARIS, April 30.—French war office afternoon report: "We made progress yesterday to the north of Ypres in the region of Steenstrate. The city of Rheims received five hundred shells, of which many were of an incendiary nature. These missiles started several fires, but it was found possible to circumscribe them and put them out quickly. In the Champagne district the enemy shelled one of our ambulances and wounded a doctor.

Dunkirk yesterday received nineteen shells of large calibre. Twenty persons were killed and forty-five wounded. Some houses were destroyed.

The Pope's Neutrality

Belgians and French Cardinals Present Strong Appeal to Pope

(Canadian Press Special)

ROME, April 30. — Belgian and French cardinals, archbishops and bishops have united in an appeal to Pope Benedict for the Vatican to abandon the attitude of neutrality it has maintained since the beginning of the war. They say they cannot understand how the head of a church which is founded on principles of right and justice can maintain neutrality without at the same time protesting against those who violate written or unwritten laws. The Pontif is urged to assume an attitude which would be epoch-making in the history of the papacy.

Lieut. Wallace in the Trenches

Brief Sketch of Belleville Boy with a Fine Record—A Soldier From Boyhood

Lieut. H. L. Wallace of this city, has just received a cablegram from his brother, Lieut. E. D. Wallace, now in the trenches with the First Contingent, indicating that he was well and ready for the country's work.

As is well known Lieut. Wallace is a Belleville boy, and for the major part of his life has been connected with the militia, joining the Fifteenth Battalion when he was fifteen years of age, being promoted to sergeant within a year, and when business took him to Port Hope he joined the 46th Regiment, and was made color sergeant, shortly after which he took out a commission, with the same regiment. Then transferred to Port Perry where he became connected with the 34th Regiment. He was in command of the Company's station at that place still, spread of the war being imminent, it was then he took the call, he telegraphed his enlistment in and was readily accepted. Another brother, Gunner Fred Wallace, now in France, and Charles Wallace, of the Canadian Army Service Corps, at present on duty in this city with the Third Contingent, make three of one family; a record of which Belleville has reason to feel proud.

LIEUT. E. D. WALLACE

Canadians Reach England

Two Transports Arrive at Bristol —Various Detachments

(Canadian Press Special)

MONTREAL, April 30.—The arrival of the steamers Saxonia and Grampian at Bristol yesterday permits the announcement that they sailed from Halifax on April 18th, and that they carried Divisional Engineers from Ottawa, field ambulance detachments from Montreal and Toronto, hospital detachments from Kingston and Toronto, 18th battalion from London, the headquarters staff at the divisional train of St. John, and companies of the divisional train of St. John, Montreal, Winnipeg and Vancouver, and supply units from Toronto.

EUCHARISTIC CONGRESS

Canadian Conference to Be Held in Montreal in July

Announcement is made by Archbishop Bruchesi that the Canadian Eucharistic Congress will be held in this city next July. His Grace has been chosen president of the convention, and the archbishops and bishops of Canada have not given the proposal their heartiest approval, but in all cases have signified their intention of being present.

A letter has been received from His Holiness Pope Benedict XV, warmly commending the congress, and members of the regular and secular clergy and many prominent Catholic laymen have already announced their intention of attending the celebration. In view of the success of the great international congress held here a few years ago, it is probable that there will be a large number of visitors from the United States during the convention.

VOLUNTEERS FROM 39TH MAY GO TO FRONT

Capt. W. H. Hudson Selected as Commanding Officer—Date of Leaving at Present Unknown—Volunteers Ready to Give Services

An order appearing in the militia orders states that 250 men of the 39th Battalion mobilized in this city, are required at once for immediate overseas purposes.

When it became known that such an order was issued there was considerable interest created, and numbers immediately volunteered. In fact the entire battalion was prepared to go as a unit, but their services were not required.

In conversation with the military authorities a representative of The Intelligencer was informed that Capt. W. Hudson, an officer of the Fifteenth Regiment of this city, and was attached to the 39th Battalion, had tendered his services and had been selected as the commanding officer of the men leaving here for overseas service. When the detachment will leave is at present unknown.

Later

A later report comes to us that 250 men and 5 officers will leave here on Monday afternoon. The officers in command other than Capt. Hudson are not known. It is not known where the men are leaving for.

Wonderful Fruit Season

Nothing Like It in the History of the Niagara Orchards

BEAMSVILLE, Ont. April 29.—Fruit men without exception speak of the present season as a marvelous one. It is not a good many years since anything like the present harbinger has been remembered in the fruit district. Fifteen years are there were ripe strawberries on May 24. The profusion of bloom already foretells itself as likely to be unparalleled in the history of the Niagara district orchards. Every tree, even the smallest, is simply crowded with buds. Plums, prunes, cherries, and peaches will be in full bloom by Sunday, and the apples and pears will crowd them close.

ANOTHER AIRSHIP RAID ON ENGLAND

Long-Expected Aircraft Raid Took Place Early This Morning —Building Set on Fire at Ipswich and Bury St. Edmunds, But No More Babies Killed

CAMBRIDGE, England, April 30.—The Daily News says that an enemy aircraft appeared over Ipswich shortly after midnight and dropped a number of bombs setting several buildings on fire.

Ipswich is in Suffolk county, and is a town of considerable commercial importance. It has a population of some 75,000.

LONDON, April 30.—A Central News dispatch says that a Zeppelin was seen during the night at Bury St. Edmunds, Suffolk County, where it dropped bombs and set several buildings on fire.

Bury Et. Edmunds is 28 miles from Cambridge.

IPSWICH, England, April 30.—A hostile aircraft, whether a Zeppelin or an aeroplane is not known, visited this place early this morning. Several bombs were dropped. One struck a house in Brookshall road. It was an incendiary bomb, and it pierced the roof, setting the room on a light girl. Sonio of the furniture was set on fire, but the child was rescued by her father, Harry Goodwin.

The flames spread to two adjoining houses, which within an hour were almost destroyed.

Other bombs were dropped on Waterloo road. The aircraft then passed over Whitton, where it also dropped explosives. So far as is known nobody was injured.

A despatch to the Exchange Telegraph from Ipswich says that five houses there were virtually destroyed by airship bombs and that three other were badly and two slightly damaged. The despatch adds that as far as is known there were no casualties in Ipswich.

GERMANS EXHAUSTED QUIETNESS ON YSER

Surplus Troops of Kaiser Being Transferred to Eastern Front Again, To Check Some New Movement of Russians

LONDON, April 30.—(Special)—A significant lull in the general fighting and German offensive, which has apparently been turned to the defensive against by allied superiority in France and Flanders, is noticeable from the official communiques both of Berlin and Paris. The fury of the German blow, which attempted to pierce the allied lines at Ypres has exhausted itself, a spasmodic convulsion being reported only against the Belgian trenches, and this being easily beaten off. It is significant that while it took the allies about three weeks to stop the German onrush at the first battle of Ypres, it only took them a fortnight three or four days to stop the Germans at the second battle of Ypres. This is taken to indicate that the allies have so greatly strengthened their lines that it is an impossibility for the Germans to burst through them at the present time.

The German communique speaks of allied attacks being repulsed, indicating that the enemy has been beaten down to the defensive, a condition intolerable to the doctrine and training of the German imperial staff.

It is thought that the enemy might have persisted a little longer against the impossible in the west, but for the arising of some new anxiety on the eastern frontier, and it is taken as quite probable that the Russians have commenced to deliver some stroke that is causing immense alarm in Berlin. The reported capture of a point of vantage on the railway line feeding the German-Austrian forces in the Uzsok Pass and the threatened cutting off of a large army may have led to the hurried recall of Von Hindenburg which is believed to have engineered the poison gas episode. It is peculiar of Von Hindenburg to be always trying some new trick, which usually gets him nowhere important.

It is believed here that Sir John French is preparing a big attack on Armentieres to offset the second battle of Ypres.

Elsewhere on the French line the day is reported as comparatively calm.

BOMBARD TOWN FULL OF HOSPITALS

Germans Made it Target

Epernay Has no Fighting Units Yet Germans Made it Target

PARIS, April 29.—The French War Office gave out a report on the progress of hostilities reading as follows:

In Belgium we have continued to progress in conjunction with Belgian troops, in a northerly direction. On the right bank of the Yser Canal we took 150 prisoners as well as two machine guns.

There is nothing new on the heights of the Meuse nor in the Vosges.

The enemy has bombarded by means of flying machines and using incendiary shells the open town of Epernay, occupied exclusively at the time by hospital detachments.

Definite information which has come to hand sets forth that the Zeppelin airship which eight days ago threw bombs on Dunkirk was seriously damaged by our artillery, making it impossible to navigate further, the machine was wrecked in the trees between Bruges and Ghent."

I. C. R. EXPRESS LATE

Derailment of Freight Train Caused 10 Hours' Delay

Owing to the derailment of a freight train on the Intercolonial Railway at Point Prue, a few miles below Amherst N.S., Tuesday night, the Halifax Express due at Montreal at 6.20 Wednesday evening was some ten hours late and arrived at Montreal about five o'clock Thursday morning.

It was stated by I.C.R. officials that the derailment in itself was not serious, no one being injured, but the track was torn up for some distance, while the freight cars were badly wrecked. The local service was kept up by a train being run on at Riviere du Loup, which came through Levis to Montreal, and took the place of the delayed express.

AN EARLY DIP IN THE OUSE

Along with flowering dandelions, the luscious pie plant, the fragrant green onion, the hum of the lawn mower, and other signs of an advanced spring, due to the heat wave, a number of small boys have been noticed enjoying the refreshing waters of the swimming hole at the creek this week. This is surely a record April trial in this part.—Norwood Register.

Within The Military Circle

What is Transpiring Among the Soldier Boys at Belleville and Kingston.

All articles and notes under this head are passed by the commanding officer of the 29th Regiment and authentic in every particular.

KINGSTON

Major Bennett of Peterborough, who fell at Langemarck, had many friends in Belleville, made at the time of the visit of the Peterborough regiment here some years ago.

Q. M. Sergt. Smith is suffering from a badly burned hand, as a result of an accident while lighting fuses at Barriefield, when the R. S. A. were conducting observation fire.

It is said among local families who are drawing patriotic fund allowance in Kingston, that the committee and officers of the fund are taking every interest in their welfare and is looking after their comfort and interest.

The members of No. 3 Company, C. A. S. C., are busy getting their recreation room equipped. On Brock street.

When completed the men will have a pleasant place to pass away their spare hours.

Capt. Eric McCuaig, who was in the recent battle in Flanders and was slightly wounded, is a son of C. J. McCuaig of the Montreal Stock Exchange. He is a civil engineer at McGill, where he was prominent in athletics. Capt. McCuaig is a cousin of R. R. Hepburn, M. P. for Prince Edward County.

The members of the 14th guard were issued with a partial equipment, and the men are hoping their outfit will be issued to them complete. The uniforms now worn have been worn by the men regularly for the past eight months, and they were not new when issued.

There are 112 men attending the course of the R.S.A., and Captain Ringwood keeps the large class busy from the first hour of the morning until sunset. Yesterday there were three riding classes. One class was conducted in Barriefield, and two in the riding school on Place d'Armes, making 60 men for riding instruction in one day. This means heavy work for the officers, but the task is accomplished in the most pleasant patriotic spirit.

BELLEVILLE

Many of the noncoms. of the R. C. H. A. have been transferred to other battery units in various capacities. This is how it happened that Sergt-Major Carruthers, of the R.C.H.A., was included in the casualty list of the 2nd Battery at Ypres. Sergt Lowry, of the R.C.H.A., entertained one of the divisional column, and Q.M. Sergt. Slade is acting sergeant-major of the ammunition column at the front. He has had military qualifications of the senior noncoms. of the R. C. H. A. make them desirable for the most responsible positions.

The military camp that will open at Barriefield on May 25th, will be unique in a number of ways. This is the earliest date at which the camp has even been opened. This will be the first time that a camp of an full preliminary force has been held in this division and the second in Canada, Valcartier being the first. There will be over 2,500 men, in camp, exclusive of headquarters staff or the units looking after the camp accessories and medical service.

The infantry men in camp will number at least 3,000, as there are that many militia volunteers in uniform in this division now. The 38th Brittalion Ottawa, and the 20th Battalion, Belleville, each number 1,150 and there are also over 900 men who are being drilled at their regimental headquarters waiting for orders. The order for this battalion will be issued as part of the Fourth Contingent order.

WOMAN SUFFERAGE

ITS WAR TIME ASPECT

LONDON, April 30.—The women of England are doing their part. They are taking care of the wounded or if they cannot assist in work of this kind they are adding their savings to promote the cause. They are knitting and sewing for the soldiers at the front. The suffragists have given so little trouble to the government that it will undoubtedly soften the hearts of those in Parliament against the "militants" have turned all their energies to aid the fighting men of England, and so suffrage may soon become after this terrible war is over.

Thousands of women in Canada have overcome their sufferings and have been cured by womanly ills by Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. This medicine, though started nearly a half century ago, sells more widely today than any other womanly tonic. It can now be had in tablet form as well as liquid and every woman who suffers from backache, headache, nervousness, pain at times, should take this "Prescription" of Dr. Pierce's.

Many a woman is nervous and irritable, feels dragged down and worn out for no reason that she can think of. In ninety-nine per cent. of these cases it is the womanly organism which requires attention. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription makes weak women strong, sick women well. It is the only medicine of its kind sold through druggists—Dr. Pierce's Medicines are manufactured in Canada at the World's Dispensary, Bridgeburg, Ont.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

SHYLOCK HOLMSKY

A delightful musical comedy entertainment entitled "Shylock Holmsky," was given between two sections of the film productions at Griffin's Opera House last evening, which proved extremely enjoyable. Pretty dancing girls in unique attire attracted much attention, and the characterizations were unusually pleasing if a trifle rollicky.

Mr. J. D. Hutchinson, the efficient page manager, has a number of special attractions for the near future, which will be worth seeing. Last evening's production was simply the forerunner of good things to come.

Gifts to Prisoners In Germany

Some Privileges Not Generally Known May be Acquired—How to Transmit

As many Canadians have been made prisoners by the Germans within the past few days, the following letter from Mr. Elmer L. Luck, just returned from Germany, where he was held a prisoner of war, will prove of especial interest. Mr. Luck declares that what the prisoners in Germany need more than anything else is food.

To the Editor:

It was with the greatest surprise that I learned on my return to Canada two weeks ago, that the post offices had received no instructions whatever in the matter of forwarding letters and parcels to prisoners of war in Germany. Ever since November there has been an agreement between England and Germany permitting mail (including parcels of clothing, food, tobacco, etc., up to eleven pounds in weight) to be sent free of postage to prisoners of war in either country. I had seen Germans sending letters and presents without number to friends interned in England, and even I had benefitted to the extent of being able to write as often as I wished to low-fortunate friends in the concentration camp at Ruhleben—the only benefit indeed, that I have had to date from the war. Instead of affixing a post age stamp, I had to write "Kriegsgefangenensendung" in the upper right hand corner. (It is almost worth the price of the stamp to have to write such a word!) I knew that English prisoners were receiving mail fairly regularly from relatives in England, and naturally expected to find on my return that Canadians would have the same privilege of sending mail free and direct to prisoners. As I have already said, I was not a little surprised to find that this was apparently not the case, and wrote the Postmaster-General at once. The following reply has just come to hand:—

Sir,—

With reference to your inquiry of the 25th inst. respecting the correspondence of prisoners of war, permit me to enclose copy of rules governing this branch which have not been notified generally, each case being dealt with direct by the Department as it arises.

(Signed) H. M. Coulter,
Deputy Postmaster General.

One wonders why it was that no statement of any kind has ever been issued to the general public. I know personally of several cases in which Canadians have been for months suffering the keenest distress believing that there was no way of getting word to relatives imprisoned or interned in Germany. And there are doubtless many more such cases. For that reason I am bringing the matter before the public, hoping that it may come to the attention of those who are interested in them, and be generally known of the agreement.

The rules which I have memorized very briefly are as follows:

1. Letters (left open), postcards, and parcels (up to eleven pounds in weight) can be sent free to prisoners in Germany.

2. All mail should be addressed as follows:—

Name (including rank and regiment or soldier)
Canadian Prisoner of War, at Doeberitz (or Ruhleben, etc.)
in Germany.

3. This should be enclosed in a second envelope (or wrapper in the case of parcels) addressed as follows:—

For Canadian Prisoner of War interned in Germany,
c/o Deputy Postmaster General,
Ottawa.

No postage required on this either.

4. Communications should be limited to business and family matters. Letters and cards containing the slightest reference to naval, military or political affairs will not be delivered.

5. A letter must not exceed two pages of ordinary note paper. Writing must be in English or French, must be easily legible, and on no account crossed.

6. Tobacco and foodstuffs may be sent and will be admitted duty free. Nothing of a perishable nature should be sent owing to possible delay in transmission. Delivery is reasonably certain but cannot be guaranteed.

7. Those wishing to send money should apply to the Postmaster General for special instructions.

May I add the following suggestions based on practical experience. It is wiser to send cards than letters, and small parcels (2—3) rather than larger ones, even if a number of such have to be sent at the same time. Also on no account should one attempt to hide a message of any kind in parcels sent, or even in one Canadian newspapers or wrappers—a few such cases have already come to my notice and got the recipients into very serious trouble. Everything is searched most carefully by the Germans before being delivered.

PYGMALION

Bernard Shaw is probably the most popular dramatist of the present day. At the same time he is certainly the greatest cynic and satirist. He is supposed to every popular opinion on any subject, and delights in his antagonisms. Mrs. Patrick Campbell, in stage parlance, "created" Eliza Doolittle, certainly created a sensation when she divorced her husband and married West two days after Lady Randolph Churchill had obtained a decree from West, and resumed the name she bore as the widow of Lord Randolph Churchill, the father of Winston Churchill, the First Lord of the Admiralty. Mrs. Campbell has a symmetrical figure, large dark eyes and hair, and played her very difficult role with much spirit and vivacity. In her company are only three good actors. Mrs. Campbell, who played Eliza, and the two gentlemen who played the characters of Professor Higgins and Eliza's father. The plot is simple. Eliza is a flower girl, born in the slums of London. Her father never married, was a drunkard, and had provided Eliza (as she said) with five successive step-mothers.

Eliza had received her education in the streets, and her language was that used by the gutter snipes. She was (as she said) a good girl. The first scene opens at a portico in front of a church, at half-past eleven at night. A furious rain storm deluges everything and people take refuge under the arches of the church. Eliza, with her basket of flowers, sits on a stone, offering her flowers for sale. Professor Higgins, and Captain Treverton (two old bachelors of wealth and position) notice the girl, and listen to her dialect. Professor Higgins has developed an attention at reading minds, and like Sherlock Holmes, discovering their owners' occupations and residences, etc. A wager is made between the two gentlemen as to the professor's ability to take this slum girl and educate her within six months so that she can appear and bear her part with the well crowd at garden parties. So Eliza is taken to the lodgings of the professor in a taxi, and placed in the hands of Mrs. Pearce, who has charge of the acts as housekeeper. Professor introduces Eliza and tells the old lady to take and clean her. She asks what Eliza has been doing. Professor says "Burn them." "What will she wear then?" said the lady. "I don't care; any old thing—or blankets—or brown paper." After being thoroughly renovated and dressed Eliza is taught how to shake hands,to talk about the weather, and the usual trivialities of an ordinary conversation among ladies. Of course she repeats the words she hears, and repeats gaily. Some words she had committed to memory. The instant her stock is exhausted, knowing nothing else, she repeats into slum talk, to the immense astonishment of the elegant and refined ladies to whom she is introduced. A young lord asks her if she might walk with her across the Park. She replies "Not on your bloody life." A lady asks her if she thinks it is going to be a fine day. She says "Not bloody likely." Her temperature indicates a seismic disturbance of the elements which may necessitate a "stormy discharge." From the sensation this declaration would make! The great pity is that many remarks which would be most ludicrous are lost because the audience cannot understand the slum expressions. Of course the play ends all right, by the marriage of Professor and Eliza. The fact is that the Professor cannot see any way out of the position he has created. He has put a soul and intelligence into Eliza, and he cannot possibly send her again to the slums. An immense audience welcomed Mrs. Campbell.

LOSING PRESTIGE.

Wilhelm's Presence Means a Set Back, Say His Officers.

M. Paul Delay, the well-known writer, who has just returned from a four thorn gout Germany as a representative of the Echo de Paris, where he met and talked to many German officers, describes what their attitude towards the writer has greatly changed.

Until November last Emperor Wilhelm was looked upon by practically every officer in his army as the God of War, or perhaps rather as an infallible person, whose decisions were accepted and respected without any attempt at criticism. From the chief of general staff to the youngest lieutenant, everybody was ready and eager to follow him blindly.

During the last months, however, things have completely changed. Officers do not go so far that they blame the Kaiser for what has happened, but they certainly discuss his plans, and it has not passed unnoticed that his presence among his troops has been followed by defeats in Belgium, France and Russia.

"His Majesty," a high German officer last month said to M. Delay, "possesses a genius for organization, but he is apt to undertake too many things at the same time. Whenever he arrives at the front we are almost certain to receive a setback."

M. naturally talked with a good many university professors, who quite frankly criticized the Government, and deplored the many mistakes made.

"The financiers took even a darker view of the situation, declaring to anybody who cared to listen that no matter what the result of the war it would be fatal to the country's prosperity. According to their opinion, it would be better to try to get peace now rather than to prolong the war for months, even if there were a reasonable hope of final victory.

"Altogether the German people are in a melancholy mood, and nothing is more noticeable when you return to France than the difference between the growing German despondency and the robust French feeling of confidence."

When a number of parcels reached a French trench the other morning the soldiers found one in each, plain a new pack of cards. To the gift was attached a note bearing these words: "A pack of cards presented by Robert Taintard Moore, aged seven years, bought with his pennies in memory of his father, who fell on the field of honor near Arras."

The soldiers in the trench, all married men, accepted the orphan's gift. Several of them were unable to repress their emotion. The pack of cards has not been played with. They regard it as a sacred gift.

Loyal Germans who turn in their gold to the Reichsbank year will be given a peep into heaven, I see in a German paper.

In a suburb of Berlin the authorities have promised the inhabitants who decide to bring this sacrifice to the altar of their country not only one loan bonds, but besides a ticket which entitles them to look at the stars free of charge in the huge telescope of the Berlin observatory.

Marvelous Digestive Capacity of New Zealand Troops.

From close observation of the habits of the young Maori men in training in Auckland, New Zealand, for active service, it would appear that the modern Maori has inherited, almost unchanged, the genius for practical foraging which was one of the vital qualifications of his forefathers in the strenuous struggle for existence. These soldiers in the making have, therefore, a flying start in one of the essentials of successful campaigning, and whatever foodstuff there may be in the vicinity of the battlefields of Europe, Asia, or Africa, will not escape the instinctive skill of these prospectors to fossick it out. They have covered the country in the neighborhood of the camp and wen ecla by the acres from places where the white man never dreamed there was any edible wealth at all.

When, at the holiday time, they prepared a feast at which they catain their friends, foragers returned to the camp cooks with bougns laden with strings of eels they had taken (by hand!) from neighboring creeks and waterholes. A find which is to-feast they secured great bundles of "puha," which is the Maori people know as "native cabbage," from beds recognizable only by the initiated. The Maori is not unskeptical in food, and when he can do so well strictly within the bounds of the law of trespass he may be trusted to look after himself with some success on foreign soil where property rights are temporarily in abeyance. The ability of the sturdy Maori recruits to assimilate comestibles is a constant source of wonder to his pale brethren. At camp they get through from 50 to 100 dozen of cornbeef a week, 75 per cent. of this being the juvenile fluid known as "tuppeny."

GERMANY'S ILLUSIONS.

There can be no doubt whatever that Germany based her belief that "The Day" had arrived upon the unrest which existed in England and Ireland at the time. One of the things they relied upon was the imminence of civil war in Ireland Dr. Dillon, of the Contemporary Review, in his book "A Scrap of Paper" gives some interesting particulars of the methods of German spies, upon which reports the German officials relied. Dr. Dillon says that shortly before the war German agents visited Ireland and reported that civil war was imminent. He gives the name of the principal spy, who was a German official of some prominence. Irishmen will be amused at the ridiculous mistakes made by these spies and the wrong conclusions to which they jumped The German war lords hoped for a bitter feeling of enmity between Ireland and England, and their emissaries looked for signs of this hostility, and only reported what their employers wished to know. How well the latter were gulled will bring a smile to the face of every Irishman who reads of the proceedings of these dupes and spies.

An Amsterdam paper states that they attached "great importance to the habitual use in Ireland, amongst Unionists as well as Nationalists, of words of cursing and malediction directed against England." One of these words was "bunagher," the phrase that reason bears or hangs. banagher being common enough. Banagher has nothing in the world to do with England. In the Irish language it signifies a pointed hill or rock, and for that reason has become the name of a number of town-lands, while in one or two instances it has been transformed into Bangor. The harmless word "Shillelagh" was said by these German agents to be "a popular term of contempt for an Englishman," although the first boy on the road could have told them it was Irish, and is the name of a spot in Wicklow inhabited long ago by the descendants of a sept known as Siol-Elaigh, Siol meaning the progeny, and Elaigh being Elach, the sept in question. There were beautiful groves of oak there and so an oak stick came to be known as a shillelagh.

It was apparently believed in Berlin that if England ventured on war a succession of labor riots would occur all over the country and that the suffragettes would set fire to the royal palaces as well as to military camps like Aldershot and the Curragh. Meantime the Radicals and Irish members in the House would refuse to vote war appropriations the Government would be put out and a general election precipitated Another astonishing mistake was the notion that Canada and Australia were "on the eve of seceding" because of the efforts of British statesmen, beginning with John Bright, to "impose Imperial Federation, i.e., free trade with England upon them." Every student of political history knows that Bright did not favor Imperial Federation in any form. In the last speech he delivered in Birmingham, in 1888, he spoke of it as a "dream and absurdity" because it would or might entail some relaxation of the British free trade policy. As a rule the Imperial Federationists have recommended preferential tariffs between the Colonies and the Mother Country; certainly there has been no attempt to force free trade on the colonies. All this has been set forth in British books without number, and when we find the German departments of state ignoring them and starting an opposite and fantastical theory, we are obliged to doubt the boasted "thoroughness of German minds." The greatest blunder of all on the part of the German Government was to ignore the possibility of these domestic difference: in Great Britain being dropped and the nation becoming united. The great outburst of national loyalty which followed the outbreak of war and made, for the time being, all parties one, was one of the many things in regard to which no calculation had been made.

THAT CORRESPONDENCE.

A short time ago The Hamilton Herald suggested that it might be an excellent policy for Sir Robert Borden to publish the correspondence between himself and the Canadian Manufacturers' Association on the subject of the purchase of supplies. In view of the wrecking of the Opposition press, which has been insinuating that this correspondence tended to discredit the Government. The Herald said that the Premier should take the public into his confidence by making the correspondence public.

The Ottawa Journal takes a hand in the matter by drawing attention to the fact that the Premier made a statement in Parliament on the subject of this correspondence, a statement which contains the reasons why the correspondence has not been published. The Journal professes that this statement had escaped its notice. Justice to the Premier would seem to require its publication in this place. On April 8 Mr. Graham asked for a copy of all correspondence between any official of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Government on the subject of war supplies. This is Sir Robert Borden's reply as reported in Hansard:

A communication was received from the Canadian Manufacturers' association, which, according to their view, was of a confidential character. I acted particularly as to that in a later letter. I have no objection to bringing the correspondence down, but as the correspondence has apparently been communicated to the hon. member for South Renfrew, although it was represented to me as confidential, I shall certainly ask the association for leave to have it brought down, and I have no fairer, perhaps, if the hon. gentleman had given me their leave in the first instance.

Mr. Graham—I can assure my right hon. friend that I have not the correspondence, and have never seen it. If my right hon. friend will bring it down that will answer the purpose.

Sir Robert Borden—I will bring it down after communicating with them, and if there is no objection.

A day or two before Parliament was prorogued Mr. Pugsley enquired whether the Premier had obtained the necessary consent to have this correspondence produced, and Sir Robert Borden replied: "I communicated with the gentleman who wrote me the letter, but I have not yet received a reply." That was the last reference to the matter that was made in Parliament.

It appears, therefore, that the Premier was quite willing to have this confidential correspondence published, but was debarred from producing it for publication by the neglect or refusal of his correspondent to consent to its publication.

The Germans are using suffocating gas to overcome the French. The Kaiser seems to have neglected few details in preparing for the war he so long sought.

CURRENT COMMENT

The ultimate outcome of the war is by certain as that of a fight between a German daschund and a British bull dog.

"New technical weapons" is the phrase used by the organ of the Prussian army to describe the poisonous gas used in Flanders to asphyxiate the French and Canadian troops. The standard of the enemy is even more objectionable than his deviltry.

Another new field is to be opened for American commerce. A new steam ship line sailing under the Norwegian flag will divert to this country the trade Ireland, formerly enjoyed by Europe.

Disappointment is expressed in London over the failure of the great armament manufacturing concern known as Vickers' to declare more than a 12½ per cent. dividend on its business in 1914. That was the same rate that was declared in 1913 and those who are consolidating point to the enormous orders which Vickers has received since the war broke out. Of course we require too long a time to admit of very frequent or very general use of this device.

"It is with special pleasure that announce that the Rev. Robert Wallace, M.A., of Belleville, and long in charge of the Murchmont Home and Church, has consented to join the staff of workers at Toronto," says Ottawa Methodist, the organ of the Home Mission. "Mr. Wallace assumes the office and responsibilities of Superintendent of that centre for which his experience and training so peculiarly fit him. In order to make this arrangement possible, Mr. Frederic Helmer retires from the post he has so long occupied to assume the office and service of Assistant Secretary. This latter appointment will give Mr. J. S. Helmer the aid he needs. The above arrangements are assured, will greatly strengthen the work at the Toronto centre. We trust that our friends will often remember all of the above brethren in prayer."

Prominent Mason Called by Death

Mr. John H. McKinnon Was Vice-President of Northrop and Lyman Company

TORONTO, April 29—Mr. John Hugh Thomas, vice-president of Northrop & Lyman Company, Kechi street west, died at his home Wednesday afternoon. The deceased was 67 years of age, and a native of Smith's Falls. He was educated in Durham and upon leaving school entered the Northrop & Lyman firm, which was then situated at Newcastle Ont. When the firm moved to Toronto in 1872 he came with it and gradually worked his way up to the position he held at the time of his death.

The late Mr. McKinnon was one of the most prominent Masons in the Dominion having attained the 32nd degree, and being an honorary member of the Grand Lodge. He was a member of Jarvis Street Baptist Church and a Liberal in politics. He leaves a widow, one daughter, Mrs. Edwards Madison avenue and four brothers.

English Clergy And Prohibition

Canterbury House of Convocation Opposed to Total Abstinence

LONDON, April 29—The Clergy comprising the Lower House of the Convocation of Canterbury are willing to set the nation an example in the matter of temperance, but they are not willing to abstain entirely from alcohol.

Into was the sense of the meeting today of the Lower House, which passed a resolution "inviting the clergy and laity of the Church of England to set an example of self-sacrifice" in the matter of alcoholic liquors.

Several members voted only after being assured that total abstinence was not expected of them. The Dean of Canterbury said flatly he refused to swear off altogether. He had tried it before, he said, and found it a failure in that it impaired his health.

Sir Thos. Lipton Saw Terrible Misery in Plague-Swept Servia

SIR THOMAS LIPTON, who has just returned to England after taking a trip to Serbia as British Red Cross and Order of St. John expedition, gives the following description of the conditions in Serbia: "I was given the opportunity by the Serbian Government of traveling throughout Serbia. No Briton ever had a more thrilling experience with his own eyes the magnificent fight the Serbians are making against the powerful opponents. Language no one could help being appalled at the terrible epidemic of typhus that is torturing the life out of this little nation. Before the thousands of cases there are I cannot say, because exact and accurate figures are unascertainable. Mrs. Hardy, who has charge of an old prison turned into a hospital at Kragujevatz, told me that day after day men in the delirium of typhus were brought in on wagons to her door and were laid there to die because there was no room for them inside. Multiply this by 1,000 cases, and you have Servia as it is today.

"The country has been attacked by disease as I think no country has ever been attacked before. It is a plague such as the world has seldom known and all the benevolence of humanity will be required to deal with it. I visited hospitals from north to south, and everywhere I found them full of typhus cases. In some hospitals they had neither blankets nor mattresses; in others the mattresses were put sideways, and three or four patients were lying on one mattress. Dr. Ryan, the chief of the American Red Cross Mission in Servia, has done splendid work, and under his care, told me that unless something is done immediately to stop the dire disease more than half the population of Servia will be wiped out. The most urgent needs are tents, wooden huts, sanitary materials, clothing, beds and bedding, cooking utensils and stores, milk sterilizers, but above all medicines and drugs.

"A great deal of good work has been done at the Austrian concentration at Uskub, but the epidemic threatens to overwhelm every isolated effort. The Serbian convalescents, through the efforts of the Red Cross, splendid as it has been, is entirely inadequate. The whole of the resources of humanity must be mobilized to deal with this epidemic in such a way that full force can be brought to bear upon the entire stricken districts, and thus save the Serbian people from a fate even more terrible than the devastation by the enemy."

Sir Thomas Lipton says that the British Red Cross are willing largely to increase the help they are giving if the necessary funds can be obtained.

When Sir Thomas was in Belgrade, he visited a certain hospital and came upon a little West African boy who had been given up to die by the doctor in charge. When the Austrians hurriedly evacuated Serbia, the officer abandoned the boy. The lad speaks eight languages, including Serbian and Greek, and Sir Thomas took him back to England with him.

Heroes Unsung.

"I have just read," writes Sergt. W. Wood, from Hunsax, "a long list of recipients of the D. C. M. All honor and good luck to them, but there are many brave fellows at the front deserving of honorable mention. I was on the field four months, at Mons, the Marne, the Aisne, Le Cateau, Le Tore, and in the Dardanelles, and during that time I saw many men execute deeds more than heroic. My own troop officer went out and brought in two of his men who had been wounded; a sergeant stopped, while pursued by Germans, to assist his safety in spite of being hurt; and two of our machine-gunners went, under heavy rifle-fire, to the assistance of a wounded Frenchman. People at home do not realize the material of which 'Tommy' is made."

Residents of Grange Avenue Houses Fled for Safety in Scant Clothing

TORONTO, April 29.—When fire attacked two houses at 42 and 44 Grange avenue in the early hours of this morning the occupants were forced to leave hurriedly. The fire started on the ground floor of the house at No. 42 occupied by Mr. Jacob Shapiro, and spread to No. 44, the residence of Mr. Shier. Only partly-dressed the residents of the two houses, numbering about a dozen persons, rushed out into the street. An alarm was rung in and when the firemen appeared on the scene they found that the blaze had gained good headway. However, in less than half an hour it had been extinguished and the occupants were able to return to their homes. The damage to Mr. Shapiro's house was $500 to the building and the same to the contents. The cause of the outbreak is unknown. Insurance covers loss in both cases.

WAR NOTES

The greater proportion of the Canadian casualties are, of course, wounded and lives can only be saved when these wounded men are attended to promptly and when the doctors and nurses have every medical appliance at their disposal. A large amount of medical supplies have been sent from the Red Cross, both to England from Canada and from Canada to the front but there is room for a great deal more progresses a still larger amount will be needed.

Old linen, cotton and flannel will be always acceptable and there must be many housewives who have table cloths, sheets, sheeting, which have been used sufficiently to enable them to be replaced. If every householder were to give one sheet, on towel and on table cloth, what a lot of bandages could be made to bind up the wounds that our brave soldiers have suffered in the cause of freedom. It is of the greatest importance that all supplies should be sent in accordance with directions and that the contents of each parcel should be fully described on the outside.

Funds are specially needed for these surgical supplies as the Red Cross authorities have given them to understand that instrument is needed at the front and that the linen and cotton must be purchased from the proper sources. Nevertheless, anything in the nature of rags and those are needed by the military, but wool has been received from England that bandages not properly rolled should not be sent and the Canadian Red Cross Society earnestly requests that all who undertake to send in bandages should see that they are rolled they are prepared to carry out exactly the instructions given them. The bandages are made 2 inch, 2½ inch, 3 inch, 4 inch, 5 inch and 6 inch and five yards long. A cheap quality of unbleached factory cotton should be used and they must be hemmed, cut, and tightly rolled on bandage rolling machines.

A Triangular Race

By F. A. MITCHELL

It was a bright spring morning, when one feels like breathing in the fresh air and stretching one's legs. I determined on a long walk before luncheon and started with that end in view. On passing the Stanleys' place I saw Helen coming out dressed in morning costume, with a short skirt and boots. Waiting till she reached the gate, I joined her. Competing notes, we found that we were both out for the same purpose, to blow fancies.

We had gone but a short distance when Tom Bartlett struck us square in the teeth from a side street.

"We're going for a tramp into the country," said Helen to Tom. "Come along."

"Thanks awfully," said Tom, looking at me disconsolately. "They say that two's company, three's a crowd."

"Not a bit of it—the more the merrier," said Helen.

Now, there is a lot more in this than appears on the surface. Bartlett and I were rivals for Miss Stanley's affections. We believed that she was hesitating between the two of us. I had been trying to get her to come to a decision, and I presume Tom had been trying to do the same thing. Tom joined us, but was too much of a gentleman to foist himself for the day without some hint from me that I would not object. Reaching a corner, he lifted his hat in a view to leaving us, when I said:

"You have your orders from the lady. Then it is your duty to obey them."

I saw mischief, design, deviltry, in Helen's face. Tom hesitated, but could not decline. When we reached the open country she drew long breaths of ozone into her lungs and said with exhilaration:

"I feel as though I must run."

"So do I," said Tom. "Come on."

We ran abreast for several hundred yards, then dropped to a walk again.

"I wonder," said Bartlett, "why moc decisions are not arrived at by race than by jury."

"They have a custom in Lapland," said Helen, "whereby if a man wishes to marry a girl he chases her. If she accepts him she permits him to catch her; if she refuses she runs for all she is worth."

What put it into her head to make my next remark I know not.

"If two fellows in Lapland want the same girl," I said, "do they race for her?"

"I never heard anything about that," said Helen.

Looking sidewise into her eye, I saw a spark in it that told much more than her words. It started a flame within me that burned recklessly. But I held back for some time before showing it. After awhile Helen said she was pining for another run.

"Scopes," I said deliberately. I stopped.

"Suppose what?" asked Helen.

"Suppose that you take 500 yards start for a race. And suppose that Tom and I run from there so that each of the three of us stands on the angle of a triangle. Then suppose you run for it and Tom and I run for each other."

Helen said never a word, but I saw by that spark in her eye that she caught my meaning.

"Is it a go, Tom?" I asked.

"I'm agreed if the lady is."

"I don't mind," said Helen under her breath.

"Very well; Tom, you stay here. I go to that stump over there. Suppose you," I said to Helen, "advance to that knoll to the left in front of the field."

Helen and I started, leaving Tom where he was. To equalize advantages between Tom and me she must run on a straight line perpendicular to the base line of the angles on which Tom and I stood. I doubted if she would do this. It would be human nature for her to veer toward the man she wished to win. I don't mean that the race would be an acceptance of me before him, but it would show a preference for him over the other.

When our positions were taken Helen turned and looked at us. It was evident she was laying out the course she should pursue. Then she called: "Are you ready?" and on our response that we were she turned and dashed away.

There was plenty of room for the race, for the field stretched a long way, with but one fence in sight, and that was open at many places. It was by far a better manner than Bartlett, who was a studious chap and seldom took exercise. I had no desire to win the race unless Helen gave me an opportunity; therefore I ran on a dog trot, Bartlett ran on much the same gait. For a time Helen kept on the perpendicular line; then, coming to a hill of boggy ground, she was obliged to decide whether she would go to the right or to the left of it. She went to the left, and I, observing her decision, zigzagged with apparent indecision, finally turning to the left, which shortened my line.

The moment she made her decision I closed up on her and touched her on the shoulder. Turning to look at Tom I saw that he had dropped into a walk. Poor fellow! He had put the same interpretation on the race as I.

The result closed all rivalry between Tom and me, but did not decide my fate. I was held in suspense for some time longer before receiving my answer, but when I came it was satisfactory.

WHAT WILL RELIEVE STOMACH TROUBLE

A Hard Question—But This Retired Ohio Farmer Answers It—Mr.) Matteson's Statements Are Reliable.

Upper Sandusky, Ohio.—"I suffered from nervous dyspepsia and stomach trouble so that large lumps would seem to come up into my throat, and would get so dizzy I could not stand up or even see, my strength gone, and had nothing seemed to help me until one day my druggist told me about Vinol. I tried it and soon noticed an improvement and now I am well."—Ira T. Matteson, Upper Sandusky, Ohio.

Vinol seldom fails to strengthen and tone up the tired, overtaxed stomach, to send nerves of the digestive organs and stomach cease of indigestion and soon enables the sufferer to digest with ease the foods that once caused distress. Vinol also creates a healthy appetite and builds up the weakened run-down system.

We have such faith in Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron tonic without oil, that we ask every person in this vicinity suffering from nervous dyspepsia or stomach trouble to try Vinol on our offer to return their purchase money if it fails to benefit.

A THRILLING ACCOUNT OF YPRES FIGHTING

Canadian Shows How the Gas Bomb Works—Great Reeling Mass—Horrible Picture of Men Overcome by Them

LONDON, April 25.—The following thrilling account of the British successes at Ypres, telling for the first time the effect of the German asphyxiating gas, is given by a Canadian who took part in the fighting.

"It was during Thursday afternoon that our pickets reported a sudden retiring movement on the part of our French allies, who were on the left of the Canadian division on the Ypres-Langemarck road.

"The strong northeast wind which was blowing from the enemy's lines across the French trenches, became charged with a sickening, suffocating odor, which we recognized as proceeding from some form of poisonous gas. The smoke moved like a vivid green wall some four feet in length for several hundred yards and extending to a height of 20 yards of our extreme left. Gradually it rose higher and obscured the view.

They Return Asphyxiated.

"The rifle fire which hitherto had been desultory now increased in volume, but tended to become more erratic, and in such a case when compelled to decide whether she would go to the right or to the left of it. She went to the left, and I, observing her decision, zigzagged with apparent indecision, finally turning to the left, which shortened my line.

New size For Doughnuts.

When frying doughnuts have a dish of boiling water beside the hot fat. As you remove the doughnuts from the frying kettle dip lightly into the boiling water. This removes all grease and renders them more healthful than they would otherwise be.

There is another point not to be despised when lard is as expensive as it is at present. After the water evaporates the grease may be skimmed from the top and used again. One will be surprised to see the amount of fat that will rise.

HOUSECLEANING LINOLEUM

The old-fashioned method of brushing with soap and water is being abandoned for the better method of waxing with RONUK. It's easier, penetrates and softens the fabric and so causes it to wear out quickly.

RONUK

the English Wax Polish and Cleanser is a combined Cleanser and Polish. It removes the dirt without the help of soap and water and leaves your linoleum with a bright, polished surface, which will stand wear and tear. The wear will be the RONUK, not on the Linoleum.

Having a Bath at the Time.

"About 5 o'clock I was joined by but talion at a different point in the line, but heard afterwards that there had been sharp fighting at St. Julien, where the 14th Canadian Battalion put up a stiff fight resisting the enemy's advances. Some of our friends who had been on a few hours' leave, came in from Ypres. They said they had been having a bath when the shell-fire from the German trenches became too hot to stand, and they dashed into the street to find the place being furiously bombarded. The road along the eastern bank of the canal also was being pounded by shell and already was full of dead and wounded horses and smashed waggons. The object of the enemy clearly was to prevent reinforcements and ammunition from being brought up.

Non-combatants Killed

"Frightened women and children who form the non-military population of Ypres already were streaming out into the fields to save many lost their lives. About 6 p.m. my battalion, with others, were ordered to take up a position on the western side of the canal bank. We lined up and were supplied with rations and ammunition. There we waited until shortly past 7 o'clock when a moderate attack opened fire, while the road behind was being shell by lyddite to hinder the arrival of reinforcements. We could hear heavy cannonading both to the north and south and occasionally sharp volley firing.

"At 7.15 the order was given to march. Crossing over the canal by a bridge, we took the road towards St. Julien, branching off to the right at the cross roads to a village a little to the northeast of that place. On our way we passed the Middlesex boys.

"Night was now coming on fast. There was no firing on our front, but a heavy cannonading to our left shells passing over us from time to time. We continued to advance, marching very slowly in order not to tire the men. We next found heavy rifle firing on our left, and this was followed by a raging shrapnel fire to our right, where some of the regiments must have suffered severely.

14th Retakes St. Julien

"On arriving at a second cross-roads we entered a long plain and the battalion was lined up in column of companies to await orders. At this time, about 12 o'clock, the heavy firing was going on in St. Julien. We were the Fourteenth Battalion was engaged. A little later we were told that they had retaken the place and the firing had died down.

"We were ordered to change our front to the left in the direction of St. Julien. The night had become very dark, the moon having disappeared behind dense black clouds. But farm buildings were ablaze all around us. At a distance of about two miles in a nearly straight line from our new front there was a fierce fire. The sound of firing now entirely ceased, and was succeeded by a silence which was awful. Not a shot was fired, and at the front was uncanny. After a further halt, which seemed interminable long to us who were only one of minutes, we were ordered to move in the direction of the wood. Scarcely had this been done when the intervening plain again was treated to shrapnel, but at intervals only.

Big Task Set Them.

"We arrived within three-quarters of a mile of the forest without any casualties. Here a further halt was called, and the officers were told that German forces were in possession of the wood, and that they had been in possession since 7 o'clock, and in all probability were strongly entrenched. It was pointed out that the enemy was occupying a strong position in rear of the Canadian line, and that they must be driven out of it at all costs. It was also whispered that some British guns had been left in the wood the day and that it would be our bit to retake them.

"It was thus well understood by all that we were in for earnest work and that we would not be supported by artillery.

Col. Boyle Killed

"We again moved on in column of companies, fouring fours to pass through a narrow gateway. When this was passed we deployed in long lines of half companies, the second line of support following about thirty yards in the rear of the first. All the battalions marched in this formation and each first company knew that the others would not fail to support it when the charge came. The 10th Battalion had the post of honor on the right, and that they manned. Col. Russell Boyle, fell while leading it. A few minutes before midnight we took Potsch. Here we found about 200 yards from the wood. The moon now reappeared at intervals, and we could have done without her with more comfort.

"The shrapnel fire had completely ceased and we had a second spell of waiting. Suddenly at 1.30 the welcome orders were given to fix bayonets, which were obeyed in a flash. Overcoats, packs and every other encumbrance were dropped and we immediately advanced. Scarcely had we reached the ridge in full view of the wood when a perfect hail of fire was loosed on us from rifles and machine guns which the Germans had placed in position behind undergrowth which skirted the wood.

A Terrific Charge

"Instantly the word was given to charge, and we rushed forward, cheering, yelling, shouting and swearing, straight for the foe. At first the German fire was too high, and until we came within fifty yards our losses were comparatively small. Then some of our ranks began to reel, and the whole front line seemed to melt away only to be instantly closed up again. Cheering and yelling all the time, we jumped over the bodies of the w unded and tore on. Of the Germans with the machine guns not one escaped. When these inside the wood stood up to us in a most dogged style. We were so quickly at close quarters that the edge of the wood could not have gotten away in any case. Many threw up their hands and cried for quarter. Pressing on into the wood itself the struggle became a dreadful hand-to-hand conflict. We fought in clumps and batches, the living struggling over the dead and dying.

A Ghastly Picture.

"At the height of the conflict, while we were steadily driving the Germans before us, the moon bursts out, and the clashing bayonets flashed like quicksilver, while faces were let up as by limelight.

"Sweeping on, we came upon lines of trenches which had been hastily thrown up and could not be stubbornly defended. Here all who resisted were bayoneted while those who yielded were sent to the rear. The trench fighting presented a spectacle which beggars description overall.

Then Comes Victory

"At last the wood was cleared, and we burst into the open. Suddenly we heard a great shout. It was the cheering which announced the recapture of the big guns and the men leaped and danced for sheer joy. It was between 2 and 3 o'clock on Friday morning when our men came up to the big pieces. They were undefended, but lea of Germans lying all around. Near them a party of sixty of the enemy had been mistaken for straight in a dugout and were dealt with summarily. We brought back our guns and the others in triumph to our lines."

Human Shield For German

Officer, Hiding Behind Women, Is Shot by French Lieutenant and the Women Saved

The following dramatic incident appears in the Toronto Star. It is from the pen of Mr. Paul Bilhaud, who when war broke out was a professor in Toronto University. He is now with the French army, acting as interpreter.

Northern France, April 6.—The first day of April was glorious, and millions of men from Newport to Belfort breathed with joy the spring air. Aeroplanes hovered in the air like huge dragon flies. In his trench near Ypres and in the forest of Nieuport, Georges X——, as like everyone enjoying the first April morning, and in spite of the restlessness of his sentry duties he was ready to forget all past and future dangers.

In front of him the plain almost without a brush extended for a mile. A slight zig-zag in the distance shows the place where the Germans are shelled in their underground dens. And Georges knows that no surprise will come in the broad light; this plain is no place to hide ambushes.

Often now the trench play cards to make shorter the long hours, and others dig new trenches. A soldier rivets iron bar work and looking toward the German trenches calls out:

"Say, Georges, what's coming over there?" All men quickly turn their eyes towards the point far away where the newcomers were signaled. Three figures are walking towards the French lines—two small figures and a large one.

"Who dares?"

A COWARDLY DEVICE.

He handed the figures can be seen more clearly. No doubt remains; one man and two women. The man seems to drive hastily the women in front of him. It is perfectly clear now. The man is a German officer, and the women are forced to advance in spite of their reluctant behavior.

Now they are not 500 yards away. They stop. Georges sees distinctly the German officer push the women and keep them against his breast.

All the French in their trenches are in a turmoil. Will they shoot?

"The coward!" shouts Georges "Will he succeed in getting away in this dirty way? We must shoot him down."

"Impossible! 500 yards away! We would shoot the women, too."

The Teuton is perfectly at ease. He takes his glasses and inspects our trenches. One of the women gets away. He brutally brings her back and slaps her in the face. He knows the character of his opponent; no one will dare shoot.

Our friends are in a powerless rage to our trenches, not rising more than about seven feet from the ground.

"When it reached our first trenches, the men in those trenches were obliged to leave, and a number of them were killed by the effects of the gas. We made a counter-attack about fifteen minutes after the gas came over and saw twenty-four men lying dead, from the effects of the gas, on a small piece of road leading from the advanced trenches to the supports. He himself who much affected by the gas that he felt as though he could not breathe.

"These symptoms and other facts so far ascertained point to the use by the German troops of chlorine or bromide for the purpose of asphyxiation. There also are facts pointing to the use in German shells of other irritant substances. Still, the last of these agents are of the most penetrating and barbarous character as was the gas used in the attack on the Canadians.

"The effects are not those of any of the ordinary products of combustion of explosives. On this point the symptoms described left not the slightest doubt in my mind."

Income Shows No Decrease

Methodist Foreign Mission Board Holds Annual Meeting

TORONTO, April 29.—In spite of fears to the contrary the income of the Methodist Church for foreign missions has not shown a decrease this year over last year. The total amount of revenue for this purpose is several thousand dollars ahead of what it was last year, and it is hoped to have the same condition will hold in June, when the annual meeting will be held.

There was a large attendance at the annual meeting of the Executive of the Methodist Foreign Mission Board in the Wesley Building yesterday. Dr. Dowkontt, general superintendent of the Methodist Church, presided. Several resolutions were passed, one of them asking the Dominion Government to remove the $500 head tax on Chinese students. Estimates for the total of $214,468 were passed for home mission work in Canada and Newfoundland.

The following candidates for foreign mission work were appointed:—Rev. Fred Ainsworth, M.A., B.D., of Hamilton, appointed for Japan, to go out in September; Rev. A. N. C. Nodal, M.A., of British Columbia, and Mr. Gerald S. Bell, B.A., of Manitoba, appointed to West China, to go out this fall; Rev. S. T. Aaals, M.A., B.D., Toronto, accepted for China, to spend a year at the Kennedy School of Missions, Hartford, Conn.; Rev. E. W. Morgan, B. A., B. D., formerly missionary in China, reappointed to China; Rev. W. E. Smith, M.D., to return to China on expiry of furlough.

LITERARY NOTES.

The Canadian Magazine for May has some unusually attractive features. First there is "Our National Benefaction," by Herbert B. Ames, M.P., which is an account of the Ames Scholarship Fund; "Eddy's War," a little-known chapter in Canadian history by R. P. Jellett; "Which Is the Greatest?" by Lacey Amy; "The Case of Ambroise Lepine," in the "Famous Canadian Trials" series by Britton B. Cooke; "Prussianism vs. Modern German Philosophy," by R. Goldwin Smith and a good selection of short stories.

THE DRIFT OF FATE

On a certain morning in last June I was stooping to fasten a shoelace, having taken advantage for the purpose of the step of a corner house in St. James' Square, when a man passing behind me stopped.

"Well!" said he, aloud, after a short pause during which I wondered—I could not see him—what he was doing, "the meanness of these rich folk is disgusting! Not a coat of paint for a twelvemonth! I should be ashamed to own a house and leave it like that!"

The man was a stranger to me, and his words seemed as uncalled for as they were ill natured. But being thus challenged I looked at the house. It was a great stone mansion with a balustrade atop, with gauny windows and a long stretch of area railings. And, certainly, it was shabby. I turned from it to the critic. He was shabby, too—a little red-nosed man, wearing a bat hat. "It is just, possible," I suggested, "that the owner may be a poor man and unable to keep it in order."

"Ugh! What has that to do with it?" my new friend answered contemptuously. "He ought to think of the public."

"And your hat?" I asked, with saving politeness. "It strikes me, as unprejudiced observer, as a bad hat. Why do you not get a new one?"

"Cannot afford it!" he snapped out, his dull eyes sparkling with rage.

"Cannot afford it? But, my good man, you ought to think of the public."

"You tom-cat! What have you to do with my hat Smother you?" was his kindly answer; and he went on his way muttering things uncomplimentary.

I was about to go mine, and was first falling back to gain a better view of the house in question, when a chuckle close to me betrayed the presence of a listener, a thin, gray-haired man, who, hidden by a pillar of the porch, must have heard our discussion. His hands were encased with a tablecloth, from which he had been shaking the crumbs. He had the air of an upper servant of the best class. As our eyes met he spoke.

"Really put, sir, if I may take the liberty of saying so," he observed with a quiet dignity it was a pleasure to witness, "and we are very much oblized to you. The man was a snob, sir."

"I am afraid he was," I answered; "and a fool, too."

"And a fool, sir. Answer a fool after his folly. You did that, and he was nowhere; nowhere at all, except in the swearing line. Now might I ask," he continued, "if you are an American, sir?"

"No, I am not," I answered; "but I have spent some time in the States."

I could have fancied that he sighed.

"I thought—but never mind, sir," he began; "I was wrong. It is curious how very much alike gentlemen, that are real gentlemen, speak. Now, I'll dare swear, sir, that you have a taste for pictures."

I was inclined to humor the old fellow's mood. "I like a good picture, I admit," I said.

"Then perhaps you would not be offended if I asked you to step inside and look at one or two," he suggested timidly. "I would not take a liberty, sir, but there are some Van Dycks and a Rubens in the dining room that cost a mint of money in their day, I have heard; and there is no one else in the house but my wife and myself."

It was a strange invitation, strangely brought about. But I saw no reason for myself why I should not accept it, and I followed him into the hall. It was spacious, but sparsely furnished. The tiled floor had a cold look, and so had the gaunt stand which seemed to be a fixture, and boasted but one umbrella, one sunshade, and one dog-whip. As I passed a half-open door I caught a glimpse of a small room prettily furnished, with dainty prints and water-colors on the walls. A dozen replicas of each and all might be seen in a walk through Bond street. Even this oasis of taste and comfort told the same story as had the bare hall and dreary exterior; and laid, as it were, a finger in one's heart. I trod softly as I followed my guide along the strip of matting toward the rear of the house.

He opened a door at the inner end of the hall, and led me into a large and lofty room, built out from the back, as a state dining room or ballroom. At present it rather resembled the lumber room of a broken-down furniture. "Now," said the old man, turning, and respectfully touching my sleeve to gain my attention, "now you will not consider your labor lost in coming to see that, sir. It is a portrait of the second Lord Wetherby by Sir Anthony Van Dyck, and is looked to be one of the finest specimens of his style in existence."

I was lost in astonishment; amazed, almost appalled! My companion stood by my side, his face wearing a placid smile of satisfaction, his hand pointing slightly upward to the blank wall before us. The blank wall! Of any pictures, there or elsewhere in the room, there was no sign. I turned to him and then from him, and I felt very sick at heart. The poor old fellow was mad—mad beyond—I gazed blankly at the blank wall. "By Van Dyck?" I repeated mechanically.

"Yes, sir, by Van Dyck," he replied, in the most matter-of-fact tone imaginable. "So, too, is this one;" he moved as he spoke, a few feet to his left. "The second peer's first wife in the costume of a lady-in-waiting. This portrait and the last are in as good a state of preservation as on the day they were painted."

Oh, certainly mad! And yet so graphic was his manner, so crisp and realistic were his words, that I rubbed my eyes; and looked and looked and looked again, and almost fancied that Lord Walter and Anne, his wife, grew into shape before me on the wall. Almost, but not quite; and it was with a heart full of wondering pity that I accompanied the old man, in whose manner there was no trace of wildness or excitement, round the walls; visiting in turn the Carp which my host bought in Holland, the Rubens, the four Lawrences, and the Phillips—a very Barmecide feast of art. I could not doubt that the old man saw the pictures. But I saw only bare walls.

"Now I think you have seen them, family portraits and all," he concluded, as we came to the doorway again; stating the fact, which was no fact, with complacent pride. "They are fine pictures, sir. They, at least, are left, although the house is not what it was."

"Very fine pictures" I remarked. I was minded to learn if he were sane on other points. "Lord Wetherby," I said; "I suppose that he is not in London?"

"I do not know, sir, one way or the other," the servant answered with a grave air of reserve. "This is not his lordship's house. Mrs. Wigram, my late lord's daughter-in-law, lives here."

"But this is the Wetherby's town house," I persisted. I knew so much.

"It was my late lord's house. At his lordship's marriage it was settled upon Mrs. Wigram; and little enough besides, God knows!" he exclaimed bitterly. "It was Mr. Alfred's wish that some land should be settled upon his wife, but there was none out of the entail, and my lord, who didn't like the match, thought he lived to be fond of the mistress afterward, said, 'Settle the house in town!' in a placid tone of joke like. So the house was settled, and five hundred pounds a year. Mr. Alfred died abroad, as you may know, sir, and my lord was not long in following him."

He was closing the shutters of one window after another as he spoke. The room had sunk into deep gloom. I could imagine now that the pictures were really where he fancied them. "And Lord Wetherby, the late peer?" I asked, after a pause, "did he leave his daughter-in-law nothing?"

"My lord died suddenly, leaving no will, he replied sadly. "That is how it all is. And the present peer, who was only a second cousin—well, I say nothing about him." A reference which was well calculated to consign his lordship to the lowest deep.

"He did not help?" I asked.

"Devil a bit, begging your pardon, sir. But there—it is not my place to talk of these things. I doubt I have worried you with talk about the family. It is not my way," he added, as if wondering at himself, "only comes to me what you said seemed to touch a chord like."

By this time we were outside the room, standing at the inner end of the hall, which was bundled with the lock of the door. Short passages ending in swing doors ran out right and left from this point, and through one of these a tidy, middle-aged woman, wearing an apron, suddenly emerged. At sight of me she looked greatly astonished. "I have been showing the gentleman the pictures," said my guide, who was still occupied with the door.

"Indeed!" said the woman, and looked me over with unmistakable suspicion. "I have been very much interested, madam," I said softly.

SUIT FOR DAMAGES

A suit for $1,500 damages is being tried before His Honor Judge Huycke in which Wm. White and Master Wesley White, his son, of Campbellford, are the plaintiffs, and Messrs. Thomas Sampson, J. Jordan and Wm. Jordan, also of Campbellford, are the defendants. It is the aftermath of an accident from explosives, which it is alleged Wesley White on May 17, 1914, while playing on the property of one of the defendants, found and set off, losing the main part of his right hand and receiving injuries to his face. The defendants, it is alleged, were responsible for the explosive in question being in the place the youngster found it.—Norwood Register.

Allege Plot to Burn City of Vancouver

Fires Started at Bridge Heads Mile Apart Do Heavy Damage

VANCOUVER, B.C., April 29.—Fires believed to be of incendiary origin and according to the theory held in police circles a plan of German sympathizers aiming to burn the city, were started early this morning during a high wind under the Connaught bridge at Cambie street and under the Granville bridge a mile away. The Connaught bridge was very badly damaged and one pier fell into False Creek, the wreckage carrying with it two firemen and an electric lineman, the latter being badly injured before he was rescued. Up to eight a.m. damage to the Connaught bridge was about three hundred thousand dollars. It was completed nearly two years ago and cost nearly eight hundred thousand dollars.

The alarm from the Connaught bridge was rung in at four-thirty this morning and within a few minutes the north half of the big steel structure was in flames, the pavement of wooden blocks packed in tar burning fiercely. While this fire was at its height a blaze was discovered under the pavement of the Granville bridge.

After this was extinguished the north end of the Connaught bridge fell into the Creek, leaving the centre burning fiercely and the firemen unable to reach it except from the south end. The last was so intense that the steel rails were bent and twisted. This bridge connected the main business part of the city with the residential section and there was therefore a general interruption of car service during the fire.

A general attack on the Dardanelles forts has been commenced. Gen. Atlack is likely to be a successful leader.

The Mother of Today.

Where was the mother of yesterday who understood her boy's game of football, who encouraged him in his athletics and who was as enthusiastic as he along these lines?

Where also could one find twenty years ago the woman who played tennis with her daughter, taught her to golf and swim as well as sew and accompanied her to dances, not as a stolid chaperon, but as one who enjoyed dancing too?

And yet this type of modern mother exists in hordes today. She is no curiosity, but a reality, who is gaining the companionship as well as the love of the children she has brought into the world. And who shall say that she has not made of motherhood a more humane, a more understanding profession than her dear old fashioned predecessors who rocked the cradle and darned socks?

The Child's Playroom.

There is much of imagination in the life of every child, and this should be fostered and guided for use in later life. If it is possible give up one room to the child, or, if not that, then a part of a room, an alcove or a corner of the room, so that it can be transformed into an interesting and educative spot for the child. It is not so much a question of size as it is of a distinctive place. If possible it should contain a cabinet for toys. A box into which a child at the end of its play dumps all of its toys fosters only a semblance of order.

A cabinet is attractive in itself to the child and each parent will remember the satisfaction of a cabinet of drawers of the old cupboards and cabinets, and if each toy has its place and the child is early trained to put its toys away in order a valuable asset is acquired for later years.

Music For Prisoners.

Music is to cheer the lives of the German war prisoners interned in the great camp at Handforth, Cheshire, England. The military band includes a number of able musicians, and a brass band is now being formed. Some are singers who appear in local concerts, choirs and, at concerts. Many of the prisoners are apparently musical, for they also very heartily whist at matches on the camp.—Chicago Daily.

Tired of the long winded oratory of the attorney for the defense, the judge interrupted him.

"Mr. Sharke," he said, "may I ask you a question?"

"Certainly, your honor. What is the question?"

"Language," said the judge, "we are told, is given to conceal thought or words to that effect. Inasmuch as you don't seem to have any thought to conceal, I would like to know why you are talking?"

Letter From France

Spring Weather is Making "Life Feel Worth Living" at the Front

Pte. Bingman of the 2nd Battalion, First Contingent, writes as follows to his mother, Mrs. S. H. Bingman, 172 East Bridge Street, Belleville:—

France, April 11th, 1915

Dear Mother:—I shall endeavor to write you a few lines again to-day, although I have not much news for you at present. We are still at our billets and all in splendid health.

To-morrow we are to be inspected by Smith Dorrien, the General of the 2nd Division Army Corps. On Friday last we were inspected by General Alderson. He highly complimented us on our appearance and drill.

I presume you are getting real spring weather by now. This is surely one glorious day; one of the best we have had, it makes life feel worth living.

We have a regular field kitchen with our battalion now, being a Red Cross motor car. Three young ladies are running it. I believe they are from the Thousand Islands. They serve coffee or cocoa, with biscuits in the morning; soup with bread at noon, and coffee and cocoa with biscuits at night. Of course those are extra for us, and I can assure you we sometimes feel like having a little change and a cup of coffee or cocoa with a biscuit is rather tasty.

Corporal Charlie Gibson is lying beside me writing home, and wishes me to give you his kindest regards.

Enclosed is a picture of our stretcher bearers. Will Styles and Jack Prince are ranked in same. You will also find an Easter card.

Riley Refuses To Come Back

SPRINGFIELD, Mo, April 29.—Thomas M. Riley of Everton, Mo., released from prison in Ontario, Canada, on a pardon, which Canadian officials maintain was intended for an April 1st return to the Dominion to serve the fourteen years remaining of a fifteen year sentence.

He made his flight from detention today to Rev. H. H. Bingham, who came here from Canada to plead with Riley to voluntarily return to prison.

The minister had aided in obtaining the pardon. Riley was convicted of killing a bartender. His friends contend his release was intentional and that the pardon read "T. M. Riley, of Everton, U.S.A." They have employed attorneys to fight any attempt to extradite him.

Moved by Mr. Robertson, seconded by Dr. McGie that the City Council be again requested to pass such necessary bylaw so that the Board of Health may be empowered to require citizens to connect their properties with regular sewers, where such sewers are available. This should be done at once so as to improve the sanitary conditions before the hot water.

Moved by Mr. Hughes, seconded by Mrs. S. Robertson, the Board of Health recommend to the City Council the advisability of declaring the week of May 7th to 14th, as clean-up week, and that the co-operation of the Women's Institute, the Citizen's Welfare League and all citizens be asked in carrying this out, so that the health and beauty of the city may be improved.

Blind and Dumb Through Gas Fumes

Canadians, Unconscious for Eight Hours Suffer Terrible—The Effect of the Poisonous Gas

LONDON, April 30.—A Canadian now under treatment at the base arrived eight hours after he had been caught and overcome by the fumes liberated by the Germans. He was still unconscious, but soon after being installed in the hospital revived under strenuous treatment. He was blind and for a time dumb. His blindness is apparently only temporary, purely functional and occasioned by shock, but odor symptoms, the direct results of gas, are very remarkable. His tongue is swollen to nearly double its normal size, blotched with black patches and badly ulcerated underneath. The membrane of the mouth and throat is excessively inflamed, the lungs attacked and very severe bronchitis has set up. His pulse is no more than a faint flutter, his temperature high and respiration labored and difficult.

When after an hour or two in the hospital he came to sufficiently to be able to say something of his experiences. He said that he was involved only in the extreme edge of the gas cloud. All of a sudden he found a greenish yellow vapor enveloping him. A couple of inhalations completely incapacitated him, his throat became constricted and the earth seemed to be spinning around him like a top. He was violently sick, his knees gave way, and he rolled over on his back, three-parts unconscious. He just managed to crawl feebly out of the poison zone, then remembered no more until he awoke in the hospital. When he was undressed it was found that his arms and legs had turned a mottled blue, or rather violet. This was due to inhalation of the fumes preventing proper oxydization of the blood.

Winnipeg, April 30.—A cablegram was received last night by-w. H. Ingraft, president of the Ingram Grain Company, from his son Captain Stuart Hargraft, of the 90th Winnipeg Rifles, announcing that he is ill in London. Captain Hargraft has not been wounded, but he has been placed hors de combat as a result of the poisonous gases used by the Germans.

Captain Hargraft has lived in Winnipeg for the past thirteen years. He is a graduate of McGill University, and also of the Royal Military College at Kingston, Ont.

WAR PURCHASES

Arrests Probable In Connection With Recent Revelations

OTTAWA, April 30.—A number of arrests, is probable as a result of the examination which has been made by the Justice Department of evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee in connection with war purchases. The evidence given before the committee was referred to the department by the House of Commons and has been carefully reviewed by officers of the department, assisted by outside counsel. The transactions regarding the sale of horses, field dressings and binoculars have been gone into, but it is understood that the binocular matter will be the first taken up and is now ready for action.

ALLIES' BIG VICTORY AT THE DARDANELLES

Sweep Turks Before Them and Occupy Several Towns—Australian and New Zealand Troops Have Baptism of Fire and Acquit Themselves Splendidly

LONDON, April 30.—(Special.)—The British War Office tonight made public an official communication concerning the operations of the allies against the Dardanelles:

"The disembarkation of the army in the Dardanelles began before sunrise on April 25. Six different beaches were used, and the operation was covered by the whole fleet.

"The landing was immediately successful on five beaches, although it was opposed with vigor by a strongly entrenched enemy in successive lines, which were protected by barbed wire entanglements, in some places fifty yards wide, and supported by artillery.

"On the sixth beach, near Seddel-Bahr, the troops could not advance until evening, when a fine attack by the British infantry from the direction of Cape Tekeh relieved the pressure on their front. The arrangements for landing had been concerted in the utmost detail between the fleet and the army.

"The result of the first day's operations was the establishment of strong British, Australasian and French forces at three points; namely, the Australian and New Zealand troops on the lower slopes of Sari Bair, to the north of Gaba Tepe; the British troops at Cape Tekeh, at Cape Helles and near Morto Bay, and a French force on the Asiatic shore at Kum Kale, after a gallant attack toward Yeni Shehr.

"During the afternoon of the 25th strong counter-attacks by the enemy were by hand fighting took place, which ended in disembarkation of the army proceeded and was continued by favored by good weather.

"At daybreak on the 26th the enemy was still holding the village and position of Seddel-Bahr, which was a labyrinth of caves, ruins, trenches, pits and entanglements. Aided by the gunfire of the fleet, the position was stormed by the British in frontal attack through undamaged wire entanglements. Seddel-Bahr was taken about 2 p.m., four pom-poms being captured. The situation at this end of the peninsula thus was definitely secured, and the disembarkation of French and British forces proceeded.

"On the morning of the 27th, after repulsing a Turkish attack upon their left towards Cape Helles, the allied forces attacked at 8 a.m. were established in an entrenched line running from a point about two miles north of Cape Tekeh to a small pits near above the Tutts Battery. From this line an advance since has been made to the neighborhood of Krithia.

"Meanwhile Australian and New Zealand troops at Sari Bair, who pushed on with the utmost boldness, after the landing on the 25th, had been engaged almost constantly with the enemy, who made strong repeated counter-attacks, which invariably were repulsed. The Australian and New Zealand troops fought with a fine spirit and determination.

"On the morning of the 27th a fresh Turkish division was launched against Sari Bair, preceded by a heavy artillery fire. A hot engagement followed. The enemy came on boldly time after time, but the Australian and New Zealand troops defeated their every attempt, and by 3 p.m. had resumed the offensive."

"The French troops at Kum Kaleh also were four times strongly counter-attacked on the 26th, but retained all their positions. Five hundred Turks, who in the course of one of these counter-attacks were cut off by the fire of the fleet, were made prisoners.

"The operation of the landing army in the face of modern weapons and in spite of wire entanglements, under sea as well as on the land, and of land mines and deep pits with spikes at the bottome, thus has been accomplished.

"The Admiral reports that the fleet is filled with intense admiration over the achievements of their military comrades.

"The casualties in the army necessarily have been heavy. The casualties in the fleet were not numerous. They appear to have been confined to torpedo-boat destroyers and to boats' crews engaged in landing operations, in which merchant captains and officers and crews of transports also have taken part.

"During the operations Turkish warships from Nagara (in the straits) several times have attempted to intervene, but have always made off directly the Queen Elizabeth was at hand.

"At noon on the 27th, however, a large part of about 4,600 tons was reported off Maidos, and before she could escape the Queen Elizabeth opened fire. The third shot hit and destroyed her. She sank rapidly, but whether she contained troops or not could not be seen.

"On the 28th and 29th the allied forces rested and improved and consolidated their positions and continued the disembarkation of stores and artillery. All counter-attacks by the enemy, which were incessant on the 28th, but weaker on the 29th, were repulsed.

"The fleet, as well as the supporting land forces began to engage those batteries. The Triumph bombarded Maidos, which was in flames last night, the 29th."

Mail Horse Ran Away

Broke up 21st Parade—Sent Bugle Bandsmen Scurrying—Driver Injured

KINGSTON, April 30.—A runaway horse that threatened to make a clean sweep of the 21st Battalion, that was drilling on the Cricket Field Tuesday morning, started on Union street west and dashed eastward along this thoroughfare barely missing the drum of the Bugle Band that were lying on the lawn in front of the Court House. The animal made the soldiers beat a hasty retreat. It dashed across the Cricket Field and many on the Division parade. Finally the animal came to grief when the mail delivery cart No. 1, to which it was attached struck forcibly against one of the large trees, carrying in the front of vehicle.

J. Hanson, the driver who was inside of it, was thrown heavily against the roof of the station and was stunned. The force of the collision against the tree dazed the horse and it was crabbed by the soldiers.

Mr. Hanson was taken from the vehicle and it was some time before he recovered. The horse was so badly battered that it had to be killed and it fell prostrate where it remained until the arrival of its owner, J. Hanson.

Another horse and waggon was secured to finish collecting the mail.

FIGHT IN HOME FOR GIRLS

Ten Magdaline Inmates Arrested After Wrecking Dining-Hall

NEW YORK, April 30.—A telephone call for help reached the West 100th Street Police Station last night from the Magdalene Home for Wayward Girls at 191st Street and Bolton Road Inwood, and Sergeant Parsons and the reserves hurried there in an automobile patrol wagon. They found that of the 172 girls in the... The dining room, where they were fighting, was almost a wreck. Windows had been broken and the entire glassware and crockery littered the floor.

The policemen had a hard time separating the combatants, but they succeeded at last and picked out ten girls who, Miss M. H. Conache, the Superintendent, said were ringleaders of the trouble. As soon as they were arrested the trouble subsided quickly and the other girls went quietly to their quarters.

Miss Conache said yesterday was Visiting Day at Superintendent, and she had expected a little trouble possibly, but nothing like what came. The girls were dissatisfied, apparently, with the change in Superintendents, for Mrs. Freedman, whom Miss Conachie succeeded, had promised them many small liberties, and Miss Conachie was much whispering among the girls at dinner time. Then the plates began to fly.

Miss Conachie said she and the attendants had exhausted their own efforts to get order before they resorted for the police. The ten girls she accused were taken to the station and locked up.

"Yesterday a German aeroplane was attacked in the air and fired at by our guns and was brought down at our lines east of Ypres.

"Successful mining operations have been carried out southwest of Wytschaete and in the neighborhood of Givenchy."

CALL TO BE MADE FOR FIFTH CONTINGENT

Canadian Losses at Langemark Have Given Great Impetus to Recruiting—Four Complete Army Divisions in the Field This Year

OTTAWA, May 1.—Special—The casualties to the Canadians have stimulated recruiting in Canada. Men all over the country are joining the colors in larger numbers than since the first enlistment after the war began. This is the reply of Canada. One hundred thousand men are now under arms. Soon there will be one hundred and fifty thousand. In the continuous rounds the end of last session, General Hughes intimated that 150,000 men would be sent if they were required. This force will be necessary. It is probable that before the end of the present year Canada will have four complete army divisions in the field according to the results of the fighting which has already occurred; these will require very large reinforcements so that the whole 150,000 men will be needed. A British army division, it is understood, is about 21,000 men.

A Fifth Contingent

There is a full Canadian division at the front. There are several thousand men still in England, who went with the first contingent, and these are being rushed to the front according to cables, which have been received. Canada has two more contingents ready and the fourth is being recruited. Soon the call will go forth from General Hughes for recruits for a fifth contingent.

Third Contingent to Supply Men

Notices Being Sent Out to Candidates on Waiting List

TORONTO, April 30.—According to the estimate of the military authorities, no less than 5,000 subjects will be included in the latest draft for reinforcements for the First Canadian Contingent. There are in Canada about twenty units which are officially known as "reserve battalions" and the call from the Militia Department has been issued to approximately 250 men from each of these active service regiments, making 5,000 in all.

Replacements in the reserve battalions are to be made from the militia units. In the case of the 35th Battalion, of Toronto, Lieut.-Col. F. C. McCuaig, is making arrangements to send out notices to candidates on the waiting list to fill up the gaps caused by the draft. The local militia units will, in turn, take on more recruits.

According to Lieut-Col. H. M. Elliott, A.A.G. for Military, there will be no concentration of the draft in Toronto, but the various details will probably report to an Eastern Canadian centre. The date of departure is not known, but it is very improbable, according to Col. Elliot, that these reinforcements will reach the firing line before the second contingent go into action.

No advantage of the permission of the Militia Department to allow members of the Canadian Mounted Rifles to join these reinforcements will be taken. Lieut-Col. Wm. Chadwick has decided to keep his unit intact for special operations which are to follow. It is understood that the battalions of the third contingent of the local division will supply all the men needed from this recruiting.

Germans Still Have Eye on French Coast Nearest England

The more shells fell on Dunkirk during the evening of yesterday (Friday) and there were several victims.

London newspapers say the bombardment of Dunkirk means that the Germans still cling to their cherished hope of occupying the French coast nearest England. Even then one editorial writer points out that Flanders still remains a cyclical theatre of operations.
